DIED.

HUFF.—Near Citrus, July 28, 1896, Mrs. Marie Hernandez de Huff, a native of Mexico, aged about 41 years.

R. Slack, of Modock, was a visitor in town Wednesday.

Henry Giles and Tom Webb came down from Long Valley yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Densmore went to Bishop Monday, returning Wednesday.

The weather changed last Sunday and is now delightfully cool; far more like September than July.

A. L. Conklin, wife and daughter, and Mrs. A. A. Neil, of Aberdeen, went to Onion valley yesterday for a couple of week's outing.

O. C. Harper and Clifford Baxter brought in sixty-five dollars yesterday, the result of a few days prospecting at Santa Rita.

Murphy, Grant & Co., enjoyed a few days outing in the hills this week. The "Co." of the firm consisting of Tom Gunn. Grant is the prince of anglers.

Dr. J. H. Johnson, of Los Angeles, arrived at Independence Tuesday morning. He went into the mountains west of town yesterday and expects to visit Mammoth later on.

Alexander McDonald, the son of Wm. McDonald of Bishop, died at the home of his sister, Mrs. Finley Bedford, in Mojave, a few days ago. He was about 19 years of age.

P. B. Taylor, of Los Angeles, has a force of men developing the Gold Hill mines in the Telescope mountains just over the summit from the old town of Panamint, in charge of Richard Decker. There is a great mineral belt there extending more than fifty miles north and south which is likely to hum when the summer heat subsides.

Some lightning-dispatcher at Mojave is an able-bodied prevaricator in the matter of mining reports. It is true that Frank Cole and others are arranging for a good healthy deal in mining properties at Pleasant Canyon, in the Telescope range, but it is not exactly "on" just yet. We understand, however, that Mr. Cole and partner have received $500 in part of a $5,000 sale.

Billy Boyd had a runaway and smash-up Tuesday. He was loading a mowing machine on a hay wagon when the team became frightened and ran. The machine was thrown off and completely wrecked. The team collided with a tree at Blair's drug store and smashed the wagon considerably, but it stopped their mad career. One hundred dollars will hardly cover the damage.

A party of gentlemen from Fresno were in town last week, as follows: Dr. C. Rowell, Prof. Chester H. Rowell, Elmer Boswell, Charles H. Walter, Geo. H. Monroe, Alfred North and Jacob Schaffer. They came through the mountains by way of Mineral King and Kern River, returning over the Kearsarge trail and Kings River. Dr. Rowell is the proprietor of the Fresno Republican and the others are prominent men of Fresno. They were enjoying themselves immensely and their report of the trip will induce many others to try it next year.

From Aberdeen.

Mr. W. B. Moore and family returned from Bishop Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Conklin are going to Onion valley this week.

Mr. Montague is again on his homestead.

Mr. Rawson's crew of hay makers have finished work on the Rawson ranch, and have moved to the Jones ranch in Fish Springs District.

Drowned.

A fatal accident occurred near town on Tuesday. Mrs. Huff and an old Mexican were out with a two horse farm wagon gathering brush. On their way home at dusk they had occason to cross Black Rock Slough. The crossing is made by cutting down the bank parallel with the stream to a level with the water and a ford. They were careless in driving down the bank and one side of the wagon was allowed to run on top the bank while the other was in the road and in consequence just as they reached the water the vehicle turned completely over and pinned the occupants beneath it. The woman was completely under water while the Mexican was all submerged but his head, and was fastened in such a manner that he could neither extricate himself or the woman. His cries brought Henry Huff, the woman's husband, to the scene, but she was dead when he got there. Huff obtained the assistance of some neighbors and succeeded in getting the wagon out of the stream and removed the body. The Mexican was not hurt. The dead woman was a well-known character about town, having lived in this vicinity for over twenty years. Coroner Woodin impaneled a jury on Wednesday and held an inquest, the following verdict being rendered:

We, the undersigned jurors summoned to appear before I. J. Woodin, Coroner of Inyo Co., Cal., on the 29th day of July, 1896, to inquire into the cause of the death of Marie Hernandez de Huff, having been duly sworn according to law, after hearing the testimony adduced, upon our oaths find the deceased was named Marie Hernandez de Huff, was a native of Mexico, aged about 41 years, that she came to her death on the 28th day of July, 1896, by drowning in Black Rock Slough. We find the same was accidental.

Postoffice Needed.

A recent letter from "Cub" Lee, who has for years been in charge of the Amargosa Borax Works near Resting Springs in this county, states that the Confidence mine and mill is still closed down and no no pay-day in sight till yet. The mining property—a very large ledge of high-grade gold ore—is situate in the Funeral or Amargosa range, with a big roller mill in the southern part of Death Valley. The plant is owned by a Salt Lake corporation headed by Cannon, Langford and others, who also own the noted Johnnie and Chispa mines at Montgomery, Nye county, Nevada. These properties are also idle, and it looks like the result of bad management. The proposed new postoffice at Resting Springs, to be called Amargosa, which was petitioned for by all Federal and county officers along the line and strongly recommended by all California Senators and Congressmen, has failed to materialize. Nevada has two postoffices over there—Pahrump and Manse, connecting with Daggett—only seven miles apart, but all of vast Southeastern Inyo has to get along with none. An extension of only thirty-three miles would place the great borax and mining interests of that region in communication with the world and the rest of this, the county in which they are situate and must do business with.

Good Roads.

County Clerk Hession has received the following communication:

DEAR SIR:—In accordance with the provisions of Chapter CCIII of the Statutes of 1895, I shall be in Independence on Tuesday, the 25th day of August, 1896, and on that date will hold a public meeting, under the provisions of the Act, for the discussion of public roads and matters pertaining thereto.

I would request that you make the necessary arrangements for the meeting, to be held either in the chambers of the Superior Court or in the rooms of the Board of Supervisors, the Surveyor, and the Auditor of your county, stating to them that the Bureau requests their attendance. You will please set the hour for the meeting to suit the convenience of the officials required to attend.

Kindly give these facts to the local press for publication, stating that all parties interested in road matters are requested to attend the meeting, and notify our office of the arrangements made by means of inclosed postal card.

Very respectfully yours,
MARSDEN MANSON,
Commissioner.

Leg Crushed.

M. Reddy met with a painful accident at the Defiance mine at Darwin early in the week. He was riding one horse and leading another when the animal he bestrode became frightened and dashed against some jagged rocks. Young Reddy's knee is badly crushed, the patella being splintered into several fragments. The injury is such that he will undoubtedly be crippled for life. His uncle, Hon. P. Reddy, wired Dr. Woodin to ascertain the extent of the injuries and the young man will in all probability go to San Francisco to-morrow. He is now at Lone Pine. The unfortunate young man has many friends here who hold him in the highest esteem, and deeply regret to learn of his accident.

Valuable Chickens.

John Keegan is breeding a valuable crop of chickens. He killed one the other day and in dressing it two pieces of gold, weighing about 50 cents, were found in its crop. There was quite an excitement about town for awhile and placer claims were staked out promiscuously. Diligent panning, however, failed to discover any more of the metal, and the query is, where did the chicken get it? "Colors" have been found several times in the dirt about town, notably when digging the cellar of the Norman House, but never in paying quantities.

Notes and Comments of Local Interest.

Is your name on the Great Register? If not, why not get it there.

The political pot has just commenced to boil in this section of Inyo.

The weather is charming around the lake at present as the hot weather has left us for a little while at least.

A Bryan club will be formed in Lone Pine this week and it is also rumored that one will be formed in Keeler and Darwin.

Clean up your back yards. There are some back yards in Keeler that are a disgrace to civilization.

If you want a number one Bryan lemonade with ice in it, don't fail to call and see Morton when you come to Keeler.

The contractors have received their utensils and supplies and will soon commence to lay the cement pavement on Keeler's main street.

Plenty of fruit and vegetables at the various stores and fruit stands around town. The people who use plenty of them have no doctors bills to pay.

A medicated bathing establishment is talked of for this city. A gentleman who has the means arrived here last week to start it up providing a suitable place can be secured.

It is reported there will be no session of the Superior Court for some months. Such being the case the lawyers can now have a good rest. They can stand it too, most all of them being men of wealth.

The Democrats will probably arrange to erect a stand for campaign speakers on the silver question in front of the postoffice this fall. If they do so the Republicans will undoubtedly put up another stand in front of Boland's grocery store.

W. M. Richards has resigned the Deputy County Clerkship at Keeler owing to other business. Some other good Bryan democrat should be appointed to fill the vacancy by County Clerk Hession, as a deputy at Keeler is a matter of national importance. Mr. Richards has been very accommodating and filled the position very creditably.

About 25 voters have registered from Keeler precinct this year.

Yours for 16 to 1,
SILVER BILL.

More Bullion.

Pat. Keyes came in from Beveridge last Friday bringing with him about $3000 worth of bullion—the result of his last clean-up. Mr. Keyes reports the mine as looking first-class. He will soon erect a mill within two miles of the mine, when he will be able to work the vast quantity of second-class ore he now has on the dump at a handsome profit. Wood is plentiful and near at hand, and there is a sufficiency of water for milling purposes. Mr. Keyes' mine is destined to become one of the greatest gold bullion producers in the county.

Only one more week in which to register. Saturday, Aug. 8th, will be the last day.

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends, expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

June 21, 1896.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

LONE PINE CANAL COMPANY.

Location of Principal place of business, Lone Pine, Inyo County, California. Location of works, near Lone Pine, Inyo County, California.

Notice is hereby given, that at a meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 25th day of April, 1896, an assessment, (No. 9,) of fifteen cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin to the Secretary, at the office of the company, Lone Pine, Inyo County, California. # Cancer Of the Breast.

Mr. A. H. Crausby, of 158 Kerr St., Memphis, Tenn., says that his wife paid no attention to a small lump which appeared in her breast, but it soon developed into a cancer of the worst type, and notwithstanding the treatment of the best physicians, it continued to spread and grow rapidly, eating two holes in her breast. The doctors soon pronounced her incurable. A celebrated New York specialist then treated her, but she continued to grow worse and when informed that both her aunt and grandmother had died from cancer he gave the case up as hopeless.

Someone then recommended S.S.S. and though little hope remained, she begun it, and an improvement was noticed. The cancer commenced to heal and when she had taken several bottles it disappeared entirely, and although several years have elapsed, not a sign of the disease has ever returned.

THE BOY HELPER WHO WAS TOO STRONG FOR THE BUSINESS.

A Talented Journeyman Who Had One Fault, Which Has Been Cured Recently by an Employer's Novel Plan—On His Guard Now Against "Ringers."

This is the story of the taming of the journeyman plumber. The journeyman plumber was the best of his kind in town, and was much sought after by boss plumbers. As one of them described his talents, "He can sling more material into a job in the greatest length of time than any man in the business." But the journeyman plumber was, with all his talents, a hard man to keep employed on account of his irascibility. His temper was shorter than a rabbit's tail, and he took out his indignation and his headaches and rows with his wife on his helpers.

A helper to a journeyman plumber is a youth who lays out tools, holds pipe, hands the journeyman his solder and his soldering iron, and who carries back and forth the journeyman's bag of tools and his furnace. He is a journeyman in embryo, and the first thing he learns is implicit obedience to his journeyman and not to be too swift. Plumbers call him "cub" and "kid."

This particular journeyman abused his helpers. When things went wrong he usually caught his helper by the ear and swatted him. The result was that the helpers returned to the shop and told the boss they lacked the talent for plumbing and quit. As a result the available helper timber was rapidly becoming exhausted.

The boss plumber did not wish to lose his journeyman, but he was almost at the end of his list of helpers. Consequently he thought. After much labor he produced an idea. He went down to a resort kept by a "professor." It was a dingy place, with a sloppy bar and fly specked mirror on one side and a row of barrels on the other. The walls were covered with boxing gloves and highly colored pictures of men in fighting attitudes. As the result of a conference between the boss plumber and the "professor," a stunted youth, very broad across the shoulders, was called up.

"I want a boy to learn the plumber's trade," said the boss plumber.

"Well, you'll have to guess again," said the stunted youth. "There ain't no money in it. Maybe four or five a week, eh? I can knock that out of the punchin bag in here, see?"

He meant that he could earn $5 a week teaching half baked sports to punch the bag.

"I'll give you $2.50 a day to see how you like the plumber's business," said the plumber.

"I'll go you," said the stunted youth.

The next morning the stunted youth appeared at the plumber's shop in overalls and a little round cap with a peak. He was told to go out with the journeyman plumber. Together they went to a big vacant building to set up an iron pipe. They were sent to the vacant building that there might be no family there to be shocked should anything occur. On the car the stunted youth endeavored to become acquainted with the journeyman, but the journeyman was sullen and the acquaintance stopped.

When the building was reached the journeyman said, "Scatter them tools." The tools were scattered about, so that when one was needed some little time was consumed in picking it out. The pipe was several inches in diameter, and the game was to pile one joint upon another and solder it there, and so to the top of the building. The pipes were heavy and four times as tall as the stunted youth. As a result, it was difficult for him to hold them up straight. At last the journeyman, who was on a ladder soldering, looked down and said:

"Gol darn you. If you don't hold that pipe up straight, I'll come down and bend your face!"

At this the stunted youth dropped the pipe and said: "All right. Come down and bend me face." The journeyman had never been talked to like this before, and he "came down."

When it was all over, the journeyman went home in a carriage with a man holding his head in his lap. The stunted youth walked back to the shop.

"Say," he said to the boss, "I'm too strong for the plumbin business. Guess I'll quit."

"Why, what's the matter?" asked the boss.

"Oh, that guy you sent me out wid started to bend me face. De doc's took him home in a hack. Say, his face is hard," and he rubbed his knuckles.

"All right," said the boss. "If you've got to quit, here's your $2.50, but I think you'd make a great plumber."

The next morning the journeyman plumber walked into the shop. He was a sight.

"Wot kind of a murderer was that you sent out with me yesterday?" he asked, out of the uncovered corner of his mouth. "Say, he beat me scandalous with a piece of lead pipe." And the boss laughed a loud, scornful laugh, for he knew that the journeyman had been tamed. And, sure enough, thereafter the journeyman treated his helpers as tenderly as sons, for he never knew when he might run against another "ringer."—Kansas City Star.

The Pulley Line Man.

An occupation that has sprung up with the growth of flats is that of the pulley line man. The pulley line man goes about with a coil of line over his arm, and he is ready to provide line or to put in order lines already up. Sometimes lines get jammed in the pulley blocks. He will clear them. Clothes left out over night may, if a high wind should arise, get all twisted up on the line. The pulley line man will free them. He has a route and appears regularly at certain houses on certain days. His coming may be counted upon, and he will do anything that needs to be done about pulley lines.—New York Sun.

The Attraction.

"Who is that little man talking to all those people crowding about him? He's been attracting no end of attention tonight."

"Why, haven't you heard of Jinkins, the great explorer, just returned from his expedition into the very heart of Bungaboo, where he had the most thrilling experiences?"

"Certainly. And you don't tell me that's Jinkins?"

"Oh, no! Jinkins isn't here. That's Firkins, who claims he used to go to the same school with Jinkins."—London Tit-Bits.

A SHY DANCER.

Stories Told by Westerners of the Antics of the Sand Hill Crane.

The sand hill crane is a very bright bird. A Recreation writer says that its very name is synonymous of vigilance and alertness. It feeds on the treeless plains or in the barren wheat stubble, where it can see a long way beyond gunshot, or one of a flock is posted as sentinel, and this bird stands with bill half open, ready to give an alarm. It can be killed by decoying it with pasteboard figures cut to proper size and shape and painted, but mounted birds are better. A pit is dug deep enough to conceal a man, the decoys are put out, and the cranes are shot as they come over. The best region to shoot them is in the Columbia river watershed and south of it in the Pacific coast states.

When one shoots a bird of the size and build of a crane in midair, it collapses, like a card house or a tent. But such apparent collapses are sometimes deceptive, as, for instance:

"Before I could reach him he soared off into the air with wheeling flight. Again he hit the ground with fearful violence, but again he got on his feet. Running up, thinking to get him alive for a decoy, I tried to tap him on the head and stun him. He showed fight, and I used my gun as I backed off, and he took to his wings."

The sand hill crane is something of a fighter of men if wounded, and the only safe crane is a dead one. Their bills are long and sharp and are capable of putting out a man's eye.

The sand hill crane has some curious habits that make him of more than passing interest to the student of birds. Out on the prairies parties of them have balls in the spring, to which the select birds seem to be invited. These balls are picturesque affairs from the human standpoint. There are curious dances, which are sort of solitary waltzes or pretty slow jigs. Sometimes the birds leap over one another's backs and flap their wings, giving their peculiar cry. Sometimes rival birds have fierce duels, using their keen bills like lances, battleaxes and swords.

Lady Blessington.

"The most gorgeous Lady Blessington," as she was christened by her very old admirer, Dr. Parr, has long since passed into the regions of oblivion for the general world. As an authoress she never succeeded in making any mark, though she worked at the business as hard as any of her successors of the present day. Her novels were many and fashionable, Mrs. Gore like in their method and filled with strange and wandering scraps of French. She edited books of beauty for fancy clients and at fancy prices, and when The News was first started under the editorship of Charles Dickens she was offered an engagement as a purveyor of fashionable intelligence and asked £800 a year for it. She was offered either £400 as a certainty, or £250 for six months on approval, and confidently chose the latter, with the melancholy result at the end of the term—Dickens having in the meantime retired from his uncongenial work, and John Forster having accepted his post ad interim—she was informed that her services were no longer wanted.

She fought for her hand hard enough in later days, poor lady, after years of "Arabian Nights" luxury with her magnificent husband, but we fear that her position in the literary world was not at any time one of solid security. Privately she lived under a cloud from the scandal which always connected her name with Count d'Orsay, and, we suppose, not without reason. At all events, they never appear to have taken any steps to defend themselves against the charges of papers like The Age, which anticipated a similar class of journals that sprang up in our own day, and rather suffered judgment by default.—London Spectater.

Magnetized Corset Steels.

"Every day something new is found about electricity and its effects," said Mr. Fay of the Southern Pacific. "Do you know that nine-tenths of the umbrellas that men carry nowadays are magnetized? Well, they are, and all that is necessary to prove this is to apply the point of your knife or, better still, a small pen point against the steel rib. The attraction is very perceptible, and it is caused by the carrying of the article inside of the electric cars. The umbrella is rested upon the floor near the motors, and the proximity of the metal causes a certain quantity of the fluid to find a permanent lodgment in the ribs.

"Carrying out the idea, it is very likely that the corset steels of the ladies are similarly affected. Think what the consequences would be if a young man with steel cuff buttons should hug a girl with magnetized corset steels!"—New Orleans Times Democrat.

Vegetable Properties.

It may be well to mention that an eminent physician who has been investigating the properties of the different vegetables announces that a diet of carrots ameliorates harshness of character and reduces nervous irritability. Peas create fatty tissue and encourage joyousness, while turnips have just the opposite effect. Celery taken in excess causes eye trouble, while cabbage is beneficial in pulmonary ailments, and lettuce aids as a sedative owing to the opium contained in its milky juice, which keeps the skin clear and fresh. Red beets are blood producing and will add plumpness to the thinnest form, providing they are boiled tender.—New York Journal.

Liberty, Equality and Fraternity.

Liberty is of no value in itself, but is valuable only as a means to equality, and equality that did not eventuate in fraternity would perish. Equality will enlarge itself to the bonds of humanity as fast as people learn that in likeness there is the only rest and comfort and pleasure that men can know, and fraternity will come as a result of the same conviction.—W. D. Howells in Century.

Hard Lines.

Husband—Here they have brought me an account for a ball costume. How is that?

Wife—Oh! Don't you remember? It is for the green dress I wore last year at the ball where we first met.

Husband—S-o-o-o? And now I am expected to pay for the net with which I was caught.—L'Annunziatore.

The first paper made in western Europe was manufactured in Spain in 711. It is said that the process came from the east, being brought into Spain by the Moors.

BLANDINA.

Blandina's nice; Blandina's fat,
Joyous and sane and sound and sweet,
And handsome, too, and all else that
In persons of her years is meet.
Behold Blandina!
She's alive and testifies
With all the emphasis that lies
In busy hands and dancing eyes
That life's a prize—
That all the mischief that provokes
Doubt in the matter lies in folks,
And that, provided folks are fit,
Life's not a failure; not a bit.

Blandina loves a picture book,
Blandina dearly loves a boy.
She loves her dinner, loves the cook,
Her nurse, her doll, her brother's toy,
And best of all she loves a joke,
And laughs at it.
And laughing at it testifies
With all the emphasis that lies
In joyous tones and beaming eyes,
That life's a prize—
That all the mischief that provokes
Doubt in the matter lies in folks,
And that, provided folks are fit,
Life's not a failure; not a bit.

—Edward S. Martin in Scribner's.

EARLY RISERS.

They Are Often Neither Healthy, Wealthy Nor Wise.

The lazy young persons who enjoy the extra snooze in the morning hours that all too frequently they have great difficulty in securing will probably rise up and call us blessed when we announce that their preference shows a rare discretion backed up by some sound professional wisdom. Getting up early in the morning is to be commended as a necessity rather than a benefit. Physicians and scientists agree that sleep in the morning is healthful and restorative, and that children and nervous or delicate persons should never be wakened until sleep leaves them of its own accord.

This is all right and as it should be, but the necessity exists for early rising, and, therefore, must be met. Unpleasant as it is, there is no alternative for the great masses of the people. If one would prosper in business or any occupation whatever, it is necessary to be on hand betimes in the morning. Why not, then, simply treat it as an imperative duty and stop fussing over it as making people healthy, wealthy and wise? There are constitutions and temperaments that are never at their best when deprived of a morning sleep. Robust and energetic people are fond of stirring up whole families with early rising ideas. They experience no inconvenience and take it as a matter of course that no one else should.

Early rising is well enough provided one can rest at some other portion of the day, but the hours of darkness were made for sleep, and as time for the most part is pretty evenly divided into day and night it shows that nature knew quite well what she was about when she arranged things. People have lived, flourished and grown healthy, wealthy and wise who got up at noon and went to bed just before daylight, but this is by no means natural, nor is it approved by those who have made the subject of life and health a profound study.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Photography and Ducks.

One of the most remarkable accusations brought against the new photography is that of an American Field writer, who says: "I think photography has done a great deal to decrease the supply of ducks, which," he very properly adds, "will be news, no doubt," to many of his readers. Sportsmen have been saying that nothing but general adoption of cameras instead of firearms will save the game, and now to run up against such a statement as that is, to say the least, astonishing.

It appears that for the purpose of perfecting the picture albumen must be used, and this can be procured only from eggs. Chicken eggs are too valuable as food; therefore the Hebrides islands of Scotland, Lodofoden of Norway, Labrador, Greenland, South America, and in fact every conceivable breeding ground of wild birds is robbed of eggs by natives or men from extensive sailing expeditions. This is especially hard on the ducks of various kinds, particularly in Labrador, where they breed in thousands of nests to the square mile, while the scavenger birds of the sea, the various gulls and terns, suffer from these depredations. The birds cannot stand this drain long, and the question arises, What will happen when all the eggs are gone?

Asphalt.

Another kind of asphalt beton has been introduced in Austria under government direction, a principal recommendation being the quickness of hardening which characterizes it. It is described as an earthly brown powder having a slight odor of tar, and consists mainly of sulphur and iron slag, analysis showing 33.53 per cent of sulphur, 8.21 of tar, 57.83 of iron slag and 0.43 water, the iron slag containing 43.01 per cent of silica, 22.42 of ferrous oxide, 30.9 of alumina and 4.16 of lime. The hardness is attributed chiefly to the formation of an iron sulphide, the tar acting as a reducing agent. The silica, clay and lime, though possibly combining at a slower rate, are regarded simply as impurities.

Hard Work.

White—What is the matter with Greene? I saw him just now, and he looks pretty bad.

Gray—Yes, poor fellow, he is suffering from overwork.

White—I wasn't aware that he ever did any work.

Gray—That's where you make a mistake. He was on the train the other day, and he tried to open three different car windows for as many different ladies.—Boston Transcript.

MAYOR OF ST. CHARLES.

One of the Thousands Whom Paine's Celery Compound Has Cured.

The following long and explicit letter from Hon. A. A. Bennett, tells its own story.

Read it:

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
City of St. Charles Ill., March 4, 1896.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.:

Gentlemen—I take much pleasure in being able to add my mite to the great mass of testimony in praise of Paine's celery compound.

In November last I found myself much run down by overwork. For several weeks I had been obliged to work 18 hours daily out of the 24, and was in consequence in a state of physical and nervous exhaustion. At the suggestion of a friend I commenced the use of Paine's celery compound, with the result that my strength has steadily improved, and I find myself in far better health than I have known for years.

I believe also that it has enabled me to escape my periodical attack of rheumatism, as every season since that time with the advent of the cold, damp weather, I have suffered severely from that disease in a chronic form. So far this winter I have escaped without a single twinge of my old enemy. I very cheerfully recommend it to any one in similar need, in the full belief that it will be helpful in every case.

Very sincerely yours, A. A. BENNETT.

If we all led out-of-door lives, went to bed at sundown, and had no consuming cares nor hard work to bring down the health, there might not be the urgent necessity that now exists for taking this best of spring remedies—Paine's celery compound.

But as the great majority of lives are ordered—with too much work, too much anxiety, too little sleep, by the time winter is over the drain on the nervous energy has become excessive, the nerves are in sad need of being strengthened, and the blood of being purified.

Paine's celery compound absolutely meets this great modern necessity.

Paine's celery compound will bring back nerve strength and replace poor, thin, pale blood with a ruddy, health-making stream.

It is the one great practical remedy advocated by all physicians.

It drives away that feeling of utter exhaustion that is so common in the spring, but no less dangerously significant because it is so common. It makes people well. It is a thousand times superior to all the ordinary sarsaparilias, nervines and tonics ever made.

Paine's celery compound is the one real spring remedy known today that never fails to benefit. Get Paine's celery compound, and only Paine's celery compound if you wish to be well.

HOME COMING.

Set o' sun and toil is done,
Grind, oh, wheels, while others tread!
Homeward thro' the night I run
To the heaven just ahead.

Light o' love, light o' love,
Other refuge I have none,
Thou the worth of life must prove
While the fight is yet unwon.

Scant the fare that love may share,
Pale the lips that love may press,
Stern the burdens love must share,
Fierce the wrongs that wait redress.

Heart o' life, heart o' life,
Manna in the wilderness
We should perish in the strife
But for love's strong tenderness.

Speed the day when we may say,
Justice reigns and men are free;
Peace shall kiss us in the way,
Labor crown us plenteously.

Love is all! Love is all!
Sound the word from sea to sea,
Hand to hand we stand or fall,
Ho, for love and liberty!

TRAGEDY OF A MINE.

From the shoulder of Baldy, where the mine was, you could see far out to westward where the Pacific rolled in a blue sheet, which was the undulating reflection of the heavens above. If you were on Baldy you would say that there could be nothing more sublime in the world than the ocean, and if you were out at sea you would be firm in the faith that no more magnificent thing could exist than the great sentinel mountain.

Young Bradshaw was just from college when his father sent him up to the mine as a sort of general manager to serve through the late summer and the coming winter. The water supply showed plain indications of early exhaustion, and so the fifty or more men who had been employed in bombarding the gravel with a six-inch stream, were called down to Los Angeles and paid up and discharged. The exodus was general. Even Yardley, the most respected and most efficient deputy sheriff who had ever hired to a mine company, in order that peace might be preserved in an official way, went with the others. Only Young Bradshaw and Burleigh were left to tenant the cabins and watch the pipe. It was eighty miles to Los Angeles in a horizontal line and nearly two more miles straight down toward the center of the earth. The mountain was wild and majestic and inaccessible and when the men went away that meant solitary confinement. In the building of the pipe line 3,000 tons of iron and steel had been dragged and maneuvered up a shoulder for many tortuous miles, every pound representing human effort, as even a burro could not go into that labyrinth set on end. As Bradshaw's father, the president of the mining company, had said in the beginning, "It took something that could swear and yell and get out of the way quickly to get that piping in place."

Burleigh was a man of 30, a giant in stature, with the magnificent health which demands association with healthy things. He was not born to the mines as was Henky Pete, who could spend days in solitude, speaking no word to any one. Henky Pete was ordinarily the man who was left over winter, when the snow piled and the cabin for six months was filled with the smoke which could not go up and which, therefore, was absorbed by his person, making him resemble in the spring a cured ham. But this time Henky Pete was taken to Los Angeles with the others and turned loose. Burleigh, a man of reasonably intelligent parts, was preferred by young Bradshaw as a companion, for the latter thought an intelligent and well-demeanored mine-mate would be preferable to the stupid Russian. There could be some sort of intercourse between them.

It was July when the men had gone to Los Angeles, and by the middle of September Young Bradshaw had finished Strabo and had got well on the way of translating him backward. He had by this time read every newspaper which had before been pasted to the wall of the cook-cabin, and had one by one washed the journals off with warm water so as to see what was printed on the other side. He had started a diary and had returned to it fifty times, only to find that he could possibly record nothing more than "Monday—both well. Cloudy below." He and Burleigh had wandered up and down the sub-pipe line to the reservoir, until the familiar rocks had grown unbearable in their familiarity. Sometimes they turned on water and washed for a few hours, and tried in this hydraulic search for gold to distract thoughts from the frightful lonesomeness of close mountain and distant sea. Burleigh found the solitude harder to bear than the boy from the college, for the boy really found odd little things to take up minute sections at least of his boyish mind. Burleigh, a man of experiences, could not do this. He grew morose and fretful and cooked villainously. Both had dyspepsia by the last of August.

Toward the middle of September young Bradshaw came in from a patrol of the pipe line and found that Burleigh had cooked for ten instead of two. The plates were set, also, for ten.

"What's this for?" the boy cried with abounding delight. "Are there some tourists in camp?"

Burleigh looked ferociously about. "No!" he snarled. "Who comes into this hell of loneliness? No. But I am going to have company. I have cooked for Harkins and Frye and Jaquith and half a dozen of the best of the men who were here, and if they are not on hand to eat it's no fault of mine. I shall imagine they are in the mine anyway, and in that way perhaps I can get comfort. Here, Gordon," addressing the space which was fronted by the tin dish at his left, "here, have some bacon," and he set a dripping slice of meat upon the plate. And throughout the meal he talked as though the former workmen were present once more.

"Did the second blast catch you, Baker?" he inquired of the plate opposite young Bradshaw. "I thought one of those chunks had your left leg sure. You want to find your hole a little sooner or we'll have to hustle for bandages."

Every day after that Burleigh set those plates and fed those ghosts with serious attention. Bradshaw, though a thoughtless and unwitting boy, saw by this time that this business meant something more than he had at first counted it, which was a joke. Once he had railed at Burleigh for apologizing to Yardley for the burned condition of the bacon and Burleigh had turned on him with a look in his face which he did not relish and had asked him what he meant by saying Yardley was only a three-legged camp stool.

"Yardley," said Burleigh, "was and is the penal officer of this camp; the man who maintained peace, the justice, the chief of police and everything which induced decency. If he isn't entitled to good bacon, who is?"

It was the next morning that Bradshaw was awakened by the sound of profanity. Although he was asleep he knew it was profanity, for Burleigh's kind of lurid discourse could not be mistaken even when it came to you in dreams. Young Bradshaw woke with a start and found Burleigh standing over him with a knife, the hand that held it being poised to strike. Just then the October sunlight same out over Baldy and into the slit above Bradshaw's bunk and Burleigh drew back.

"I thought you were that thief Horton," he remarked. "I shall kill him unless Yardley acts quicker than me. Yardley is the only man who can keep that villain's life in his body. If Jim Yardley comes to me and tells me in the name of the people of California that I must desist, why, Jim Yardley represents the law and that's all there is to it." And mumbling, Burleigh withdrew his giant form from the cabin.

Young Bradshaw went to the door and looked out. The cloud above told its story. The early snow was coming. There was no use attempting to get out of the mine property. In three hours every pass would be choked and no man having ventured out could hope to do more than die. It was an insane giant—a man crazed from loneliness—behind, and certain death in the snow before. Over by the place where the old bedrock was washed bare he could hear Burleigh shouting for Horton to come out and fight before Yardley had a chance to arrest them and spoil the thing.

When you feel that one way or the other death is at hand you either collapse or become a hero. There is no middle ground. The decision has to be formed quickly. Young Bradshaw saw one chance in a million of escaping ultimate destruction at the hands of the maniac. It was certain that his hatred for Horton could and would easily be switched in the six months yet before them to a hatred of Bradshaw, if in fact the lunatic would even continue to recognize him as Bradshaw at all. There was the danger. Suppose in the absence of Horton or anything representing him Burleigh should conclude that the slight yonug collegian was the real, the true Horton of his vengeful dreams.

Young Bradshaw went over to the edge of the wash, and, looking down into the cave, called loudly:

"Burleigh, you infernal fool! You black-hearted hound! Come up here, d—n you!"

Out from behind an enormous bowlder leaped the insane miner, that horrible knife in his hand and the fire of fury in his eye.

"Who's that said that?" he shrieked. "Who is it, for by the Lord he wants to pray now!"

Straight as a pillar towered the spare form of the boy at the edge of the wash.

"Who, you cursed blowhard? Who, you red-faced cur? Who? Why, Jim Yardley! Who do you suppose it is but Jim Yardley? What do you mean by roaring around here disturbing every man in the mine at his work? Come here and give me that knife and then come along to the court-cabin where you belong, you white-livered jailbird."

"Jim Yardley, you're the only man on earth that dares talk that way to me. You know it, too, and you rub it in. Say, Jim," with a sudden change to the whimper of a beaten dog, "you'll let me out pretty soon, won't you?"

"I'll let you out when the snows go away if you behave yourself. See, it's beginning to fall now."

"Yes, and I'm good for six months of it."

When young Bradshaw's father and the Vice President of the mine with a party reached the shoulder of Baldy in the early April of the next spring they battled through drifts to find a slight youth with white hair waiting, waiting, waiting. Over in the court-cabin, with its great iron bars and its massive door, stalking up and down before the one window, was a giant with living fire in his eyes, who continually yelled: "Yardley! Yardley! Oh, Jim, please, ain't time pretty near up!"

In afterward telling of the horror of that winter young Bradshaw used to say that in future when he wanted to live in a lonely place he would leave all healthy and intelligent men behind and associate himself solely with some such obtuse and unimaginative clod as Henky Pete.—Chicago Record.

THINGS PERTAINING TO THE FARM AND HOME.

Potash Should Be a Heavy Ingredient in Fertilizers for Strawberries—How a Farmer Can Establish Credit—A Cure for Hog Cholera.

Fertilizers for Strawberries.

A strawberry crop removes certain materials from the soil which must be replaced if we wish to keep it in good condition. According to chemical analysis, given in the Massachusetts Ploughman, the fruit and strawberry plant both contain a large percentage of potash, and it is evident, and experience has proved such to be a fact, that potash should be a heavy ingredient in all fertilizing compounds for the strawberry crop. A good formula that has given excellent results is:

300 to 500 pounds muriate of potash.
600 to 800 pounds dissolved bone.
200 to 500 pounds nitrate of soda.

Half of this is applied broadcast before the crop is planted, half the remainder in the fall and the balance early in the spring.

The strawbery growers of Oswego County, New York, where berries are grown on a large scale for market, use from 800 to 1,200 pounds of commercial fertilizer of good quality, containing about 10 per cent. nitrogen and 8 per cent. phosphoric acid. The best time to apply such fertilizers is in the fall, as top dressing. Some care should be taken that the caustic properties of the fertilizer do not injure the plant. It is good practices, also, to sprinkle a few handfuls of kainit in rows at planting, as this product destroys grubs and acts as a preventive of blight.

The Best Example.

Did you ever stop to think that the farmer who grumbles most is usually the least successful? Why is it that out of 100 farmers who have the same start in life, some are successful financially and every other way, some are successful in only one or two ways, and some don't get along at all? They all have lived under the same circumstances, the same laws, politics, tariffs, monetary standards, etc. The answer is found in the individual. The level-headed, industious man is sure to get his farm paid for, to acquire a bit of competence, to raise and enducate a happy family—that's the example to follow, instead of emulating the glib-tongued individual who rides around in a top buggy to harangue the people on their hard lot while his family are forsaken, his crops neglected and the interest on his mortgage the only thing that keeps constantly at work on his farm.

Cure of Hog Cholera.

Arsenic, one-half pound; cape aloes, one-half pound; blue vitriol, one-fourth pound; black antimony, one ounce. Grind and mix the remedy well before using, advises the Iowa Homestead. The following are the directions for using: Sick hogs in all cases to be separated from the well ones, and placed in dry pens, with only five large hogs or eight small ones in each pen. Feed nothing but dry food, but no water, only the slop containing the remedy, until cured. When the hogs refuse to eat, turn them on their backs, and then, with a long-handled spoon, put the dry medicine down their throats. Dose for large hog: One teaspoonful three times a day for three days; then miss one day, and repeat amount until cured. Shoats or pigs, one-half the amount. As a preventive, one teaspoonful once a week will keep your hogs in a healthy condition to take on fat.

The Best Use of Bran.

Bran is much more highly thought of as feed than it used to be. But it has its limitations, and should not be relied upon entirely when fed alone. It is an excellent feed to give to animals that have a surfeit of corn, and should always form a part of the ration of fattening sheep. It is not so good for hogs, as its course texture makes it unpalatable. But fine wheat middlings have all of the excellencies of bran, and will be eaten in greater quantities by fattening hogs. The bran and wheat middlings furnish a greater proportion of albuminoids than corn has, and therefore supplement its deficiencies. Wheat bran is an excellent alterative for horses fed on timothy hay in winter. It will keep their digestion good and will be all the better if a tablespoonful of old process oil meal is added to each mess. Wheat middlings are not so laxative as bran, and are better therefore for horses that have to work hard, though both the bran and middlings contain much of the nutriment that builds up bone and muscle and increases strength.

Barn Cisterns.

One of the advantages of the basement barn is that it makes easy the construction of a cistern to take the water from its roof and place it convenient for stock stabled in it. It is never best to trust to wells for watering stock. A well near a stable or barn soon becomes foul by filtration of water through soil saturated with manure. A barn large enough to hold hay and other provender for a large stock will furnish water from the rain that falls on its roof for all the stock that can be fed from it. There should always be a filter in the faucet to the cistern. Some precautions must also be taken to prevent the cistern from becoming dirty. Whenever threshing is done the barn roof and the eave troughs are apt to be filled with dust. The eave troughs should be cleaned at such times, and the water from the first rain after threshing allowed to run to the ground before being diverted to the cistern. With such precautions the barn cistern will keep pure water for a long time without need of being cleaned. If the basement is a deep one, the water in the cistern will never freeze over in winter, but will help to keep frost out of the basement. It is a great convenience in very cold weather to water cows in the basement without exposing them to the cold air outside.

Milking Time.

Cows, to make the most of their opportunities, need to be milked in quiet, says the Practical Farmer, and a larger part of the hot months some sort of a soiling crop must be fed to obtain the best results, which means prolonging the milk flow, and nowhere can this be so well done and each cow receive her due proportion, as in the stable. It has been a matter of observation with us, that a cow soon comes to have a home place in the stable, and to be tied there twice a day, and have some provender, grain or forage on her arrival, gives her a matter to look forward to and even long for, and in the afternoon the cows have a home longing and start for the "bars," and getting up the cows with boy, horse and dog is an obsolete custom on such a farm. In this summer care of the cows, their comfort should be looked after in the lot, seeing that there is plenty of good water and shade of some kind.

Subsoiling for Corn.

It is generally agreed among farmers that shallow plowing is best for corn. This is all right so far as keeping the vegetable matter near the surface, where it will make the most warmth for corn. But it is none the less advisable in a dry time to have the soil deeply pulverized, not for the corn roots to reach down for moisture, but that it may arise by capillary attraction to the upper strata, where the roots are most abundant. Subsoiling will do this better than anything else. The best time to do subsoiling is in the fall. There is then time for the lower strata to fill with water during winter and spring. We can never know in advance when drouth will injure corn. Many fields would have yielded this year much larger crops of corn if the land had been subsoiled the year before.

Variety of Food Necessary.

In most of the discussions about what kinds of food are best, the fact is overlooked that no one food gives all the nutritive elements in their proper combination for best results. A variety of food is needed, not merely to tempt appetite, but to keep animals in the best health. This is especially important for animals that are being fattened and thus encouraged to eat all they can. It is scarcely less so for animals that are growing, and which need in some kind of their feed the elements that make bone and muscle rather than fat. Corn, which is the staple grain feed with most farmers, is least adapted of all for a single ration.

Milk and Butter.

The following advice is given by the Massachusetts Ploughman:

Milk regularly.

Keep the cows quiet and comfortable.

Bitter butter is a result of over-ripe cream.

It is the good cows that make money for their owner. The poor ones are kept for fun, evidently.

The cow that holds out well ten or eleven months in the year is the kind to keep.

Like a factory, a cow pays best when run to full capacity. That means high feeding.

To make the best cow out of the growing heifer, it is important during growth that her feeding and care should be such as will secure the best development.

How to Train Honeysuckle.

If a honeysuckle be entirely cut down it will make enormous growth in consequence, says the Philadelphia Ledger, but the flowering wood will be absent, and there will not be near the quantity of flowers that there would have been.

Odds and Ends.

A filling for layer cake may be made from figs. Chop a cupful of figs fine and add to them a half cupful of sugar and the same of water, and cook until it thickens like jelly. When cold place between the layers of the cake.

Lace curtains should never be ironed. Wash and starch them, using in the rinsing water a tablespoon of powdered borax. Spread a sheet on the floor and fasten it; pin the curtains to it every two or three inches and let them remain until dry.

When the canton flannel or felt undercloth for the table is too long it can be put out of the way by fastening it up to the table by means of small loops, one at each corner of the cloth, which are caught onto hooks placed at proper distances on the under side of the table.

There is no better way of cooking meat which is tough than by braising. The meat should be shut in a closely covered pot with a few pieces of salt pork laid under it. A mixture of vegetables cut into dice should be added; also a little soup stock and a bouquet of herbs. Then it should all be cooked slowly in the confined steam.

It seems useless to point out the danger of quenching thirst from the public drinking cup on cars, steamers and places of amusement. It is certainly a revolting habit, but it is also a highly perilous one, and a folding drinking cup that may easily slip into the bag or pocket is a belonging that every non-stay-at-home should possess.

Everyone has been annoyed at some time with the bristles of the ordinary tooth-brush falling out in the mouth while one is cleansing the teeth. This may be remedied if care is taken when purchasing a new brush. It should be at once set, brush end down, in a cup of water, and left there for an hour—not more time than that, but as much. After this there will be very little bother from this cause.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A DEPARTMENT FOR LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

The Way Girls Do.

Harry—Has Mabel's engagement been announced yet?

Ethel—No; but she blushes furiously every time his name is mentioned, and says she just hates him.

He Knew.

A class of boys in a boarding school were being examined in Scripture.

"What can you tell me about Moses?" asked the inspector; "what sort of man was he?"

"Please, sir, he was a gentleman," piped forth a pale-faced, bright-eyed lad of 11 or thereabout.

"Gentleman!" repeated the inspector, with a look of surprise, "what do you mean?"

The little boy promptly replied:

"Please, sir, when the daughters of Jethro went to the well to draw water, the shepherds came and drove them away, and Moses helped the daughters of Jethro, and said to the shepherds, 'Ladies first, please, gentlemen.'"

Worth Trying.

A cork that is longer than it is broad floats upon its stomach, so to speak; how can we make it float upon its head? Place one end upon a table and around it place six others. Seize them all together and plunge them under water so as to moisten them completely. Then remove your hand and let them take their own position in the water, when you will find that they will stand upright, as if supporting one another. This is because the water penetrates the corks by capilarity and makes them cling together.—Philadelphia Times.

The Rock-a-By Lady.

The Rock-a-by Lady from Hushaby street
Comes stealing, comes creeping;
The poppies they hang from her head to her feet,
And each has a dream that is tiny and fleet—
She brings her poppies to you, my sweet,
When she findeth you sleeping!

There is one little dream of a beautiful drum—
"Rub-a-dub!" it goeth;
There is one little dream of a big sugar-plum,
And, lo! thick and fast the other dreams come
Of popguns that bang and tin tops that hum,
And a trumpet that bloweth!

And dollies peep out of those wee little dreams
With laughter and singing;
And boats go a-floating on silvery streams,
And the stars peek-a-boo with their own misty gleams,
And up, up and up, where the Mother Moon beams,
The fairies go winging!

Would you dream all these dreams that are tiny and fleet
They'll come to you sleeping;
So shut the two eyes that are weary, my sweet,
For the Rock-a-by Lady from Hushaby street,
With poppies that hang from her head to her feet,
Comes stealing; comes creeping.
—Eugene Field, in Chicago Record.

About Toy Balloons.

Almost every child has endeavored at some time to fill a toy balloon, which had been purchased on the street for them, by holding it over the gas jet; but the balloon, to the childish astonishment, has refused to fill. This is because there is not sufficient pressure. One way of accomplishing this is as follows: The gas, either illuminating or hydrogen, is allowed to fill a bottle, through the cork of which three tubes are inserted, two short ones and a long one; the short tubes connecting with the gas pipe and with the rubber ball which is to be filled, while the water jet is connected with the third tube, reaching almost to the bottom of the bottle.

With this bottle the filling becomes easy enough. After the gas has filled the bottle it is turned off, and the water opposite is turned on; the water in the bottle rises, forcing the gas, which has no other way out, through the short tube into the balloon; when sufficiently filled it is tied with a string, taking from the connecting tube, and allowed to float toward the ceiling, where these balloons are stored until wanted for commercial purposes.

Compassion.

Among the stories which were told by certain aged physicians, at a reunion of medical men, of the times when surgical operations were conducted without anaesthetics, none were more touching than the following:

A little girl, not more than eight years old, was injured in such a way that it was necessary to amputate one of her legs. She proved to be of wonderful pluck; and instead of binding her, as was customary in such cases, she was given her most cherished doll to hold. Pressing it in her arms, she submitted to the amputation without a single cry.

When it was done the physician in charge, seeking to brighten matters up with a pleasantry, said:

"And now, my dear, we will amputate your doll's leg."

Then the little girl burst into tears.

"No! no!" she gasped, between her sobs, "you shall not—it would hurt her too much!"

He Had Queer Ideas.

Don't you wonder how any boy could have such queer ideas as this little fellow had? He's not a little chap now, but a big fellow, and he laughs when he tells of his childish fancies. He used to think that the sky was fastened to the tops of the highest houses, and he thought the moon was a hole for God to look through to see if little boys and girls were good.

One summer, in the country, he tried to catch a darning needle, because he thought his mamma could use it to mend his stockings with. But, funniest of all, when he first heard that the world is round he somehow got the idea that we all lived on the inside, and for a long time he used to awake at nights thinking how, when he grew up, he would cut his way through to the outside and see what it looked like.

Mustn't he have been disappointed when he found that we are all outside now? Maybe he made up his mind then to go to the center of the earth, like the people Jules Verne tells about in his book.—New York Recorder.

Goethe's Cottage.

Gothe's philosophy, which was far from being a selfish one at base, was accompanied by a singular egotism on the part of the philosopher himself. Many incidents in his career indicate that it was his conviction that his own well-being, no doubt for the sake of his mission in the world, should be considered even at the expense of the happiness of others.

At the celebration of the anniversary of Goethe's death at Weimar, recently, the story was told how he came into possession of the cottage at that town where he lived happily for so many years.

When he came to Weimar in 1775 he was walking one day with the duke Charles Augustus, his admirer and patron, in the remoter parts of the duke's park. The two were moralizing about human affairs and vanities, when Goethe pointed to a cottage which was in view and which belonged to the journalist, Ferderick Bertuch.

"How happy Bertuch must be," he said, "living there in that cottage smiling in the sun! He owns it, it is his home, and he is in the country!"

The duke made no response, but the next day he sent for Bertuch.

"Bertuch," he said, "you must give me your house and garden."

"But, your highness——"

"No buts about it. I want your house and I shall take it."

Resistance was quite useless. The cottage "smiling in the sun" became the property of the duke, and Goethe moved into it in the course of time. Here he lived all the rest of his long life, enjoying much of the happiness he had envied in Bertuch's life, but favored, petted and honored in so many ways that his life had in it little of either rusticity or seclusion.

Bertuch is supposed to have been well compensated for the cottage, but as he had no desire to part with it, it is not likely that whatever pay he received could have been regarded as adequate compensation. But there is nothing on record to show that his displacement ever troubled Goethe's peace of mind.—Youth's Companion.

Great Pedestrian.

A well-known story of Bishop Phillips Brooks represents him as saying diplomatically, but without any untruth, when a very homely baby was presented for his admiration, "Well, that is a baby!" And the parents were delighted.

Hardly so well-timed was the remark of another bishop to the proud mother of a two-year-old. The child was not present, but the mother was telling how remarkable it was.

"Can he walk?" asked the bishop.

"Walk!" exclaimed the mother. "Why, he has been walking six months!"

"Dear me! dear me!" said the bishop, absently. "What a long way he must have got!"

Longfellow's Old Cottage.

Those who watched the burning of Longfellow's cottage at Nahant heard the "bells of Lynn" across the water tolling out the alarm of fire The cottage was very dear to Bostonians. The poet occupied it for twenty-five summers, from 1857 to 1882, the year of his death, and wrote some of his verse there, but not much, for he preferred to loaf in summer.

Queen's Extensive Family.

Princess Helene, the Duchess of Sparta's baby, is Queen Victoria's twenty-second great-grandchild.

A Song of Hope.

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
What are you weaving—
Labor and sorrow?
Look to your looms again;
Faster and faster,
Fly the great shuttles
Prepared by the Master.
Life's in the loom.
Room for it—room!

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
Lighten the labor
And sweeten the sorrow,
Now—while the shuttles fly
Faster and faster,
Up and be at it—
At work with the Master,
He stands at your loom,
Room for him—room!

Children of yesterday,
Heirs of to-morrow,
Look at your fabric
Of labor and sorrow,
Seamy and dark
With despair and disaster,
Turn it—and lo,
The design of the Master.
The Lord's at the loom.
Room for him—room!
—Mary A. Lathbury.

Mother Nature.

Nature,, the gentlest mother,
Impatient of no child,
The feeblest or the waywardest—
Her admonition mild

In forest and the hill
By traveler is heard,
Restraining rampant squirrel
Or too impetuous bird.

How fair her conversation,
A summer afternoon—
Her household, her assembly;
And when the sun goes down

Her voice among the aisles
Incites the timid prayer
Of the minutest cricket,
The most unworthy flower.

When all the children sleep
She turns as long away
As will suffice to light her lamps;
Then, bending from the sky

With infinite affection
And infinite care,
Her golden finger on her lip,
Wills silence everywhere.
—Emily Dickinson.

May Bloom.

It isn't the bloom of the apple that blows
on the tree;
It isn't the lilac that blows in a delicate spray;
It isn't the blue of the sky, or the blue of the sea,
Or the red of the rose, that betokens the season of May.

It isn't the prescience of summer's mellifluous tide;
It isn't the cloudship of snow o'er the emerald lea;
It isn't the scent of the wood, or the swallow aglide,
Wind-tossed, or the gold-hearted lily that cradles the bee.

Oh, I know that the season is May by the mystic thrill
Of her smile as she walks like a dream
down the dim garden way;
When I live in her smile, though the wind drifts the snow on the hill,
All my heart's a rose-garden 'neath skies of perennial May.
—R. K. Munkittrick, in Harper's Weekly.

Memories.

As a perfume doth remain
In the folds where it hath lain,
So the thought of you remaining
Deeply folded in my brain,
Will not leave me; all things leave me;
You remain.

Other thoughts may come and go,
Other moments I may know,
That shall waft me, in their going,
As a breath blown to and fro.
Fragrant memories; fragrant memories
Come and go.

Only thoughts of you remain
In my heart where they have lain,
Perfumed thoughts of you remaining,
A hid sweetness in my brain,
Others leave me; all things leave me;
You remain.
—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Sailor's Remarkable Escape.

A seaman on H. M. S. Edinburgh recently had a remarkable escape. He was at work on a ladder on the bow of the vessel as she was going into Portsmouth harbor, steaming ten knots an hour, when the ladder broke and he was thrown into the water directly under the keel. He came up again in the wake of the ship, two ship's lengths astern, unhurt, having escaped the suction of the vessel and contact with the propellers.

Practical.

"Practical? Yes, indeed. Our educational methods aim primarily at the practical. We shall next hear the senior class in mental science, which is finishing the more abstruse courses with the study of the railway timetable."—Detroit Tribune.

The Marble Heart.

"I have been accustomed to better days than these," said the tramp, sorrowfully.

"You must have lived in California," said the marble-hearted housewife.—Washington Times.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, AUG. 7 ..... 1896

A large proportion, probably a majority, of the people of San Francisco are in favor of Bryan and free silver; but of all the daily papers not one, and of all the weekly papers only one—Town Talk—has a friendly word for the candidate of the Democracy, the Populists and the Silverites, or lends its columns to the expounders of the doctrine which he professes. There is a strong probability that Mr. Bryan will be our next President, but our newspapers seem to be resolved that if that fate awaits him, he will not owe it to support derived from the press of San Francisco.

And yet there is not only nothing unreasonable in the platform adopted by the Democracy at Chicago, but there is much that commends it to the approval of honest men who are not tied hand and foot by the bonds of tradition. Between silver and gold there is no normal or natural ratio. The ratio has always been arbitrarily fixed by governments or bullion dealers. At the time of the crusades, eight ounces of silver were equivalent in value to an ounce of gold; about the same period, in Japan, the two metals were equal in value. At the time the United States became a nation, the ratio was 16 to 1; and that was the proportioned maintained by the Mint until 1873. For eighty years gold and silver money were coined in this proportion, not because there was any law of nature fixing this ratio, but because some ratio had to be fixed, and these relative values had prevailed oftener and for longer periods than any others. In 1873 the United States followed Germany's lead in a measure which practically demonetized the white metal; the legal tender quality was taken from silver coins, and gold was declared the money of ultimate redemption. The blow was emphasized by an increased production of gold. A depreciation of silver continued, in spite of a law restoring its legal tender quality, until the ratio between the two metals became about 31 to 1, and silver ceased to circulate and practically became merchandise and ceased to be money. The effect was a contraction of the money in use, which was equal to about two-fifths of its volume.

That this contraction has been the main cause of the depreciation in the price of labor and stable products, no intelligent student of the facts will deny. Ignorant persons believe that the low price of products and the hard times have been caused by the tariff. But it is plain at a glance that the tariff has nothing to do with either. A reduction of taxes on textiles and hardware cannot cause a fall in the price of wheat or curtail the demand for labor. Others who are not so grossly misinformed, but who still fail to grasp the situation, ascribe the shrinkage in values to increased production unaccompanied by corresponding consumption, but the theory is not sustained by the facts. Our wheat crop at the present day does not on the average exceed in volume the crops of 1883 and 1885; and the cotton crop, which is increasing, has not involved a decline in price below the average in former years. The simple truth is that the demonetization of silver has contracted the money supply and that prices generally have declined to correspond with the contraction.

What the democrats are aiming at is to restore the condition of things which existed before 1873, when silver coinage was free and silver circulated at the ratio of 16 to 1 with gold. If they accomplish their design, the vast volume of silver which is now lying dormant in the Treasury will flow into the channels of commerce, will revive trade and industry, quicken enterprise, and restore the demand for labor. The result will anticipate the fact. Trade will not wait for the actual liberation of the Treasury silver to lift up its head. It will discount the future. Every one will feel that the contraction which began twenty-three years ago is going to be succeeded by a liberal policy shaped for the benefit of the mass of the people, and not for that of the money lenders; and every one will be encouraged to enlarge the sphere of his operations and to undertake new ventures The first consequence of that will be a freshened demand for labor and an advance in price of all commodities which are the product of labor.

The gold organs warn us that free silver coinage on the basis of 16 to 1 would be certain to involve a panic and that our gold would be hoarded or sent abroad. Why was it not hoarded or sent abroad before 1873, when coinage was free? Again they tell us that if silver were exchangeable for gold at a ratio of 16 to 1, all the silver of Europe would be dumped into this country. Then what would Europe do for small coin for the transaction of retail business? English people could not do their marketing with sovereigns, nor could French women do their shopping with hundred franc bills. They would have to send for their silver back again by the next steamer. But Europe—kick as it might—would have to follow the example of the United States if we establish free coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1. The reflex action from 1873 would set in. Causes precisely similar to those which depreciated silver in 1873—95 would lift it back to where it was. Silver bullion would again approximate in value all over the world to silver coin, and there would be no material movement of either from Europe to this country, or of gold from this country to Europe.

What the Democrats want is simply to restore the prosperity which was lost under Republican rule; that their purpose should be misrepresented by the corporations, and the monied institutions which Messrs. Hanna and McKinley represent is no wonder; but it would be a very startling wonder if the plutocrats deluded voters into believing them.—Sixteen-to-One in Town Talk.

It is not likely that Justice Field will ever return to his duties in the Supreme Court, but it said that he is determined to hold his place until the appointment of his successor shall devolve upon a President other than Mr. Cleveland.

Speaker Reed has decided to remain in public life and will be a candidate for re-election to Congress. His plan, so it is said, will be to again seek the speakership and to oppose extreme tariff legislation in the event of McKinley's election.

Miners returning from Alaska say a good many hard things of that section. In the early part of the year nothing too good could be said by some of the same people. Alaska didn't deserve the glowing eulogies it received, nor does it deserve the present condemnation. There is gold there, but it is not an ideal El Dorado; it is not California by a large majority.—Sci. Press.

A great grievance of the engineering of the engineering profession is that anyone, however inexperienced and incapable, can write after his name the letters C. E. or the symbol M. E. Similarly anyone can describe himself as a metallurgist or a mining engineer without incurring any penalty. A recent writer has pointed out the absurdity and injustice of the fact that the lawyer who gets his fees whether he wins or loses his case, and the doctor who buries his mistakes under ground, are protected by a law which prevents unfair competition, while the engineering profession, holding, as it does, under its care millions of lives each day, is open to the irresponsible warfare of anyone who may choose to hang out a sign styling himself an engineer, whether he poisons a city with bad water or runs a sausage machine. The grievance is a real one for those who have devoted much time, labor and outlay in qualifying themselves for an arduous and honor able profession.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, June 23, 1896.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Notice is hereby given that the Southern Pacific R. R. Co., has filed in this office a list of lands situated in the townships described below, and has applied for a patent for said lands; that the list is open to the public for inspection, and a copy thereof, by descriptive subdivisions, has been posted in a convenient place in this office for the inspection of all persons interested and the public generally.

Within the next sixty days following the date of this notice, protests or claims against the claim of the company to any tract or subdivision within any section or part of section described in the list, on the ground that the same is more valuable for mineral than for agricultural purposes will be received and noted for report to the General Land Office at Washington, D. Pat Keyes has gone on a visit to Los Angeles.

861 names are now enrolled on the Great Register.

Dave Holland came up from Keeler last Tuesday morning.

Bert Rhine is exceedingly happy. For cause of joy see birth notice.

James Jones, of Fish Springs, was reported seriously ill last week.

County Clerk Hession left for Big Pine and Bishop yesterday morning.

Edward Chenot and brother have gone on a camping trip to Mammoth.

J. A. Stroud, the Insurance agent, left for the upper country by Tuesday's train.

Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle and Mrs. H. Boland were up from Keeler early in the week.

Mrs. John Shepherd and her son, Arthur, have gone on a camping trip to Onion valley.

Walter Ober, of Big Pine, is reported to be very low, with only slight chances for recovery.

Judge Arnot arrived by Monday's train and is around shaking hands with his legion of friends.

Gus Stecker has just completed a fine dwelling for Wm. Muth-Rasmussen, of Fort Independence.

Lowell A. Eugley and A. O. Collins came down from Big Pine on Sunday last and spent a few days in town.

Mr. Rice, a Civil Engineer from Salt Lake, is surveying the Bolinger group of mines preparatory to applying for a patent.

Last Sunday evening a pleasant musicale was given at the home of Miss Lena Thompson. Those who were fortunate enough to receive an invitation report having had a most enjoyable time.

Mike Reddy, who had his knee crushed about a week ago, started for San Francisco on Tuesday morning for treatment. He was accompanied by Dr. Middleton of Lone Pine and James Moffett, of Independence.

Mrs. Wm. M. Richards, of Keeler, who was brought to Independence Tuesday morning on a charge of insanity, was examined before Judge Gill by Drs. Johnson and Blair, pronounced sane and discharged.

Henry Levy and Sam Gruber returned on Monday last from their visit to Casa Diablo springs, having been benefited to some extent by those waters, but not entirely cured. As soon as business will permit they will go to Coso, with the hopes of the mud baths of those springs effecting a permanent cure.

All those who are interested in Fair matters are requested to meet at the Pavilion to-morrow (Saturday) night at 8 o'clock. Rip Van Winkles, arise from your slumbers and attend this meeting as business of importance will be discussed, and the attendance of our merchants, mechanics, miners, farmers and laborers is requested.

EXAMINER.

An Immense Block of Gold.

It was reported on the street during the week, that a large block of gold estimated to weigh about 1,500 pounds, and of the value of $294,643 was found in the last crosscut of No. 10 tunnel of the DeLamar, and was imbedded in rock of a character and hardness unknown to mining men. They are trying to get it out whole and dare not blast on that account. Hardened chisels tempered with machine oil makes but very little impression on the rock, but it is the only tool that any headway can be made with.—DeLamar Lode.

Death of a Pioneer.

Word comes from Bishop of the death at that place of Thomas K. Hutchison, which occurred on Tuesday last, the 4th instant. The deceased was widely and favorably known throughout Inyo, especially by old-timers familiar with Inyo affairs from the date of the organization of the county. He was for years a member and Chairman of the Board of Supervisors and had much to do with shaping official affairs when such duty was arduous and difficult. In private life "Tom" was social, hospitable and popular. He was a native of Tennessee, about 65 years of age, and leaves a large family in mourning.

From Aberdeen

Mr. Matthew Duke has gone to Hawthorne to work on the section.

Mr. John Miller and family, who were camped for a week near Aberdeen Station, have gone to Georges' Creek.

On account of sickness Mrs. A. A. Neil did not go to Onion Valley last week.

Mrs. May Jones, who has been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. D. Calvert, at Aberdeen Station, has gone to join her husband in Carson City.

Master George Wrinkle, of Keeler, was the guest of Master Willie Calvert last week.

AURORA.

---

Arthur Smith came in from Modock last Tuesday.

W. T. Grant and Tim Madden have gone to Kern river on a fishing trip.

Mrs. J. J. Stewart and Miss Matie Johnson were up from Lone Pine on Wednesday.

A marriage license has been issued to William P. McMurry and Alice M. Wood both of Big Pine.

Charles Meroney and wife came in from Darwin early in the week and are visiting friends here.

The Virginia Chronicle says that Judge Mack may resign his Judgeship in order to settle up the estate of the late Richard Kirman.

To-morrow (Saturday) will be the last day in which to register. If you haven't your name on the Great Register you can only puff and blow, but you can't vote.

A disgusted miner who went to Alaska writes to a friend as follows: "Offer a premium at your next fair for the 'biggest fool in the country,' and I'll try and get there in time."

Candidate Bryan is said to be a poor man, his whole property consisting of his library and household furniture. At the date of last assessment he reported his cash on hand at $106.50. The whole cost of his nomination at Chicago was $42.

California next November elects nine men to cast the electoral vote of the State in the real "presidential election" in January, 1897. There will certainly be 27, probably 36, names on the ballots voted in this State next November. The nine receiving the most votes will represent California in the electoral college.

An interesting engagement is that of Miss Lillian Goodman, daughter of Mrs. Rachel Goodman of this city and Leon Lewin, a wealthy Salvadoran. After the wedding the young people will reside in Paris, France.—S. F. Chronicle.

The young lady mentioned above is the niece of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz of this place.

A surprise party was tendered to Miss Birdie Levy, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Levy, last Friday evening. Dancing, music, etc., furnished amusement for the guests until early next morning.

Miss Birdie Levy, of Independence, Inyo county, a niece of P. J. Levy, after spending a couple of weeks with her uncle and aunt, left yesterday for San Francisco.—Livermore Echo.

T. P. Lukein, President of the Pasadena Bank and an old-time friend of Dr. Woodin, accompanied by W. Richardson, are making a trip through the high Sierras. They have visited all points of interest south of us, and say the scenery is very grand and is well worth all the inconveniences undergone. They have already been out a month and will continue on their travels and sight-seeing for two months longer. From here they will go to Onion valley and Kings river, then north through the Mammoth country to Yosemite Valley. Mr. Lukein says that lack of communication is all that keeps our grand scenery from being viewed by thousands of pleasure-loving and sight-seeing tourists every year.

Wedding at Lone Pine

To-day, the 30th of August, Mr. R. R. Slack and Miss Stella Meysan were united in marriage, and the occasion seemed to give quite a holiday tone to the town, both being most popular members of the community. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's father. I fear the writer is by no means an adept at description of ladies attire, but to the least initiated it was apparent that the soft white dress decorated with lace, and the long white veil, with a crown of orange blossoms, were as gracefully becoming to the bride as the bride most charmingly became them. The wedding was comparatively private and took place in the prettily decorated parlor of the dwelling. The members of the family Mr. and Mrs. Meysan, Mrs. Fitzgerald and son, Misses Blanche, Eugenie and Adeline Meysan being there together with Mrs. Julian and daughters, Miss Clara Reynolds and Mr. A. W. D. Carroll. Mr. Harvey performing the ceremony, which he did most aptly, the frequent calls upon him here of late for such purposes making him very familiar with the role. Later came the wedding dinner, when all the good things which could be desired were partaken of under the shade of a vine covered arbor, and at these home surroundings Mr. and Mrs. Meysan's courtesy and genial hospitality are always a bright and enjoyable feature. A reception was held from 5 o'clock to 8 p. m., which was largely attended. Afterwards a dance, which the many friends had arranged for, took place at the Town Hall, and with dancing and general festivity the event of the day was brought to a close, all stages of the occasion being prefaced and again reiterated by good wishes for the bride and groom. C.

Died Suddenly.

William Thomas Treglown, a well-known resident of this section, died very suddenly Tuesday morning, at the Independence Hotel, from hemorrhage of the lungs. He got out of bed about 6 o'clock and remarked that he was feeling fairly well; at 7 o'clock he went in and ate a hearty breakfast; after getting up from the table and walking round a short time he complained of feeling badly. A few minutes later, while walking in the yard, he was noticed to reel and fall, with blood gushing from his mouth. Kind and willing hands picked up the unconcious man and placed him in a comfortable position. Dr. Woodin was immediately summoned and announced there was no hope for the unfortunate. Shortly after 8 o'clock he died, never having regained consciousness. Mr. Treglown had been an acute sufferer from consumption for several months past and his death was not unexpected. For the last several years he had been engaged in mining in this and Mono county, where he was well and favorably known. He was a native of Cornwall, England, and aged about 39 years. The funeral took place Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Believe it is the Peglegs.

A Mojave dispatch, of July 28, to the Chronicle says: "Si Drouillard, E. M. Pyle and Sheriff Borgwardt of Bakersfield came into town to-night, and immediately stampeded the residents by showing seven sacks of ore, which is literally covered with gold, the richest specimens ever seen by the old miners, and they believe they have surely found the long-lost Pegleg mine. The ore samples were taken off the top of the ground. The ledge is over six feet, occasionally cropping out, and traced for nearly 3000 feet. The location is on the desert, six miles southwest of Randsburg, San Bernardino county, thirty-two miles from Mojave. So great is the excitement that preparations are being made to-night to send out prospecting parties to be on the field early in the morning. Miners from all over the district have flocked in by hundreds, grabbing claims, and to-morrow will find the country crowded with prospectors. The same parties found a ledge that goes nearly $2000 to the ton last Monday.

Mining Decision

The Supreme Court of California last week handed down a decision, in which the judgment of the lower court was reversed. It was the case of W. S. Howeth, plaintiff, J. C. Sullenger, et al., appellants, in an action to determine rights of parties to mining claim. Section 2324, U. S. Revised Statutes, provides that "the location must be distinctly marked on the ground, so that its boundaries can be readily traced," but does not prescribe how it shall be marked. The matter is left to the regulation of the local laws. Held—"Any marking on the ground claimed by stakes and mounds and written notices, whereby the boundaries of the claim located can be readily traced, is sufficient." When the ultimate fact is found, no finding of probative facts which may tend to establish that the ultimate fact was found against the evidence, can overcome the principal finding.—Min. & Sci. Press.

Mining Laws

We have received the ninth edition (just out) of Copp's Mining Code, published by Henry N. Copp, a lawyer of Washington, D. C., who has given many years to the study of mining laws. It is a book of more than 200 pages, and will be found of great interest to mine owners and prospectors, as it gives the United States mineral land laws and the official instructions thereunder, the various state and territorial mining laws, miners' liens, rights of way, &c., numerous forms for use from the location to the patenting, lease and sale of a mine, and also a large collection of abstracts of court and land office decisions and rulings. Every enterprising mining man will secure a copy. The San Francisco News Company handles Mr. Copp's publication on the Pacific coast. The book is for sale by the principal book stores and by the publisher in Washington, D. C. The price is 50 cents.

Total number of names on the Great Register in 1894 was 1030. This year, so far, only 861 are on the Register, 229 less names than two years ago.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends, expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan office, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

New York's Coal Bin.

A prominent New York coal merchant, while showing a Pittsburg friend about New York on the occasion of the latter's first visit to the metropolis, took him to the top of one of the very highest buildings in town and pointed out to him the different objects of interest that could be seen. The western man took in the beautiful view of the bay and then looked northward over miles and miles of roofs and chimneys, over the vast expanse of street and park, business buildings and dwellings, and then turned to his friend with the remark that the most astonishing thing to him was that it was so clear. Not a blot of smoke marred the landscape, clear and brilliant in the sun of a brilliant winter day. New York was clean and neat and the greatest possible contrast to the dingy and grimy cities of the west, where the use of coal is not restricted to certain kinds.

The coal dealers of New York are legion and the business has grown to immense proportions. The ease with which coal can be shipped to New York and unloaded in order to get it to the market with the least possible handling has contributed to a great extent to the success which New York coal merchants have attained.—New York Mail and Express.

The Wheel Caught the Fox.

One day toward night, while I was passing through a wooded section of the country close to the broader line between Connecticut and Massachusetts, a red fox suddenly dropped into the middle of the road. The soft gliding motion of the rubber tires did not attract his attention until the cycle was within a rod of him. Then with a wild scamper he started on a dead run toward a distant swamp. The creature was fleet of foot, and he swept down the dusty road rapidly, turning his head occasionally to watch the strange apparition following him, and he laid his body almost flat upon the ground in his endeavor to outrun the new pursuer. But it was no use. The wheel slowly overhauled him, foot by foot, and the front wheel almost brushed his bushy tail before he acknowledged defeat. Then, with a half sob and yelp, the creature jumped clean over the adjoining ditch and landed safely on the nether grassy bank. The wheel flashed past him, and he remained seated upon his haunches watching it until out of sight, probably the most astonished fox that ever roamed the woods.—New York Post.

When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

THE FAMILY STORY

SISTER CALLINE'S CHIL'EN.

THE train ran into a little station in the heart of the pine woods, and the conductor sprang to the platform.

"Hurry up there!" he called, running forward, to the negro coach.

The steps were overflowing with pickaninnies, so black that at first sight their small features would have been indistinguishable but for the wide crease on each face, filled with even rows of teeth, startlingly white in contrast with their sooty environment.

A fat, good-looking negress, holding an oval bundle, wrapped in an old shawl, close to her breast, seemed to be the center of the crowd, and an old, old negro man, grizzled and wrinkled, was hovering around its margin.

"Is you got um all, Sister Calline?" he asked anxiously.

'Clare ef I knows!" said the woman, running her eye over the company. "'Pears lak dere's one on um missin'!"

"All aboard!" shouted the conductor, and the train moved.

"Hyar, mistah!" shrieked Sister Calline, "you'se ca'in' off one o' my chill'en!"

The conductor laughed good-naturedly, and was gone.

"Oh, Lawd!" moaned the woman. "He's done ca'ed off one of um, suah!"

The station agent sauntered near. He wore that intensely bored expression only possible to a man who spends his life in a piney woods clearing, seeing four trains a day go in and playing checkers on a barrel head in the intervals.

One wonders if the lunatic asylums are not largely recruited from this class.

"Orter have tied 'em along a rope, so's they couldn't get away," he said.

Sister Calline turned her black velvet orbs in his direction.

"You call dat train back, I say," she cried. "He's done ca'ed off one o' my chil'en."

"S'pose I can call the train back?" said the man, contemptuously. "If you're sure one of 'em is missin' you'll have to set down and wait here till the train comes back. They'll bring it, I reckon."

"Oh, my pore lil chile!"

Tears began to stream down the black face.

The wrinkled old uncle looked deeply distressed.

"Is you pint blank suah one on um's missin', Sister Calline?" he asked, sympathetically.

Her eyes wandered, vague and troubled, over the dusky, shifting crowd of faces.

"I'se mos' pufflckly suah," she said.

"Better count 'em," suggested the agent. "How many are there, anyhow?"

"Dere's Lu Roxy Adline, Lucy-aller——"

"I's here, mammy!" interrupted a long-limbed girl of 14.

"I told you to count 'em!" said the agent, impatiently.

"I cayn't coun', mas'r! I'se bawn afore de wah. But anyhow dey say dere's leben on um."

"Sister Calline," said the old man, tenderly, "le's we set right down hyar an' I'll coun' um fer ye. I'se a scholar."

"You sholy is kind, mistah," said Sister Calline, gratefully, sitting down on the edge of the platform.

The agent laughed shortly and turned away.

The grizzled old uncle took a red and yellow handkerchief from his pocket and carefully dusted the end of the planks before he took his seat.

He wore a threadbare black suit which had undoubtedly once moved in high society.

Sister Calline looked at him with interest.

"I reckon dat you mus' be a preacher, sah," she said, defentially.

"Madam, I is. I'se been preachin' de word dese nine years, eber sence my pore old lady died. I was a powerful sinner afore dat."

Sister Calline looked awed.

"I was, suah!" said the old man, retrospectively. "But I'se come inter de kingdom now suah 'nuff, bress de Lord. Is you got a husban', Sister Calline?"

"I'se a pore widder, mistah, wid all dese chil'en ter scuffle fer, an' de Lawd knows what I'se gwine ter do."

Uncle glanced at the bundle in her arms. It had begun to move and whimper.

"Dat your baby, chile?" 'asked uncle, innocently.

"Dis my baby," replied Sister Calline, looking down at the sooty mite in her arms with maternal pride.

"My po' ole man neber see dis baby. He was blowed up de biler bustin' in de mill where he wuked. He was lone killed when dey brung him home. De doctors tried an' tried to pump some life inter him, but he never spoke no mo'."

"For de lan's sake!" ejaculated the old man.

Compassion was written all over his kind old face. He had been a good darky from his youth up, and his past was purely fictitious.

"What de mattah wid you ole lady you done lost?" asked Sister Calline.

"Consumpshun," replied the old man, solemnly. "It runs in our family. Ole Cunnel Kent's ma died ob it, an' de cunnel's first wife died ob it an' lil mistis died, too. An' den my ole lady took it an' she died. It's a turrible decease."

"Dat sholy is so!" coincided Sister Calline. "'Scuse my insurance axin' you, mistah. Does you git you libin' preachin'?"

"De folks pay me some, an' den I'se got a nice piece o' lan' an' a lil house. My ole mas'r give um ter me," said the old man, with modest pride.

"Sho! Ain't you too old ter wuk?"

"I wuks some, an' de ars helps me. I'se de onliest one ob de ole sarven's lef'. I'se 95 year ole!"

"Sho, now!" said Sister Calline, much impressed.

"How ole you is, Sister Calline?—hopin' you'll 'scuse me fer axin'."

"I dunno 'zactly," said Calline, studying a little. "I 'spect I'se 60—gwine on 50."

They had become so interested in their humble annals that the pickaninnies had been lost sight of. They were scattered along the railroad line gamboling like a menagerie turned loose.

"Does you wan' me tu coun' you chil'en, Sister Calline?"

"Co'se I does. Hyar! You-all. Come hyar."

The children paid no attention.

"Dey needs disserplainin', Sister Calline."

He rose. "Chil'en, chil'en!" he called in a voice of authority.

The black cloud drew together and bore down on the station-house.

"Now you-all stand' still ontwell dis genelman couns' you," commanded the mother. "Lu Roxy, min' yersef. Abe Linkum, stan' up. Don' scrouge so! How he gwine coun' you, ef you dodges roun' dat away?"

A mild degree of order at last prevailed and the old man began.

"One, two, thee, fo', fibe, six, seben, nine, eight, ten! Dere ain't only ten."

"Dawter be leben, suah," said Sister Calline. "Oh, what I gwine ter do?"

"I'll coun' 'um ober agin'," said the old man, kindly.

Sister Calline wiped away her tears.

"You am so kind, mistah! I knowed you was a good man when Brer Martin tole me ter keep long er you on der train."

"An' I knowed you was a good woman when Brer. Martin tole me 'You take good ca' o' Sister Calline,' says he. Now I'll coun' 'um agin."

"One, two, thee," and so on. They went over and over this, but by no legerdemain of counting could ten be made eleven.

Sister Calline grew more and more distressed and was just breaking into hysterical sobs when the train whistled at the next station below.

They both sprang up and Calline screamed to the children, who came flying across the track like a flock of wild blackbirds.

When the train drew up and the conductor stepped off, there was Calline to meet him.

"Please, mistah; has you brung back my chile?" she tearfully pleaded.

He looked at her.

"Donner und blixen! What do you mean, woman?"

"I'se got 'leben chil'en," groaned Sister Calline, "an' dis genelman has counded 'um ober an' ober, un' dere ain't only ten."

The conductor ran his eye over the group.

A score of heads were thrust out of the coach, and a murmur of amused sympathy stirred along the line.

"H-m!"

He pulled forth his book hurriedly and turned over the pages.

"Pass Calline Jackson and eleven children."

He glanced over the black, bobbing heads and back at the woman.

His eye fell on the bundle in her arms.

"Great Jove! What's the matter with the baby making eleven?"

There were roars of laughter and much waving of hats and handkerchiefs as the train moved out.

"You done counded um wrong, Mistah," said Sister Calline, looking up reproachfully at the old man.

"Is dey all hyar?" he asked, with dignity.

"Co'se dey's all hyar."

"Den don't dat pintedly show dat I counded um right?"

Sister Calline's dark countenance wore a troubled expression, but as they went along the piney woods road toward Kentville it gradually cleared up, and when they came in sight of Kent Hall it was beaming.

"Dere's de cunnel!" said uncle, pointing to a gentleman dressed in a white duck suit, who sat comfortably in a big armchair on the gallery.

"He's one o' de ars. You jes' wait here a spell ontel I go an' tell him."

"Well?" said Colonel Kent, good-naturedly, laying down his newspaper. "What is it, Uncle Dick?"

"I'se jes' come ter tell you, cunnel, dat I'se foun' a good woman dat I laks the bes' in the world, an' we'se fixed our min's dat we'll marry fore long. We reckons ternight is de bes' time."

"Marry! Good Lord!" said the colonel, astonished. "Such an old fellow as you are!"

"I is ole, for a fac', Mas'r, but I'se lived alone nine years, an' its mighty lonesome——"

"That's so," said the colonel, kindly.

"An' 'pears like I can't stan' it no longer. An' Sister Jackson needs a husband ter help her raise her chil'en. Dere's leben chil'en an' none ob 'em missin', coundin' um right."

"Eleven! How in the name of General Jackson are you going to take care of eleven children?"

"Dey's gwine ter take ca' o' me, Mas'r," said the old man, eagerly. "Dey's mighty peart chil'en, mighty peart, an' dey c'n pick a heap ob cotton an' hoe co'n an' taters an' weed in de gyarden an' do a power ob oder turns."

The curiously wizened old face shone as if he had just come into a fortune.

"An' cunnel," he went on, "I'se gittin' too ole ter wuk much, an' I tinks my meetin' up wid Sister Calline is a special proverdence. I wants ter git de oration roun' soon dat dere's gwine ter be a weddin' down ter my lil house ternight."

"Go ahead then," laughed the colonel. "The missis will have a cake baked for you, and, by George, it'll have to be a big one to go round."

The cake was baked in the big iron bake kettle of antebellum associations, and there was a festival in the cabin down by the creek which lasted into the small hours.—New York Tribune.

WRITTEN ON A CARD.

A Commission from Lincoln that Was Never Executed.

A daughter of the late General James W. Singleton has a card which is historically of great interest. It is a pass written by President Lincoln late on April 13, 1865, and is more than probably the last pass he ever wrote. It reads:

"Allow General Singleton to pass to Richmond and return.

"A. LINCOLN.

"April 13, 1865."

The war was practically ended. Lee, with his "scarred and battered legions," awaited the end that was swiftly approaching. The surrender was a question of time. Weary of bloodshed, "with malice toward none, with charity for all," Mr. Lincoln, in the interests of peace, had summoned to his aid General James W. Singleton, of Quincy, Ill., a Virginian by birth and personally known to prominent men of the Confederacy, and also intimately associated with the President in his Western home.

Already he had made several trips to Richmond (unofficially, of course), and there was a chance that the negotiations would bear good fruit and tend to a speedy and peaceful adjustment of many questions by making both sides better acquainted with each other.

At General Singleton's request Mr. Lincoln had given him a letter stating, in substance, that if Virginia or any of the Southern States would recognize the authority of the United States and elect Senators and members of Congress such Senators and members of Congress would be entitled to take their seats.

"Mr. President," said General Singleton, referring to this letter, "when I go South I shall be asked how your promise in this letter can consistently stand alongside of your emancipation proclamation. What shall I tell them?"

"Singleton," said Mr. Lincoln, "I have explained, and will now say again, that I have issued that proclamation, and if it have any legal effect I have no power to recall it. If it have not any legal effect, it is of no consequence. I would not take it back if I could and I could not if I would."

He continued: "My duty is simply to enforce the laws. I want to see these States and all these people come back and submit to the Constitution, and then my duty is done. I am the executive part of the government, and when I have enforced the laws the other departments will relieve me of all responsibility."

On April 14 he instructed General Singleton to "assure the people of Virginia that he would favor the return of the State into the Union with her government intact, and the same on the part of the seceded States."

"I cannot do everything at once," he said, "for I am impeded by the fact that everything is under martial law at the present time. I wish you to go again, immediately, to Richmond and reassure the people.'"

Mr. Usher, Secretary of the Interior, was present at this interview, and was to accompany General Singleton to Richmond. They took leave of the President and went out together.

Later in the evening, going to join Governor Yates of Illinois and other friends, with whom they were to make a party for supper, they were met on the threshold with flying rumors of the assassination of Mr. Lincoln at Ford's theater.

Thus were Mr. Lincoln's last words those of peace and kindness.

Recognizing the value of that memento of the time, General Singleton ordered a case of gold, in one compartment of which, under glass, is the card with its significant date.—New York Sun.

A Corporation with a Soul.

Here is a nice little story. When the two Princeton students were shot, about a year ago, it was determined that an immediate operation might save the life of the one whose case was worst, and Dr. Bull, of New York, was summoned by telegraph. The message reached him after midnight. He went at once to Jersey City and asked for a special train on the Pennsylvania Railroad. The agent said he must deposit $200 and promise to pay any further bill that might be sent. He did and got his engine and car. Some time after he wrote and asked for his bill. Instead of getting it he received back the $200 that he had deposited, and a note saying the company would make no charge for a service done "in the interest of suffering humanity." Very pretty behavior for a "soulless corporation," wasn't it?

Left Her Hanging.

An amusing incident lately occurred in the Mediterranean, on board one of her Majesty's ships. The commander is a very particular man about the men's dinner time. Directly eight bells strike, whatever they are doing, the men have to knock off and go below. The commander's wife was on board, and, being rather stout, whenever she went ashore a whip and chair were rigged from the yardarm to get her off and on board. One day she started about two minutes to 12 (eight bells). The chair was put over the side, the lady hoisted half way up, when the quartermaster struck eight bells. The commander ordered and the boatswain piped "Belay!" The lady was left one hour in the chair while the men dined.

Robin Falls in Love.

There is a well attested instance in England in which a robin formed such an attachment to two ladies that he was in the habit of accompanying them in their country walks. When they went to reside in another district he took his departure with them, flying along by the side of the carriage.

Madagascar Spiders.

The silk spider of Madagascar spins threads of a golden color and strong enough, according to a well-known naturalist, to hang a cork helmet on. Small textures woven of these threads are used by the natives for fastening flowers on sunshades and for other purposes.

British Knights.

Not quite 2,000 persons are living who possess British orders of knighthood, or, roughly speaking, only about one in 28,000 of the population.

Our idea of a rich man is one who can afford three straw hats every summer.

The best way to preserve a piano—keep it locked.

A Small Fortune for Medicine.

MRS. LEEK SPENDS $4000 IN THE EFFORT TO REGAIN HEALTH.

Mr. Shulty's Experience With Nervous Prostration and Its Attending Evils.

From the Examiner, San Francisco, Cal.

"Why, everybody knows the good that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did me," was the cheerful generality with which Mrs. Francis Leek, of Room 29, 1206 Market street, San Francisco, Cal., answered the question whether she had taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. As she looks the picture of health her story was the more surprising.

"You would hardly believe it," she continued, "but I was an invalid for ten years. I spent $4000 being treated in hospitals in Chicago for rheumatism, neuralgia, nervous prostration and fibrous tumors, and then to think that I spent only $6 in Pink Pills and am a well woman. It makes me mad to think I spent so much and then got well for six dollars, still, I am glad I did get well. No one could ever guess how I came to take the pills. I have a little granddaughter, at least she calls me 'grandma,' though I am not really her grandmother. One day we were riding in the cars in Chicago and she began to read, 'Pink Pills for Pale People.' It seemed to tickle her and she would rattle it off just as if she had learned a line of poetry, and sometimes she would get it turned about and say, 'granmda, what is Pale Pills for Pink People for?'

"Well, you see, I got familiarized with the name of Pink Pills and one day when I got a little book about them I sat down and read it all through. I was not good for much else but sitting down or lying down, and I thought I'd give them a trial. I guess there is not much more to say. Look at me. I don't look much like an invalid today, do I?"

It was perfectly true that Mrs. Leek did not look much like an invalid, and it is no secret that she was married only about six months ago. She said that she always keeps the pills by her bedside, and produced a handful of the little round boxes as evidence of her faith in them. "I have had it on my mind to write to Dr. Williams direct and thank him for all the good they have done me; but one thing and then another came up and I have not written yet. I have recommended them to scores of people and probably that did more good than writing. Oh! you can put me down for the Pink Pills every time. I believe in them and I can tell the genuine pills, too, right off. There is nothing that is 'just as good' for me—I want the real pills every time."

Mr. Francis Shulty, of 712 Talyor St., said: "Yes, the Pink Pills did for me all that was claimed for them. I used them for about five months. They were recommended to me by a druggist on the corner of Oak and Gough streets, the Eagle Drug Store is the name, I think. I was run down, very nervous, and suffered from indigestion. The doctor said my blood was thin and that I needed change of air and all that kind of thing. Well, I couldn't do that, and this friend of mine just told me kind of off-hand to try the Pink Pills. I have tried pills before that were supposed to cure everything and I did not have much confidence, but when a man is sick he don't care what he tries if there is a chance to get well. I got the pills—one box, that is. It did me good, I began to feel better right away and I kept on with them. I have got over all my nervousness and I must say they did me a world of good."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuraliga, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post-paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

UNANSWERED PRAYERS.

Like some schoolmaster, kind in being stern,
Who hears the children crying o'er their slates
And calling "Help me, master," yet helps not,
Since in his silence and refusal lies
Their self-development, so God abides
Unheeding many prayers. He is not deaf
To any cry sent up from earnest hearts;
He hears and strengthens when He must deny.

He sees us weeping over life's hard sums,
But, should He dry our tears and give the key,
What would it profit us when school were done
And not one lesson mastered!

What a world
Were this if all our prayers were granted!
Not in famed Pandora's box were such vast ills
As lie in human hearts. Should our desires,
Voiced one by one, in prayer ascend to God
And come back as events shaped to our wish,
What chaos would result!

In my fierce youth
I sighed out breath enough to move a fleet
Voicing wild prayers to heaven for fancied boons,
Which were denied, and that denial bends
My knee to prayers of gratitude each day
Of my maturer life. Yet from those prayers
I rose alway regirded for the strife
And conscious of new strength. Pray on, sad heart!
That which thou pleadest for may not be given,
But in the lofty altitude where souls
Who supplicate God's grace are lifted, there
Thou shalt find help to bear thy future lot
Which is not elsewhere found.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the Cosmopolitan.

WEDDING GIFTS.

"Pooh! Presents!" said the Old Married Man to the bridegroom. "Don't think you'll get what you want. I'll tell you my experience.

"As the time for our marriage drew near I used to call at the house every available evening and whisper confidentially to the curly head which exactly fitted my shoulder that I was the luckiest fellow on earth. On one occasion Agnes sighed and murmured dreamily that that was just what she felt.

"That was on the 5th.

"On the 12th I stopped in a minute at noon to see if she loved me as much as at 11:15 the night before. She replied that she did—that love was unalterable—but that she must hurry upstairs now or the dressmaker would get her skirts flute-shaped instead of organ-pipped.

"On the 14th the present began to arrive—also the relatives. It became an unsettled problem which of the two were more numerous. Aggie had cousins once removed. I had several uncles and aunts. All were well off; in fact, it was a curious coincidence that we were the only poor branches on our respective family trees. I was in an insurance office—fire insurance, not life insurance—and when I had communicated to her the news of my recent promotion she had declared in the face of her family's unaccountable preference for Henry Walker (who was not so good a fellow as I am by any manner of means) that to be Mrs. Joseph Lounsbury and live in a small house on a very small income and bliss was precisely her ideal of existence. So we were not marrying as a speculation; nevertheless, since marriage comes so seldom in one's life, we had hopes that our moneyed relatives would do the handsome thing.

"They did. First came a complete set of knives, forks and spoons in a polished wood case. They were from the cousin Aggie had been named for. 'Such a sensible present!' said her mother; 'they will last a lifetime.'

"'Yes,' said I, 'it will take us a good while to wear all those out two at a time.'

"'Don't you suppose we're ever going to entertain any company, Joe?' asked the girl of my affection, tapping me on the cheek with one of the forks.

"The same night I had a note from her saying, 'Dearest Joe, you ought to see the lovely after dinner coffee spoons Second Cousin Milly has sent—no two alike. Orange plush case. Isn't it exciting? Don't tell, dear, but I almost wish they'd been something else, for I think some the girls are going to give me spoons.' The rest of this letter was not interesting—to you.

"This was the beginning of an avalanche of spoons—Charter Oak spoons, nutmeg spoons, soldiers' monument spoons, witch spoons, bust spoons, portrait spoons (I called these last our picture gallery, and suggested that they should be framed in ribbons and hung in the parlor). One of our friends sent a pair of salted-almond spoons, hoping that we would exchange them if they were duplicated, but it turned out that those were the only ones we had. The sugar spoons were all marked. There were five of them.

"It is a time-honored custom in our office when one of us is married for the rest to 'combine' and buy a picture; and you could generally tell what year a man's wedding came off by a glance at his parlor wall. Williams, who was married in '84, had 'Far Away,' Brown's, a few years later, was 'The Three Fates.' Ours was, of course, the latest thing out. It had a silver frame.

"As the days went by and pieces of silver piled up on us I was more than once reminded of the couple whose courtship was conducted in Browningese, and who were fitted out by their admiring friends with a Browning tea set, with quotations around the edge, 'Oh, the little more, and how much it is!' The Fords had a run on china, but a good deal of it got broken the first year. The Smiths' specialty was etchings; they had enough for every room in the house—only, they never had a house; they boarded ever since they were married. Finally the climax came, when my old Uncle John sent us a solid tea set. I hadn't expected anything from him, unless perhaps a Bible of a Webster's Unabridged, for he didn't enjoy giving anything away. Aggie was getting too tired to be very enthusiastic, but her mother was delighted, and it was no use thinking that I would just as soon have had the money.

"'This makes 103, dear—nine more than Susie Fish had,' said her sister.

"'One hundred and two,' said Aggie.

"'No, dear, 103—102 came this morning.'

"'Oh, I know I shall never get this list right!' exclaimed Aggie, diving for her blank book.

"'Look out, or you'll be handing that book to the parson for a prayer-book,' said I.

"'Wouldn't be a bit surprised,' she answered, smiling; Aggie could smile when she was tired.

"Well, we were married. A man breathes easier when it's over with. 'But, Aggie,' I said, as the carriage door slammed on us, 'if it ever happens to us again, let's leave out the heathen superstitions.'

"'I know it,' said Aggie. 'I begged them not, but they would smuggle some in. See any in my hair?'

"'Some in your hat brim.' I brushed her off, and she seized the newspaper I had carefully brought along to look like an old married man, and conjured with it a minute, holding it out by an improvised handle. 'Here,' she said, 'the very childen in kindergarten know how to make paper dustpans—now brush the carriage seat.' When we got out I gave the hackman a dustpan of rice with a bill on top. 'There, burn it,' said I.

"'Did you see him chortle in his joy?' said Aggie, giggling; 'Joe, do you feel like a married couple?'

"'Lots,' said I.

"Our ten days in Washington had only one bogie—the blank book. Aggie said she must finish her notes. All I could do was to sit by and fret, and put on the stamps; and she told me I hindered her more than I helped, and she was awfully glad to have me around, it made her feel better.

"We began housekeeping in a cheerful way in a little house on a new street. It was something like to come home to one's own dinner table. We had so much silver that it looked funny with our plain china—nobody had given us a lot of ice-cream sets and things. I tell you, marriage is a lottery when it comes to wedding presents. I liked seeing Aggie's face in the sugar bowl, though. Every night the little maid (imported, to live up to the spoons) brought them and all the rest upstairs on a tray and we packed them away in the chest we had made and a pretty penny it cost, with its combination lock, which went into the end of the closet where nobody could get at it. One night we came home at 12 from a reception, and as we stole upstairs not to wake the sleeping handmaid, Aggie so sleepy herself that she tripped on her wedding gown and I had to hold her, we came upon the whole array on the floor outside our door.

"'Isn't it imposing? so safe!' said I, but Aggie said, desperately, 'I shan't care anything about going out evenings any more if I've got to put that silver away after I get home.'

"'Let it stay there.'

"'Oh, I can't. Mamma thinks we're so careless. We don't appreciate things enough. She says, if anyone had given her such elegant things when she was married she wouldn't have dared to close her eyes!'

"'Take more than that to keep my eyes open.' But I helped Agnes shove the tray under a chair, and drape the train of her wedding dress over it.

"'What on earth are you doing, Aggie?' I asked, on coming in for dinner one day. All I could see was one foot and a skirt ruffle in the closet.

"Aggie scrambled up enough to catch me round my knee. 'Oh, Joe, I'm so glad you've come!'

"'What is it? You're ready to cry.'

"'That's what I like about you; you don't have to be explained to. Henry Walker wouldn't have known I felt like crying if I'd screamed it at him!'

"That made me feel pretty good (though dinner wasn't ready). 'But what?——'

"'It's the silver! I came up to change the forks and spoons so they should get worn alike, and I've shut the paper with the combination in the chest, and I can't remember what it was.'

"I got down beside her. It was hotter than Mexico in that closet. I turned and tried the lock. 'Do you keep your dresses out of my way, they tickle the back of my neck.' No good. 'Well I guess we'll use the old forks to-day,' said I; 'I don't believe they'll fade away yet awhile.'

"'Oh, I'm so sorry—but—they're every one shut up in that chest.' So we laughed. What else was there to do? It was funny when Deming came home with me to tea—we'd asked him some days before. It wouldn't have been funny with some girls. The table looked principally white china, and the kitchen knives and forks didn't go round. Ever cut omelet with a pewter spoon? It is great.

"It wasn't quite so funny when three hot days had gone by and we had nearly smothered sojourning in the closet, and no news of the combination. 'Don't tell mamma!' pleaded my wife. I began to think I should have to call in a locksmith, when one evening Aggie startled me by jumping out of bed crying, 'I've got it! I've got it!'

"'Got what—a nightmare?'

"'I've got the combination! I've been working on it all the time, and it just came to me in my sleep. Get right up, Joe, and hold the light, and mind you don't set anything on fire.' In another [illegible] the front of the chest fell down, and behold our household gods! 'If anybody wants to steal them between now and daylight, they can, that's all,' said Aggie; 'but I'm not going to shut that lock again to-night for anybody!'

"In the fall there was burglar scare about town, and Agnes' mother came over and gave her a lecture upon locking the windows. She said we really ought to have a burglar alarm. To please her, I had one put in. Election night I went down to town telling Aggie not to sit up for me, for I should wait for the returns. It was 1 o'clock when I opened the front door very softly, not to disturb Agnes. 'B-r-r-brr-ke-plunk!' I forgotten the alarm.

"Before I had time to say a word or even turn down my coat collar, my wife appeared at the head of the stairs. She pointed a pistol at me. Her hair hung loose, and she was in her—well, never mind; but she looked distractingly pretty.

"'If you come one step further I'll fire!' she cried.

"'It's Joe, Agnes,' said I, meekly.

"'I don't believe it! Take off you hat!'

"I took it off, and made her a low bow. 'Don't shoot your husband; he's doing the best he can.'

"Agnes laughed hysterically. 'Oh, Joe, I was so frightened.'

"I rushed upstairs and caught her. I took away the pistol, and wrapped her up in her dressing-gown. 'Do you think you ought to appear before burglars in this costume?' I inquired. She blushed. 'I never thought of that.'

"'And to think you should point a pistol at your own husband.'

"'It wasn't loaded, Joe.'

"'Agnes Lounsbury,' said I, 'do you mean to say you were so rash as to aim at me with a pistol that wasn't loaded?'

"'But I shouldn't have fired it, anyway; it wasn't cocked.'

"Well, this ends the watchman burglar alarm business,' said I. 'We've had about as much of it as we want. To-morrow we'll decide what silver we want to use every day, and the rest shall go down to the bank.'

"We're able to breathe now. The silver stands on the sideboard, and as yet nobody has carried it off; if they do Agnes' mother will say she expected it, for we aren't the careful people they used to be in her generation. Once in a while Aggie quarrels with me because some dish or other that would make a show for company is at the bank, and I don't see my way clear to bring it home under my arm. 'You can have them all home and trust to luck if you'd rather,' I say.

"'I'd rather they were at the bank, because then I should have them, you know.'

"'Don't see it,' said I; 'but it's just as you say.'

"When our anniversary came around we had a present and a note from one of Agnes' elderly friends. The note ran this way:

"My dear Mrs. Lounsbury: We send you our best congratulations on your anniversary. My husband will have his little joke, you know; and, as some one told him that the Lounsburys had had so much silver given them on their wedding that it was a positive embarrassment to them, he says you ought to be ashamed of being such plutocrats at your age, while the older generation has not even accumulated souvenir spoons, and sends you this little gift to remind you of the fact——'

"'Oh, Joe! it's silver!' for I had punched a hole in the paper. 'No, it isn't. It's a pudding dish, or for oysters, you know. How kind. And plated, too. It didn't cost much, Joe, did it?'

"'A few dollars, I should think.'

"'How good! Perhaps even less, Joe?'

"'Perhaps so; it's rather light weight.'

"'Isn't it delightful? We'll have some oysters in it to-morrow night, and ask them over to tea.'

"'I should feel dreadfully to have that taken,' I heard her murmur that evening.

"'What for?'

"'Because it's such a comfort to have one thing that you don't care whether it's stolen or not.'

"'You're getting sleepy, Aggie. But I know one thing that goes on, goes on forever.'

"'What?'

"'Our storage rent. I reckon in a few years we'll have paid for the whole outfit, and then we'll fetch it home and keep open house for burglars with a clean conscience.'

"'Don't be ridiculous, Joe,' said my wife."—New York Tribune.

Destruction Caused by Bagpipes.

A Scotch Highlander, dressed in kilts and carrying a set of bagpipes under his arm, appeared at Bar Harbor the other night and next morning at 8 o'clock strolled up Main street in search of a good place to try the bags on the natives. It is years since the uncanny music of the canny Scot has been played there, and it had a wonderful effect, the first tune causing no less than five simultaneous runaways among horses and the wrecking of two wagons and sets of harnesses. The bagpiper stopped in the middle of the tune to see the fun, and after he saw the destruction that one tune had wrought he let the wind out of the pipes and took the 10:30 o'clock boat for Bangor.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE IS HERE EXPOUNDED.

One of the Commonest of Sins—Secret of a Happy, Christian Life—Sermons Drawn from the Sayings of Wise Men.

Few Do It.

THERE is still existing a manuscript letter written by Sir Thomas More to his wife, Alyce, when the news came to him that his great mansion at Chelsea, with its offices and huge granaries, had been almost destroyed by fire.

Instead of lamenting over his loss, he bids her first "find out if any poor neighbors had stored their grain in the granaries," and if so, to recompense them. Secondly, to discharge no servant until he have another abiding-place; and lastly, to "be of good cheere, and take all the howsold with you to church, and there thank God for what Hee hath given us, and what Hee hath left us."

He urges her, "I pray you, Alyce, with my children, to be merry in God."

Most of us, if we had lost property and home in a night, would think we did well if we were patient under God's will; but to be cheerful and even "merry" in Him, is an almost forgotten grace.

Robert Louis Stevenson, in a prayer written for his family on the night before his death, asked that when the day returned it should find them strong to endure if it brought sorrow, and eager to be happy if happiness were their portion.

"Why," asked a Hindu sage, "why are the Christians melancholy men? If I believed as they say, that the great God was my Father and that His Son was my Elder Brother, I should not groan, though I lost a few bushels of wheat, or even an eye. I should be of all men most happy and gay. They do not believe what they say."

David, whose life was full of struggles and griefs and sins, taught the world its hymns, full of a mighty, joyous thanksgiving.

Paul in prison, knowing that death in its most painful shape might be near, could exhort his friends not only to be patient, but to "rejoice in the Lord alway. And again I say," he adds, urgently, "Rejoice."

Most men will laugh when they are well-fed and their lives are comfortable, but it is a different thing to sing in prison, or when one's home is burning to find time to be kind to the poor and "merry in God," like old Sir Thomas More.

Life's Little Days.

One secret of sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on for us. We cannot carry this load until we are three score and ten. We cannot fight this battle continually for half a century. But really there are no long stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time. Even to-morrow is never ours till it becomes to-day and we have nothing whatever to do with it but to pass down to it a fair and good inheritance in to-day's work well done and to-day's life well lived.

It is a blessed secret, this of living by the day. Any one can carry his burden, however heavy, till night fall. Any one can do his work, however hard, for one day. Any one can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly and purely till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means to us—just one little day. "Do to-day's duty; fight to-day's temptation and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you cannot see and could not understand if you saw them." God gives us nights to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We cannot see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living.—Golden Censer.

The Sin of Worrying.

This is one of the commonest of sins. It also is one of the most reprehensible. Many to whom gross temptations present no attractions yield to this one almost without a struggle. It is wholly unreasonable, and, when allowed to become a habit, it is full of torment. It spoils one's own peace and renders one a source of continual distress and annoyance to others.

Worrying is fretting because matters have gone wrong or are supposed to be destined to go wrong. If the former be true, worrying does no good, even when we are conscious of having been in fault. Go to work bravely and remedy what is amiss, so far as possible, and what cannot be remedied bear with Christian patience and courage. If the latter be true, do not assume that the threatening evil must befall, but do your best to prevent or lessen it, and remember that God allows evil as well as good to happen, that seeming evil often results in blessing, and that, should the worst come, probably in time you will find reason to thank God for it.

No one has any right to throw the doubt upon the divine wisdom and goodness which worrying involves. No one may rightly depress and discourage others thus. Worrying is distrusting God. It is refusing to believe that his promises are true and that his power is invincible. It is peculiarly dangerous and disheartening because it finds such a field in the realm of little things. It promotes peevishness, suspicion and needless faultfinding. It warps one's sense of moral proportion, making light of serious things and magnifying molehills into mountains.—The Congregationalist.

To Meet the Demands.

Some day we are to go forth in our spiritual responsibilty, and to meet the demands of our spiritual existence. The soul, buried under the cares of life, thrills when it hears such tidings as that. Is it ready—is it in any way getting ready—for such resurrection? See how the whole evangelical experience starts with such an intelligence. The soul brought face to face with its destiny feels its utter unfitness for it. Sin and stains are on its garments. It must have some deliverer. It must find its spiritual world for which it feels its unfitness, for which it must be fit. It cries out for Christ. Christ comes, and the mysterious work of pardon and regeneration passes between him and the soul; and then the soul, with a spiritual immortality now set clearly before it, goes to work to struggle with itself, to conquer down its yet remaining sin, to win Christ perfectly, to be good, pure and holy.—Bishop Brooks.

Press the Battle!

Now press the revival battle. Press it with agonizing prayer. Press it with persistent faith. Press it with dauntless courage. Press it with consuming zeal. Press the battle by pungent preaching. Press it by soul-stirring songs. Press it by personal solicitation. Press it at the church. Press it in the homes of the unsaved. Press it wherever an unconverted soul is to be found. Press the battle until lukewarm saints are aroused. Press it until backsliders repent. Press it until prodigals come home. Press it until pungent conviction settles down upon all the people. Press it until heaven shall become vocal with songs of joy. Press the battle! Press the battle!—Epworth Herald.

A Wooden Church 700 Years Old.

The "Stavekirche" at Borgund, Norway, depicted here, is one of the most venerable wooden edifices in the world.

THE OLD WOODEN CHURCH.

The interior of the church consists of a large, semi-square auditorium and a smaller and narrower choir, which latter ends in a semi-circular recess, within which is the altar. An open gallery surrounds the church. Light enters only through small, round holes under the main roof, so that the worshipers are always shrouded in that semi-darkness so favorable to meditation.

Calm After Struggle.

There are some spirits which must go through a discipline analogous to that sustained by Elijah. The storm struggle must precede the still small voice. There are minds which must be convulsed with doubt before they can repose in faith. There are hearts which must be broken with disappointment before they can rise into hope. Blessed is the man who, when the tempest has spent its fury, recognizes his Father's voice in its undertone, and bares his head and bows his knee as Elijah did. To such spirit it seems as if God had said, "In the still sunshine and ordinary ways of life you cannot meet me; but, like Job, in the desolation of the tempest you shall see my form and hear my voice, and know that your Redeemer liveth."—F. W. Robertson.

Do Not Neglect to Pray.

Dear children, do not neglect to pray, but make it one of the most pleasing duties. God hears the prayers of good and true children. When you begin to pray—whether it is in the temple or at home—then "know before whom thou standest" and feel that you are before God, and that His loving eye is upon you and that He will answer you when you pray with humility and devotion.

There is nothing to equal a lavender pillow for tired heads. The pillow is filled with dried lavender and gives forth that refreshing odor always so pleasant. The covers are made of fine white linen delicately embroidered with violets.

The steamer Joseph L. Colby has been chartered to tow three coal-laden barges from Philadelphia to Montreal. This is thought to be one of the largest runs on record for a steamer to tow two barges, the distance being about 1,600 miles.

Baltimore, the new estate of George Vanderbilt, in North Carolina, has 95,000 acres, and the system of roadways is so perfect that Mr. Vanderbilt, who is a wheelman, can go 100 miles over the macadamized road without going off his estate.

Westminster Hall has been closed to the public, except when under surveillance, since the dynamite explosion eleven years ago. The St. James Gazette suggests that it is time to take away the policemen and to let visitors enter the hall freely.

A league for the elimination of foreign words from the French language has been formed in Paris. It is not likely to be more successful than the German association to turn the French element out of German has been in translating the bill of fare.

It is a curious coincidence that while the hundredth anniversary of Edward Jenner's first successful vaccination in the little Gloucestershire village where he practiced was being celebrated throughout Europe the town of Gloucester was suffering from an epidemic of smallpox.

A method of mummifying the dead by absorption of humidity and grasses after the body is placed in the coffin has been devised by an Italian named Vercelloni. The body seems to be preserved as if in life, except that the color is the yellowish copper tint peculiar to Egyptian mummies.

A German inventor has hit upon a method of putting stone soles on boots and shoes. He mixes a waterproof glue with a suitable quantity of clean quartz sand and spreads it over the leather sole used as a foundation. These quartz soles are said to be very flexible and practically indestructible.

A sensational mining discovery has been made in the Black Jack mine in Oneida County, Utah, not far from Preston. In a coal mine it was found there were rich deposits of silver, and the discovery has created the greatest excitement. The country for miles around has been located.

Greece has determined to have Olympic games at Athens every four years. The stadium is to be completed in Pentelic marble, M. Averoff, of Alexandria, who gave 1,000,000 drachmae to have the race course put in order, having promised to give 500,000 drachmae ($100,000) a year for the purpose.

Japan has now $75,000,000 on deposit in the Bank of England to her credit, and $10,000,000 in the Bank of Germany—this being the amount of the installment recently paid by China on war indemnity account. Most of this money will stay in Europe, and will be spent there by Japan for ships and munitions of war.

France's hay crop being a failure, M. Meline, the Premier, has ordered professors of agriculture throughout the country to suspend their lectures and to proceed to the rural districts, where they will try to persuade the farmers to sow vetches, corn and other fodder to make up for the hay, and make use of oil cake, straw, bran and corn.

A bass viol player in distress and unable to pay his rent crawled into his big fiddle to die in Paris recently. He was missed after a day and discovered on the landlady seizing the viol for rent. It was found difficult to get him out, even after the back of the viol had been removed, and as the man is insane no explanation of how he got into his instrument has been found.

A man in Milwaukee has inaugurated what may become a general custom all over the country. He has converted the basement of a large office building into a storage-room for bicycles, with attendants to clean the wheels and care for them and to make repairs when necessary. No charge is made for checking or caring for the bicycles when they are left by tenants of the building. The storage-room is maintained as an attraction for tenants.

The managers of the Cunard line of transatlantic steamers make the claim that, during the entire history of their company, extending back, as it does, to the day when steam was unknown as a motive power, they have never lost a passenger, and the worst accident to any of their vessels was going aground. This casualty has occurred to two of their ships, and in each case the vessel was saved. Such a record is without parallel in the history of navigation.

An incendiary with a mania for burning saw-mills has broken loose in the neighborhood of Farmersburg, south of Terre Haute. Within the past month four mills have been burned, entailing a total loss. The fires have left the entire country to the south, for a radius of twenty miles, without a mill, and as the country is heavily wooded the deficiency is keenly felt. No insurance was carried upon the majority of the mills, and their owners find themselves unable to rebuild.

A queer custom was observed for the two hundred and fiftieth time at Leighton Buzzard, England, this year in accordance with the will of a London merchant, who founded ten almshouses in the town. The trustees, accompanied by the town crier and a band of boys carrying green boughs, beat the boundaries of the parish, stopping at the properties from whose incomes the charities are supported. At all these places one boy stood on his head while the will was read. After the procession plum rolls were given to the boys. Until recently half a pint of beer was given, but this has been suppressed, rolls being distributed to all the school children instead. In the evening the trustees, the town crier and the inmates of the almshouses dined together.

A Frightened Cadet.

Last winter, in a time of sudden thaws and wide extremes of temperature, the authorities at West Point issued a daily order defining the limits on the river within which the cadets were allowed to skate. So says the Illustrated American, which goes on to relate an adventure of a second-class man, who found himself one afternoon far outside the limits.

He first became aware of his transgression when he saw an officer on skates bearing down upon him. Anxious to conceal his identity, and to save himself punishment and demerits, he turned and skated for the shore.

A glance over his shoulder showed the officer striking out after him in real earnest. Never did cadet skate faster, but the officer drew steadily nearer. Happily, as the cadet thought, an outstretching point of land was just ahead.

Straight up on the rocky shore dashed the cadet, behind the little lighthouse, and ran up through the woods, with his skates still on his feet. Breathless, he reached cadet limits, and a quick glance around told him that he had eluded his pursuer.

Then he took off his skates and hastened to the barracks, to be ready for the roll-call that would most likely be ordered for the purpose of detecting the guilty skater. No such roll-call was ordered, however, and at parade that night an order was read extending the skating limits, and during the evening the pursuing officer called at the cadet's door to say:

"You are a very good skater, Mr. A. If I could have overtaken you, I would have told you that the limits were extended, and that you might skate even farther than you did. But then, I dare say you found the exercise you had quite sufficient."

WHO DEMONETIZED SILVER?

Frederick A. Luckenbach, being first duly sworn on oath, deposes and says:

I am 62 years of age; I was born in Bucks county, Penn.; I removed to Philadelphia in the year 1856, and continued to reside there until 1866, when I removed to the city of New York. In Philadelphia I was in the furniture business. In New York I branched into machinery and inventions, and am the patentee of of Luckenbach's pneumatic pulverizer, which machines are now in use generally in the eastern part of the United States and Europe. I now reside in Denver, having removed from New York two years ago. I am well known in New York. I have been a member nf the produce exchange and am well acquainted with many members of that body. I am well known by Mr. Erastus Wyman.

In the year 1856 I visited London, England, for the purpose of placing there Pennsylvania oil properties, in which I am interested. I took with me letters of introduction to many gentleman of London, among them one Mr. Ernest Seyd, from Robert M. Foust, ex-Treasurer of Philadelphia. I became well acquainted with Mr. Seyd, and with his brother Richard Seyd, who, I understand, is still living. I visited London thereafter every year, and at each visit renewed my acquaintance with Mr. Seyd, and upon each occasion became his guest, joining his family at dinner or other meals.

In February, 1874, while on one of these visits, and while his guest for dinner, I, among other things, alluded to the things afloat, of parliamentary corruptions, and expressed astonishment that such corruption should exist. In reply to this he told me he could relate facts about the corruption of the American Congress that would place it far ahead of the English parliament in that line. So far the conversation was at the dinner table between us. His brother Richard, and others, were there also, but this was table talk between Mr. Ernest Seyd and myself, After the dinner ended he invited me into another room, where he resumed the conversation about legislative corruption, and said: "If you will pledge me your honor as a gentleman not to divulge what I am about to tell you while I live, I will convince you that what I said about the corruption of the American Congress is true." I gave him the promise and he then continued:

"I went to America in the Winter of 1872-3 authorized to secure, if I could, the passage of a bill demonetizing silver, it was to the interest of those I represented—the governors of the Bank of England—to have it done. I took with me £100,000 sterling, with instructions that if that was not sufficient to accomplish the object to draw for another £100,000 or as much more as was necessary." He told me German bankers were also interested in having it accomplished. He said he was the financial adviser of the bank. He said: "I saw the committees of the House and Senate, and paid the money and stayed in America until I knew the measure was safe." I asked him if he would give the names of the members to whom ne paid the money, but this he declined to do. He said: "Your people will not now comprehend the far-reaching extent of that measure, but they will in after years. Whatever you may think of corruption in the English parliament, I assure you I would not have dared to make such an attempt here as I did in your country." I expressed my shame to him for my countrymen in our legislative bodies. The conversation drifted into other subjects, and after that, though I met him many times, the matter was never again referred to.

(Signed) FREDERICK A. LUCKENBACH.
Subscribed and sworn to before me at Denver, the ninth day of May, A. D. 1892.
(Signed) JAMES A. MILLER,
[SEAL] Clerk Supreme Court, State of Colorado.

That this affidavit is authentic can be verified by hundreds of men both in Colorado, New York and Philadelphia, who stand ready to vouch for the truthfulness of Mr. Luckenbach, while the whole transaction is familiar to hundreds of people conversant with legislation during the exciting times from '70 to '75.

The advocates of the single gold standard will not acknowledge that they are advocating a British or European policy in demanding a continuation of the twenty years or more of British monometalist rule at Washington. It must have cost the British and European bankers a large amount of money since 1872-3 to keep Congress and the Senate and the large army of American single gold standard papers throughout the United States working in the foreigners' interest and against that of American silver. But the profits of the business are large; they could well afford to pay a few odd millions. The $30,000,000 of American silver produced last year when purchased at half price by England and when coined into rupees for India would buy $60,000,000 of wheat and cotton, half the value it used to have in the markets of the world. Thirty million dollars a year is a good profit for investing a few odd millions in purchasing legislation and the untruthful utterances of the single gold standard advocates. England demonetizes silver in the United States, and then demonetized gold in India, hence the profits in the double transaction. What the United States requires is the unlimited coinage of both gold and silver (at the ratio of 16 to 1), as stipulated in the Constitution of the United States, or can the Supreme Court (which seems to be the highest legislative authority in the land) not be induced to find on American principles that the single gold standard is British rule and unconstitutional?—Mining Journal.

It is astonishing how prevalent the idea is that from some inate quality possessed by gold it has a definite and unchangeable value. Nothing is more false and absurd. The commodity-value of gold does not fluctuate because at the mints in all the leading nations of Europe and in the United States 25·8 grains can be coined into one hundred cents at the will of the owner. Were this not the case the price of gold in the market would fluctuate like that of any other commodity. The fact that it can be changed into money at the will of the possessor, gives gold its divine character. Besides this anyone han take uncoined gold to the Bank of England and get its coinage value, for a law of Great Britain compels the bank to buy it at that price. That law was enacted for two objects; one was to preserve stability fn the commodity price of gold and the other to secure to Great Britain command of the gold resources of the world.

Smith, Wm.
Hoskins, B. A.
Griggs, John
Macmillan, H. J.
Rhodes, H. M.
Chavez, Andres

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

Tom Webb and H. Giles returned to Long Valley early in the week.

Mrs. Rooney was down from Big Pine early in the week on a visit to her sister, Mrs. J. R. Moffett.

Several of our local prospectors are contemplating making a trip to Randsburg in the near future.

A. L. Conklin, wife and child, and Mrs. John Shepherd returned from their summer outing in Onion valley on Tuesday last.

P. H. Mack, Esq., will in all probability arrive at Independence next Wednesday, after a stay of two months in Mexico.

J. J. Gann returned from a visit to Mojave on Tuesday last. He reports the weather there as quite warm, the thermometer marking 102.

John Baxter and wife, Miss Waldrip, Miss S. Malone, Miss J. Baxter and Messrs. Harper and Moore started for Kern river and Mt. Whitney last Wednesday, on a pleasure trip.

It will be good news for tax-payers to learn that the State tax rate this year will be only 46 cents, against 68¼ cents last year. In these hard times, this saving will be appreciated by all.

N. E. Conklin, Esq., of Bakersfield, came down from Bishop on Wednesday. He expects to return to Bakersfield in a few days. He has not been here for several years and was kept busy shaking hands with old friends.

Henry Levy, Sam Gruber, Jacob Pfohl and L. Wilder, will leave for the Coso springs to-morrow morning. All the gentlemen are sufferers from rheumatism, and feel confident that the curative properties of these springs will effect a cure.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Richards came up from Keeler last Saturday and remained over Sunday. Mr. Richards has resigned his position as Railroad Agent at Keeler, and will soon leave for other parts. Mr. Richards has been in the employ of the Railroad Company for several years, and has made many warm friends in this and other sections where he has been stationed, by his kind, obliging and strictly business methods, who will regret his departure.

The rock drilling contest at the State Fair next month will be in charge of three judges. Six prizes will be awarded, one a purse of $400, $250 to winning team, $100 to second, $50 to third in a double-hand contest on a down hole in Folsom granite. A second purse of $400, $200 to winning team, $100 to second, $50 to third, will be given for a double-handed contest on a one-half upper-hole at an angle of about forty-five degrees. All entries close Sept. 1st. Letters postmarked that date will be received. An entrance fee of $5 for each man will be required. The contests begin Sept. 7th, at the Pavilion, Sacramento. No one anywhere is barred.

Guy Stockton came down from Mojave July 21st. He says the interest in mining matters out on the desert is on the increase, and there are strong indications that there will be some money spent in substantial development work. The day he left Mojave, J. C. Campbell of the law firm of Reddy, Campbell & Metson, came in with a party of five en route to the mines. The law firm in question has a one-fourth interest in the Moore & Singleton mine and Mr. Campbell was going out to see what should be done with the property. He had a surveyor with him and it was reported that he was going to have a line run for a pipe line to carry water to the place where a mill is to be erected. If the water can be secured, it is reported that a mill of fifty stamps will be erected for working their own ore and to do custom work.—Bakersfield Echo.

Old Inquiries by an Old Timer.

SAN DIEGO, CALIF., July 28, 1896.

A. W. Eibeshutz, Esq.: DEAR SIR—It is a little over two years since the inclosed letter was indited. The reason for receiving no answer is now fully explained. How I failed to send it at the time it was written is now beyond my ken, except that it has just now come to light from among an unused mass of political economy manuscripts.

In sending at this late day, I trust you will pardon the seeming neglect and still take time to answer the requests for information it contains.

I intend to make a trip to Owens River this year (some time) if it is possible to get away from affairs here long enough to do so

With many kind remembrances to your family and other friends, I am, as ever,

Very truly yours,

GEO. K. PHILLIPS.

SAN DIEGO, June 27, 1894.

Your kind favor came duly to hand Was glad to hear from you, but sorry to learn of the misfortunes of our old friends Bacon and McKellips. How time flies! and with its flight comes the strange and inevitable things you speak of.

* * Is anything being done on the old locations around Chrysopolis or San Carlos? Has the railroad a station at either of these places or at Bend City? Should like to take a run up this Fall and wander around some of our old landmarks. By the way, are there any hotels in any of the localities mentioned?

That soda business at the lake is an old idea of mine, but the suggestion was laughed at in Independence.

Has any mining been done in Mazourka Canyon? Old Gid Whiteman claimed that some of those lime belts ranging from near the mouth of the canyon across in the direction of the Green Monster strongly resembled the locality surrounding the Eberhardt mines, at White Pine.

Do you still hold on to the Ygnacio and the Eclipse? I met a man here a few years ago by the name of Bevans, who said he had bought some of my old locations in the vicinity of San Carlos, and was intending to develop them for a Philadelphia company. Am afraid the result was not very flattering to said company.

Let me request the favor of an answer to questions asked herein, and further favor me with a short synopsis of mining ventures now under way or in contemplation on the Inyo Range from Deep Spring Valley to Cerro Gordo—a bare mention of the principal ones is sufficient—I shall be greatly obliged. Is V. G. Thompson still running the Independence hotel—the Blaney House?

This place has passed through and is still undergoing a period of great depression. A river, like Owens River, would make it the garden of the State; scarcity of water is the great drawback. There is plenty to be had by the use of storage reservoirs and canals or pipes, but so far the great cost has acted as a wet blanket on all such projects. Yours, etc.

GEO. K. PHILLIPS.

Mining Deal in Telescope Range

PLEASANT CANYON, INYO CO., CAL. Aug. 6, 1896.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT: As there seems to be a misapprehension as to the true state of facts connected with the deal now going on here, the following may not only be interesting to the public but will convey some idea of the importance of the mineral resources of this county that has heretofore laid dormant, but which is now being investigated and being bought up by outside capital.

The amount, $5,000, stated in one of your former issues as the consideration for the property is but a drop in the bucket as to the real price which the owners will receive. From personal knowledge, the true facts are that through the exertion of L. de Tourniel and Ogden Hoffman, Mr. Wiley—a prominent and world known mining expert—was brought to examine the mines. Messrs Tourniel and Hoffman had before interesting Mr. Wiley secured options upon what is known as the Friday group of mines. Upon examination Mr. Wiley immediately saw the value of the property and secured options and bonds upon other properties situated adjacent and in other sections of the district. And the owners will receive a partial payment upon August 24th greatly in excess of the amount stated in issue of July 24th.

Yours, R. DEEKER.

Something of an Egg.

LONE PINE, Aug. 10.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT: You will find herewith an egg, laid by a half-breed Spanish hen three years old. She has been in the habit of laying double-yolk eggs, but this time she astonished herself and me also.

See measurement: Eight inches longitudinal; six inches in circumference.

Can the County beat it? Can the State do so? Yours, truly,

PALMER.

Good Roads.

All those interested in the matter of "Good Roads" should be sure and attend the meeting to be held at the Court House on Tuesday, August 25th. Hon Marsden Manson, State Highway Commissioner, will addresss the meeting. All our people should be interested in this subject, and should attend the meeting, and learn what the people of the other portions of the State are doing in the matter, and how they are doing it.

Thanks.

To the kind friends who assisted me during my time of trouble and distress, I desire to express my heartfelt thanks. It is only in such times of trouble that true, disinterested friendship is thoroughly appreciated. And I desire to state that those who so willingly gave me their aid will ever be remembered.

W. H. HUFF.

A few Silver Coated Pills from Lower Inyo.

Thomas Boland is expected home this week.

Charles Anthony is still in Los Angeles and is doing good work for the mining interests of his section.

The bicycle raffled off last week in Keeler was won by Pat Connell, employed at Bolands. His lucky shake was 43. He sold the wheel.

Keeler was almost depopulated on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week on account of a ladies' convention at Independence. The meeting came to order in Judge Davidsno's court room, and was a very spirited affair. Bryan will probably be endorsed.

Mr. D. Holland, Miss Edna Shepherd, Mrs. W. M. Richards, Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle and Mrs. A. L. Boland and others were among the visitors from Keeler to Independence last week.

A. L. Kilpatrick, the flour mill man of Bishop, was in Keeler last week, enjoying the cool lake breezes and change of climate. He says he will start up the mill soon and be prepared to furnish flour of number one quality to all.

Mr. W. M. Richards has tendered his resignation as agent at Keeler, and will probably remain in Inyo county for a few weeks to settle up business affairs before his departure to South Africa. Mr. Richards has been stationed at Keeler for five years, and has given general satisfaction in all his dealings with the public.

JUSTICE.

Precinct Register

The following is a list of the voting precincts with the number of voters who have registered:

|---|---|
| Round Valley | 48 |
| Lincoln | 79 |
| Bishop | 236 |
| Laws | 39 |
| Poleta | 17 |
| Cottonwood | 5 |
| Big Pine | 118 |
| Fish Springs | 38 |
| Taboose | 17 |
| Independence | 138 |
| Citrus | 12 |
| Georges Creek | 56 |
| Lone Pine | 80 |
| Keeler | 29 |
| Cerro Gordo | 14 |
| Darwin | 26 |
| Panamint | 32 |
| Olancha | 9 |
| Modock | 14 |
| Total | 1010 |

This total will probably be increased by a few as some of the precincts have only limited mail facilities, and all the names have not yet been received by the Clerk.

About Bloomers.

Bloomers have caused a social upheaval in the town of Mountain Grove, Mo. A few evenings ago several of the leading society belles appeared in bloomers at a church entertainment. The good sisters of the various churches sent up a terrible howl, denouncing the young women as simply outrageous in their conduct. One of the local papers condemned the costumes as vulgar, and the rival paper championed the bloomer cause. The leading clergyman of the place has shocked his congregation by coming out squarely for the new woman on the plea of dress reform. The best families of the town are arrayed against each other, and at the last reports it was impossible to tell whether bloomers or petticoats had the best of the battle.

Will Hold a Fair.

A citizens' meeting was held at the Pavilion on Saturday evening last for the purpose of discussing the Fair question. A committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions, to report Monday evening. On that date another meeting was held and the committee reported having raised five hundred dollars, with a certainty of adding considerably to that amount. It was determined in consequence to hold an Annual Fair at Independence this year, under the management of the Directors of the Eighteenth District Agricultural Association. As soon as a meeting of the Directors can be held the date of holding the Fair will be announced and the racing programme published.

From Aberdeen.

The religious services conducted by Mr. Nicholas, of Independence, at Taboose School House were tolerably well attended last Sunday. These services are held the second Sunday of every month, at 11 a. m., and everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Mr. Ambrose Smith, the "sweet" man of Fish Springs, was in Aberdeen last Sunday.

Mr. Neil's haying crew of "Native Sons" in some way obtained some fire water, which made them so hilarious that it was some time before they would condescend to perform manual labor.

AURORA.

May Lose His Leg.

From a private letter we learn that Mike Reddy, who had his knee so badly crushed a couple of weeks ago at Darwin, and who was taken to San Francisco for treatment, is in danger of losing his leg, as all the bones of the knee are crushed or splinterered, and small hopes are entertained by the physicians in charge of saving the member.

According to a local paper Nevada City has a beer mine. The man at the windlass said: "You see, we've been engaged to clean out this old shaft to be used as a well by the landlord yonder. As we dig down we strike bottles of beer—that is, our partner finds them. He has only let us see a half dozen of them so far, but if the supply don't run out soon he will be in condition to turn his job over to us, and be hauled to the top in a bucket." For years the hotel man used the shaft to keep his beer cool in.

Sheriff Given and Treasurer Bunney left for a hunting and fishing trip in the Kern river section.

County Clerk Hession returned from Bishop and the upper country on Monday last.

POLITICAL ANNONCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends, expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

ONE OF THE QUEEREST OF LAKES.

A Puzzle to Geologists In the Blue Grass Region of Kentucky.

Sinking creek, in the northwestern part of this county, is not a running stream or creek, as one would imagine from its name, but it is a large lake, which forms only in the spring of the year, when thaws and rainfall produce an overabundance of water. The formation of a lake covering over 200 acres of land and sometimes over 300 comes with the suddenness of a rise in the Mississippi river.

The lake is formed in a hollow entirely surrounded by gradually inclined hills of blue grass fields and meadows. These hills are at first imperceptible to the eye on account of the gradual and even slope of the surrounding country. A closer examination of the country shows that for miles around it all gradually inclines to the place where the springtime lake forms, but the place itself is merely a slightly rolling tract of land, over which various fences, trees and shrubberies are seen. As the lake depends on the rainfall for its supply of water, it is larger some years than others and has been known to cover 350 acres of land and the water all the way from 5 to 30 feet deep. This body of water is a veritable Mecca for duck hunters at the time of the year when ducks pass through Kentucky on their way to the northern lakes.

There is no outlet above the earth in the way of a creek or hollow. There is no cave or sink hole on any of the land which is covered by water through which the water may escape. Yet within one month this immense amount of water disappears. After the disappearance the earth which is covered, instead of being a wet, marshy place, as is the case of an ordinary springtime rise in water, is a beautiful, fertile, blue grass vale, over which blooded Kentucky stock roam during the summer months and fatten on the rich pasturage. No appearance of a marsh or water weeds, etc., is found after the lake has gone.

Exactly what causes the "sinking" of the lake has never been determinated, although various geologists have visited the scene. It is a well known fact that quicksilver thrown into a pond or lake will cause it to soon sink, and it is claimed that the water forming this lake, as it is drained down from the surrounding hills, brings with it a composition of some kind similar to mercury or quicksilver in its action on sinking a lake, and that this is the key to the mystery of Sinking creek.—Nicholasville Letter in Cincinnati Enquirer.

A fat French lady despairingly says, "I am so fat that I pray for a disappointment to make me thin, but no sooner does the disappointment come than the joy at the prospect of getting thin makes me fatter than ever."

Improving the Telescope.

Prof. C. S. Hastings, of Yale, has devised a method of shaping and combining two lenses of ordinary optical glass in such a manner as to do away with the outstanding color due to chromatic aberration, which has always been a source of more or less trouble, even in the best of modern telescopes. It is estimated that the improvement will increase the effective power of telescopes about 10 per cent.

Odors and Photography.

Every photographer knows that singular differences exist in the actinic action of light on succeeding days which, so far as general appearances go, seem to be equally favorable for photographic purposes. This may be partly explained by the recent discovery by Monsieur Declaux of Paris, that the odors arising from vegetation and disseminated through the air diminish the actinic power of the solar radiations which reach the surface of the ground.

Texas Sulphur.

The best known sulphur deposits in the world are those of Sicily, but according to Mr. Eugene A. Smith, of the University of Alabama, Texas may possibly enter the field as a producer of commercial sulphur. The deposits examined in Texas are situated in a large basin some forty miles northwest of Pecos, but others are said to exist both to the west and north of this locality. The nearest railroad is twenty miles from the sulphur basin, and the surrounding country contains no fuel and very little surface water.

A Hiding Plant.

Many insects and other members of the animal kingdom mimic the forms and colors of plants and other natural objects, for the supposed purpose of concealment from enemies, but it is rare to find a similar peculiarity in plants. An instance of this, however, has been noticed at the Cape of Good Hope, where a species of mesembryanthemum, or fig-marigold, so closely resembles the stones amid which it grows, both in color and form, that it frequently escapes the attention of cattle and other browsing animals. South Africa presents other instances of what is called protective mimicry in plants.

Ingenious Chimpanzees.

A recent report by Prof. O. F. Cook on colonization in Liberia gives some interesting facts about the chimpanzees living in that country. It appears that these animals, which bear such curious resemblances to men that the natives call them "old-time people," are very fond of the flesh of land crabs, which they dig out of the burrows. To crack open the shells of the crabs they dash them against rocks. They also crack nuts with stones in the regular human fashion; and most curious of all, perhaps, they kill pythons by grasping the huge serpents about the neck and beating their heads with stones.

Going Astray at Sea.

The difficulty of keeping a modern steamship on a straight course is pointed out in the Scientific American. The helmsman steers by the compass, and while a single degree of deviation appears very small on the compass card, it would, if continued, carry a fast steamship four miles out of her course in a single day's run. Yet the compass gives the course more accurately than the ship can be steered. Owing to the deflecting power of the waves and the rolling of the ship, which causes first one of her propellers and then the other, if she be of the twin-screw type, to exert the greater effect, the course is continually shifted a little this way and that, despite the helm. The only safety is in correcting the compass course by frequent observations of the sun, moon and stars.

History in a Tree.

In the British Museum of Natural History there is a section of the trunk of a large fir-tree from British Columbia, the growth rings of which indicate that is was more than 500 years old when it was cut down in 1885. A correspondent of Nature calls attention to the fact that about twenty of the annual rings of growth, making the latter part of the first hundred years of the tree's existence, are crowded together in a remarkable manner, indicating that during those twenty years some cause was in operation greatly retarding the growth of the tree. On looking into history the correspondent found that, nearly at the time when the tree in question was evidently suffering from very adverse conditions, Asia and Europe were undergoing extraordinary disturbances from earthquakes, atmospheric convulsions, the failure of crops, pestilential diseases, etc. China, in particular, suffered even more than Europe. He therefore suggests that possibly the crowded rings in the trunk of the tree may be a record of the existence of the same unusual conditions affecting animal and vegetable life at that time in North America also; and he shows that if the tree had reached its full growth, and ceased to form new rings a few years before it was felled in 1885, the correspondence in time would be complete.

Colorado Cloudburst.

A writer in Travel describes a cloudburst which came without warning, one hot, stifling day, upon the dwellers at Magnetic Springs, in Southern Colorado.

The clouds gathered in the hills behind the turn, and came drifting like frightened sheep before the breath of a strong west wind. No thought of danger occurred to us until, in an awful hush, with no lightning-flash, no thunder-peal, they broke, and death came down.

The flood seized the canon like a channel; flume-wise it bore to the valley the cloud-sent torrent of the hills. The hotel stood full in the path of the flood. If the builder had not wrought better than any man knew, not one of us would have lived through the stressful time of boiling, foaming, hissing, roaring water, that leaped savagely against the walls, bit and tore at the foundations, caught every movable thing, as in the grip of a giant, and whirled and ground it to utter destruction.

"The cloud! The cloud has burst!" came the cry on every hand. With one impulse, everybody rushed to the corridor, there to huddle and hold to anything steady, half-med with the sudden and perilous shock.

Then some one shouted for the women and children to run within the office. We had hardly gained it when the back door gave way; the leaping flood rushed through the hall and parlors, and whirled their furnishings about like drift sticks in a swollen stream. We crouched there, watching them to fear and trembling.

The office had thick stone walls and but one door. Therein lay our hope of safety. Thought of succor was vain. No outcry we might make could possibly pierce through that elemental clamor, and summon the neighbors to our rescue. Earth and sky seemed to call and answer, one to another; earth in deep sinister rumblings, as though all its fountains were broken up, and the sky in an overtone of singing water, murderously swishing and thundering about our refuge.

It was over at last; the roars and hissing died down to the plash and pouring of rain. But still the house stood; we had a roof between us and the angry sky. Comfort is largely a matter of comparison. Now we rejoiced, though the place was full of wreck and ruin, and though the mud lay a foot thick wherever the flood had rolled.

By dint of hard labor one room was made habitable, and there, that night, we huddled about the stove that had somehow been groped for and dug out of the mud and then set up to warm us through the bitter chill that had come in the wake of the storm.

NEW AND CURIOUS MIRROR.

Invention of a German Chemist Which Is More Odd than Useful.

An ingenious German chemist has patented a process for making the most curious mirror in the world. Looking into it from one side you see your reflection. Looking into it from the other side it seems transparent. Its uses are likely to be manifold. It may be put up in front of the prescription counter of a drug store, for instance, and the outsider cannot see behind the case, but the pharmacist can see out into the store readily.

The magician Hermann is said to have ordered the importation of several for use in some new illusions he is preparing for the astonishment of the public. Holding it up in front of him he will be hid from the view of the audience, but he can see them through it readily. The process of manufacture, as remarked, is patented and has been given out as follows:

Dissolve one part by weight of silver nitrate in ten parts weight of water and label "No. 1."

Prepare another 10 per cent. solution of silver nitrate, but in larger quantity. To this add ammonia water, drop by drop, stirring carefully until the precipitate formed at first is completely dissolved, and label "No. 2."

Now add solution No. 1 to solution No. 2 until the odor of ammonia is no longer recognizable and the liquid has again become very turbid.

Next add 100 parts by weight of distilled water for every part of silver nitrate originally used in solution No. 2, and filter until it is clear. Label this "No. 3."

Prepare a reducing solution by dissolving eight parts weight of rochelle salts in 384 parts by weight of distilled water; boil and to the boiling solution add gradually a solution of three parts of silver nitrate in ten parts by weight of distilled water, and filter when cool and label "No. 4."

Clean the glass to be coated thoroughly, lay it on a perfectly level surface in a room of the temperature of about 25 degrees C. (77 degrees F.).

Mix equal parts of No. 3 (the depositing fluid) and No. 4 (the reducing fluid) and pour over the glass. The glass may, if preferred, be dipped in the solution.

The time required for the deposition of the layer of just the correct thickness has to be determined by the judgment of the operator in each case. This may be aided somewhat by observing a piece of white paper laid below the glass.

When a sufficient deposit of silver has been made (and much less is required than for an ordinary mirror), pour off the silvering liquid and rinse thoroughly with the distilled water and stand the mirror on edge to dry. Coat the silvered side with a solution of shellac, colorless, in alcohol, and finally frame the mirror with a backing of clear glass to protect the mirror surface from being scratched.

Mineral Fertilizers for the Cherry.

In no one of our fruits is the stone or seed so large in proportion to the whole as it is in the cherry. For this reason, and also because it perfects its fruit in very short time, mineral fertilizers in available form are always needed for the cherry tree. Some of the most productive and largest kinds of cherries are very apt to rot before they ripen. This is almost always an indication that mineral fertility, especially potash, is needed. It is the potash in the soil that not only perfects the seed, but is necessary also in giving the color to the fruit that makes it attractive. The most highly-colored fruits require, therefore, liberal supplies of the potash fertilizers.

Woman's Experience on a Jury.

Mrs. Warren, who recently served as foreman on a jury in Denver, says: "As a matter of interest to the public, and particularly to ladies who in the future may be called upon to serve upon juries, I will say that in my own experience there has been nothing which should deter any lady from serving on a jury."

Boston's Badly Planned Library.

The great new Boston public library has already been found to have been ill planned and inadequate. It cost $2,500,000, and now $25,000 is about to be expended to construct a "suitable reading-room."

When you think of the worthlessness of some people you cannot wonder at their poverty.

It is age that makes a man look old; in a woman's case, it is "trouble."

A DANGEROUS BIRD.

What Will Happen Some Day to an Incautious Hunter of Blue Herons.

"Some of these days," said the long-shore hunter, "I expect to open my daily paper and see a headline something like this, 'Killed by a Blue Heron,' and I'll tell you why. The blue heron is a big, powerful bird which has already badly disfigured the faces of several men. The men have wounded a bird, and then thinking to capture it alive they went up to it. Why, I'd as soon try to kiss a wounded grizzly. The birds grow as tall as 6 feet, and have necks like a fish rod and just the kind of muscles to move it the quickest with the most strength. They could drive their bill points through a quarter inch panel.

"The hunter goes up to the bird and sees it lying there looking as innocent as a robin, with only a wing broken. 'What a fine pet it would make,' the fool hunter thinks. Then he picks the bird up and starts for home in a wagon or a boat, with the bird between his knees. The bird's neck is drawn back like a letter 'S.' All of a sudden the bill shoots up and gives the man a gash alongside the eye three inches long. That is what always has happened. The wounded bird has missed its aim, but sometimes—and you want to remember it—this feathered spearman will drive its bill far into its enemy's eye, and like a steel umbrella stick the point of the bill will penetrate the man's brain. I guess the bird's aim has always been spoiled by the pain of its wounds, and so many a human life has been saved. I don't monkey with wounded bitterns, or cranes—well, scarcely."—New York Sun.

A Homely Court.

A backwoods court is thus described in the Cincinnati Enquirer: "A desperado was offended at the court and used unbecoming language, and when fined for contempt claimed that he could not be guilty of contempt, since there was no courthouse. The squire ordered a circle made to represent a courthouse, whereupon the desperado got outside of the line and renewed his insults. When told that he disturbed the court, he said, 'Make your courthouse larger.' Another line was drawn, with similar results, and still others, until the murmurings ceased to disturb the court. Another defendant was guilty of a breach of the peace. The court sent him to jail, writing the following mittimus: 'Jailer of Garrard county, you will please lock John Blevin up in jail and keep him until I call for him. He has been cuttin up and cussin and tryin to fight.'"

What Touched Thackeray.

At the sale of Lady Blessington's household furniture, her library, her pictures, porcelain, plate and some of her jewelry, which were disposed of before she left London for the last time, one little incident ought not to be forgotten. A French servant of Lady Blessington's wrote her a letter in which he told her that he had observed many of her friends passing through the rooms, and he added that "Mr. Thackeray had to cover his eyes to hide his tears."—Speaker.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Blood Poison.

Contagious Blood Poison has been appropriately called the curse of mankind. It is the one disease that physicians cannot cure; their mercurial and potash remedies only bottle up the poison in the system, to surely break forth in a more virulent form, resulting in a total wreck of the system.

Mr. Frank B. Martin, a prominent jeweler at 926 Pensylvania Ave., Washington, D.C., says: "I was for a long time under treatment of two of the best physicians of this city, for a severe case of blood poison, but my condition grew worse all the while, notwithstanding the fact that they charged me three hundred dollars. My mouth was filled with eating sores; my tongue was almost eaten away, so that for three months I was unable to taste any solid food. My hair was coming out rapidly, and I was in a horrible fix. I had tried various treatments, and was nearly discouraged, when a friend recommended S.S.S. After I had taken four bottles, I began to get better, and when I had finished eighteen bottles, I was cured sound and well, my skin was without a blemish, and I have had no return of the disease. S.S.S. saved me from a life of misery." S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) will cure any case of blood poison. Books on the disease and its treatment mailed free by Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

MAJOR GENERAL BIRNEY

Uses Paine's Celery Compound in His Family, and Strongly Recommends It.

Maj-Gen. Birney, who is now, at the age of 75, practicing law and doing departmental work in Washington, in a letter to Wells & Richardson Company, says:

"My wife has been taking the Paine's celery compound for some time past, and is so much pleased with it that she wishes me to express to you her high opinion of its merits. She thinks it is the best remedy she has ever tried."

Gen'l Birney's hearty acknowledgement of the great and lasting good that his family has received from Paine's celery compound is repeated, in substance, in countless testimonials, written in the same grateful spirit and sent from every part of the country.

Don't sit with folded arms and do nothing toward getting rid of poor health. Drive out all impurities from your blood; build up the vigor of the body with Paine's celery compound—the one remedy that has kept all its promises in the past.

The tired nerves and brain need just the sort of nourishment that this great invigorator is able to supply.

Now is the time when Paine's celery compound, aided by the favorable influences of the season, fairly outdoes itself. It searches out the hidden causes of debility, neuralgia, rheumatism and those constantly recurring headaches. The worn-out nervous tissues are invigorated. Paine's celery compound is the one successful nerve regulator that cures diseases without any possibility of a return of the trouble.

Take Paine's celery compound this very day.

It won't do to postpone getting strong and well until you have a vacation.

Do as thousands of others have done to their great joy, take Paine's celery compound! It will invigorate at once your impoverished nervous system.

If you really want to get well, read the letters recently published from such men as Justice Powers, Congressman Grout, Congressman Meredith of Virginia, Assistant United States Attorney John C. Capers, Congressman Bell, Lieut. McAllister, Congressman Neil and many others who are fully as careful of what they recommend. The perusal of a few of these personally signed, hearty testimonials of Paine's celery compound will give any one a clear idea of what this wonderful remedy is doing in every State in the Union, and in every city and village.

It is making people well.

Prof. Babcock, the well-known Chemist, says:—

"I find that Walter Baker & Co.'s Breakfast Cocoa is absolutely pure. It contains no trace of any substance foreign to the pure roasted cocoa-bean. The color is that of pure cocoa; the flavor is natural, and not artificial; and the product is in every particular such as must have been produced from the pure cocoa-bean without the addition of any chemical, alkali, acid, or artificial flavoring substance, which are to be detected in cocoas prepared by the so-called 'Dutch process.'"

JUST ONE YEAR OLD.

Just one short year ago he came,
Our little son, God bless him!
A heaven-sent treasure he is ours,
To care for and caress him,
No matter if the days be drear,
Our hearts he never fails to cheer.

When to my work I go away
I stoop and softly kiss him;
And through the long, long hours of day,
I sadly, sadly miss him;
Until at last, at set of sun
I go to him when work is done.

With outstretched arms and winning smile,
He coos a loving greeting;
'Tis hard to tell which one of us
Is happiest at our meeting,
This joyous frolicsome young elf,
His loving mamma, or myself.

His dimpled arms around my neck
Cling close in soft caresses;
While 'gainst my bronzed and bearded cheek,
His dewy lips he presses.
Oh, little love! Oh, baby mine!
You closely round my heart-strings twine.

God grant that in the years to come
He ne'er may know a sorrow;
May peace and happiness be his,
With every coming morrow,
And may Thine everlasting arm,
Protect and keep him safe from harm.

Oh, baby mine, when years have flown,
And I am old and hoary,
When you to man's estate have grown,
And strong in manhood's glory,
Oh, never may our hearts grow cold,
Dear baby boy, just one year old.
—Leisure Hours.

THE FORTUNE TELLER

"Da——!"

"Oh! papa, pfui! how can you?"

The old high bailiff of Krohn pushed away the pretty little hand that his eldest daughter sought to place over his mouth.

"No," he said, "I will not keep quiet. I repeat that the whole custom of sending New Year's cards is a d——n bad one, and it is time to put an end to it. What are the results of such nonsense?

"First, I get my mail bag later than usual, and, secondly, it is crammed so full with the stupid stuff that I can hardly get it open!"

At length the old gentleman's efforts were rewarded, the bag sprang open, and he emptied its contents with impatience on the breakfast table.

"'To Fraulein Katharina von Krohn,' he read. 'My God! are they all for you, Kathinka?'

"Don't be so unbearable, papa, and please don't call me Kathinka."

The old gentleman replied to his daughter's request with an unintelligible growl and went on drinking his coffee.

"Just look what a lot there are for me!" cried Katharina, piling the letters upon the table in front of her and her face lighting up with pleasure.

"Are they all for you?"

"Yes, all. Now you can see what it is to be known as a beauty."

"And an heiress," added the father.

"Yes, and an heiress, she repeated, thoughtfully.

"But is there nothing there for my little Lili?" asked her father.

Katharina shrugged her shapely shoulders impatiently.

"Why, of course not. If a girl expects to be shown much attention she must be a little more pushing and important."

"And an heiress, too," was the father's laconic addition to the sentence.

"I really should be very grateful, father, if you would not allude so much to my money," was the rather curt protest.

"I can't help it, Katharina, when I see my little Lili here, as beautiful as the flower that gave her the name, and—well, she is not an heiress, do you understand? That's the whole thing."

Katharina made no answer. She was busily studying the handwriting on the envelopes.

A young girl who had hitherto sat opposite to her in silence left her seat, went up to the high bailiff, and putting her fair young arms round his neck, gave him a kiss.

A world of love shone in his eyes as he looked at her with pleasure and stroked her soft cheeks.

"Never mind, Lili," he said, slowly, "I am glad that you don't get such a pile of letters. I'm grateful, too, that you're not an heiress. Perhaps then no one will take you away from me."

Tears came into the girl's eyes, for, though she said no word, yet the thought that no one had remembered her or cared enough for her to send her a New Year's card made her sad. But she forced herself not to cry and tried to conceal the few tears that would not be kept back by kissing her father again lovingly on the eyes and lips.

The high bailiff of Krohn, the father of these two girls, had married twice. His first wife, a lovely, proud, but vain, woman, died soon after the birth of a little daughter, and left her the whole of a large fortune. His second wife, the daughter of a country clergyman, brought him no wealth but a sweet and beautiful disposition. When she, too, died after two years' married life he felt overwhelmed and had never since wholly recovered from the blow.

Katharina, the elder of the stepchild-children, had just finished her twentieth year, and, as she was as proud, pretty, and just as vain as her mother, had already laughed at many proposals for her hand—and money. No one had so far been able to take her fancy.

Lili was in almost every respect the opposite of her sister. Small of figure, quiet and retiring, it happened that she was often entirely overlooked. It certainly was not right of a father to love one daughter more than another.

Still he did so, and it was plain to everybody that it was the soft, sweet, patient Lili who was his favorite.

It made Katharina feel annoyed to see her father so gentle and affectionate toward her sister, for she said, with a sharp look at them both:

"What! kissing again! I cannot understand how you find pleasure in always lying round each other's necks."

"You are out of sorts, Katharina," said her father. "One of the cards you expected has not come, perhaps. I would almost wager that among all those letters there is none from Baron Horn! Eh?"

Katharina grew a shade paler at these words.

"I certainly expected a card from Baron Horn," she replied, trying to conceal her annoyance. "He surely has sent me one! Are you sure you emptied the mail bag thoroughly?"

"Yes, I think so. But you ha better look yourself; it would not be the first time that a letter has remained stuck in one of the corners."

"Ah! I thought so," exclaimed Katharina, pulling a crumpled letter out of a deep corner of the bag.

She glanced quickly and sharply at the address, and then with an exclamation of vexation let the letter hurriedly drop.

"Not from Baron Horn, after all?" asked her father, picking it up, "and yet—that is his writing. Heavens! why, it is for you, Lili; it's addressed to you."

"Oh! impossible!" said Lili, quietly, while a faint blush rose to her pretty cheeks. "It must be a mistake."

"By no means," returned her father, smiling. "Here, open it. Let us all see it. Oh, what a lovely card! Why, Katharina, where are you going?"

But the father received no answer. Katharina hurriedly gathered up her letters and left the room in a whirlwind.

* * * * *

The above-mentioned Baron Horn was a young nobleman who had just returned from Africa. It was well known that he took great pleasure in visiting the Von Krohn family, and under all manner of pretexts took every opportunity to be with them. Of course every one thought that the attraction was the rich and beautiful Katharina, and she herself took particular pains to spread this view of the matter.

Accustomed as she was to a large number of enthusiastic admirers, she had never for a moment imagined that the baron could interest himself in her quiet little sister until she was reminded to-day in a rather unpleasant manner of the possibility of such a thing.

She read her letters through and became better humored.

"How stupid of me to get so cross," she said, as she smiled at her lovely face in the glass. "It is not possible that he favors Lili when he knows me."

There came a gentle knock at the door, and the servant girl came in and announced that the carriage was at the door.

Katharina at once remembered that Baron Horn had promised to go for a drive with her, and with this thought her face grew bright once again.

A charitable bazaar was to be opened in a neighboring town, and, as the father was not able to go, Baron Horn had offered his escort to the two young ladies.

The baron was as punctual as most lovers—that is to say, he came half an hour before the time, and found Katharina quite ready, to his great astonishment, for as a rule she kept everybody waiting half an hour, at least.

Her purpose of frustrating a tete-a-tete between Lili and the baron was completely successful, for she did not move from his side until they all three were ready to get into the carriage.

The father stood with beaming face on the doorstep and waved a fond farewell after them.

"This Horn is a very sensible fellow," he thought to himself, "and I admire his choice. It will be very hard to lose Lili, but I would let him have her rather than any one else."

* * * * *

Although the bazaar was crowded the arrival of Baron Horn and his two lovely companions caused considerable excitement, and they were speedily surrounded by acquaintances.

Among these was a Capt. Linke, a tall, blonde fellow, and one of Katharina's most sincere and faithful admirers.

"How glad I am to see you here," he said.

"Really? Why?"

"May I show you why? Please come with me. At the other end of the hall there is a fortune teller, and I want you to see what she will tell you."

"May we join you?" asked the baron.

"Certainly. Come, we will all go together."

The mysterious room that held the fortune teller was reached. The fortune teller proved to be a little figure in the middle of a disc.

Round the disc were figures and numbers and slips of paper arranged. Anyone who wanted to see into the future paid a mark, set the figure revolving, and took the slip of paper opposite which it stopped.

"Now, my genaediges fraulein," said the captain, taking out his purse, "won't you try your luck?"

But Katharina refused positively to be a party to such nonsense, and, inasmuch as Lili could not be persuaded either, the baron asked permission to inquire of the oracle himself.

He set the figure in motion and took the slip of paper opposite which it stopped.

"Seek her hand and buy the ring. Thy life will then be full of joy," ran the words on it.

The baron tried to catch a glance from Lili, but she appeared to be absorbed in the nature and character of the floor and would not raise her eyes.

"Potz Blitz!" cried the captain, turning to Katharina, "that is famous; you really must be persuaded to try it now. Or, shall I do it for you?"

"You may do it for me," she replied in such sharp tones that everyone looked at her.

The captain turned the the figure and read the words: "Hast thou not often heard it said——" He hesitated; then tore the paper up and threw it on the floor. The conclusion of the sentence seemed to suit the many proposals that Katherina had received too well for him to read it.

"What was the rest, captain?" asked the baron, in all innocence. But the captain looked so displeased that the question was not pressed.

"I wonder what it was?" Lili whispered to the baron.

"We shall learn later, perhaps," he eplied. "But did you get my New Year's card this morning?"

"Yes," she answered softly, with a blush.

"And do you remember what the fortune teller told me just now? If I buy the ring will you wear it?"

He drew a deep sigh of relief as he saw his answer in her happy, blushing face.

She lowered her eyes and said: "I don't know. You must first speak to papa."—From the German.

A Polite Raider.

A correspondent of the London Times has discovered, in the French archives, an original memorandum in which the famous scarover, Paul Jones, told the story of one of the occurrences connected with his raid on the British coasts in 1778. Jones wrote:

"Returning on board the Ranger, the wind being favorable, I sailed for the Scottish coast. My intention was to capture the Earl of Selkirk and detain him as a hostage. Accordingly the same day, 23d April, 1778, about noon, having with me a single boat, only two officers and a small guard, I landed on that nobleman's estate.

"On landing I met some of the inhabitants, who, taking me for an Englishman, told me that Lord Selkirk was then in London, but that my lady, his wife, and several lady friends were at home. This made me resolve to return immediately to my boat, and go back to the Ranger. This moderate conduct was not to the taste of my men, who were inclined to pillage, burn and devastate all they could. Though this would have been making war after the fashion of the English, I did not think it fit to imitate them, especially on this occasion, considering what was due to a lady.

"It was necessary, however, to find some compromise to satisfy the cupidity of my crew and to spare Lady Selkirk. I had only a moment for choice. What seemed to me best to reconcile everything was to order the two officers to go to the mansion with my guard, which was to remain outside under arms, while they alone entered. They were then politely to ask for the family plate, to stay only a few minutes, to take what was given them without demanding anything more, and return immediately afterward without proceeding to any search.

"I was strictly obeyed. The plate was given up. Lady Selkirk told the officers several times over that she was very sensible of the moderation shown by me. She even wished to come to the beach, a mile from her mansion, to invite me to dine with her; but the officers begged her not to take the trouble to do this."

Coyotes Recovered Their Puppies.

An amusing incident occurred the other day on the Lemon farm, near Garfield, Wash. Burt Lemon and an employe of the farm were plowing, when they came across three young coyote pups which had not yet opened their eyes. While they were examining them the old ones appeared and approached to within fifty yards. Mr. Lemon went to the house for a gun and a sack, and placed the young ones in the sack, which was tied up and left in the field until time to go in from work.

The old coyotes kept a respectful distance from the rifle, but hovered around. Several turns of the field were made with the plow, and, finally, when the men came in sight of where they had left the sack containing the young coyotes, they saw one of the old ones with the sack, puppies and all, streaking it over the hill, and that was the last seen of them.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Deplorable Ignorance.

Gen. John McNeil, who was a brother-in-law of President Pierce, and major-general of the New Hampshire militia at one time, is said to have been considerably incensed when he met any one who appeared to be ignorant of the wounds and honors he had won on the field of battle.

During the war with Great Britain he was shot while mounted on his faithful horse, receiving a severe wound in the knee, which caused him to walk stiffly for the rest of his life.

"How did you hurt your knee, general?" asked a young man whom the old officer characterized as a "whipper-snapper" one day, from a certain lack of respectfulness in his air and manner. "Did you have a fall?"

"Yes, sir," snorted the general, indignantly. "I fell off a horse! You never read the history of your country, did you, sir?"

A Wonderful Flower.

The most wonderful flower in the world, as well as one of the very largest "blossoms" known, is a native of the Malay peninsula. It is simply a gigantic flower without either stem or leaves, and has more the appearance of a fungus than anything else. It is about three feet in diameter and has a globular central cup which has a capacity of nearly two gallons. This cup is always filled with a fetid liquor which attracts an immense swarm of flies and other insects. The pistils of this queer flower distill the liquid and it is believed that the rank odor attracts the flies in order that the flower may be fertilized.

Farmers Should Encourage the Study of Theories—How to Make a Good Earth Scraper—Crate for Marketing Produce.

Theory and Practice.

The successful man who prides himself on being a strictly practical farmer, breeder or feeder, with "no theoretical or scientific nonsense about him," may do considerable harm by the force of his example. The fact that he carries on his operations intelligently and successfully is evidence that he carries them on scientifically. He is then, although he may not know it, a scientific farmer, and unconsciously understands and carries out the very principles which scientific men are trying to impress upon the minds of the ignorant, and at which he scoffs. Such men do harm when they sneer at the idea that theoretical or scientific knowledge is unimportant. It may be unimportant to the man whose practice agrees in the main with correct principles, but to the man whose practice is not correct, and never will be until he understands the principles which underlie it, such an idea is disastrous. If all men could or would conduct their work on right lines it would matter little whether they understood the principles or not. But all will not do this. Most of them must know the principle first or they will not persevere in the practice; some will not, anyhow. Let us by all means encourage the study of the theories and principles which are back of correct practice in agriculture.—Stockman.

Homemade Earth Scraper.

A good substitute for the expensive earth scrapers on the market may be made as illustrated. The material should be hard wood, and the edge in front covered with sheet iron, after which an old piece of crosscut saw may be fastened beneath the edge and turned up at the sides. The iron straps to which the chain is attached should go around the back as well as the sides of the scraper, to give strength. For leveling ridges and filling depressions about the farm, such an implement is very handy.

Avoiding Sickness.

There is nothing more essential to the success of a business man than the good health of himself and his family. This is especially true of the farmer, who must give personal attention to every part of his business and whose family is closely connected with his work. Anything that interferes with the usefulness of any one in the average farm home is a serious hindrance. For business reasons, therefore, the farmer cannot afford to have sickness in his household. One of the most common causes of sickness in the country is overwork. Many women especially suffer from this cause and do not seem to realize it, nor do their households. Another common cause of sickness is neglect of sanitary precautions. The country home is usually well situated to avoid trouble of this kind, but so often have we seen surroundings that invited disease that we have thought a country health inspector would not be out of place. It should not be difficult to prevent the pollution of air, water or food in the country, and if these are all pure there need be little fear of trouble.

Box for Marketing Produce.

Many a farmer goes to market carrying fruit, butter, eggs and a number of other articles. A convenient package for his use is shown herewith. The box has a bail for carrying purposes. One side, instead of the top, is hinged, disclosing shelves when opened. Fruit, butter, eggs and other small articles can be placed on these shelves, and reached instantly without disturbing other articles, which is not at all the case when the package opens at the top.

The Dock Weed.

On meadow land the narrow dock is one of the worst of weeds. It is so tenacious of life that even after it is pulled up and partly dried it will grow again when wet by rains and allowed to touch the damp soil. It is very commonly anowed to seed, and the plant being cut with the grass goes into the hay, and the seeds are thus distributed in the manure pile. It is in this way that the plant is distributed in localities where none was known before. The seeds are very tenacious of vitality as they will undergo heating in a manure pile, and then grow quite as well as before being subjected to this ordeal, which will kill most other seeds. The dock roots can be pulled up while the ground is soft in the spring, or from recent heavy rains any time during the summer. But do not leave them on the fences, thinking that they will thus dry out so as to be incapable of growing again.

Old Horses Still Efficient.

A gray-haired farmer named W. B. Anderson in Willink, Erie County, N. Y., drives a pair of mares that, though 34 and 36 years old, are still able to do a good day's work on his farm or take him on the road to the city. The team has never had any other owner, and they have never been overdriven. It is the excitement of too fast driving, which the horse probably enjoys as well as his owner, which shortens the life of most horses. We never knew horses to attain such age as this. Usually the teeth become so poor that they can only eat cut and ground feed, but this is usually best for all horses that have hard work to do, as it saves unnecessary labor for the digestive organs.

Peas for Fattening Pigs.

Corn is not the best food for young hogs, yet as it is more generally grown than any other, and is the cheapest grain feed, it is the staple ration. A diet of peas is much better for making growth. As the peas can be sown broadcast, they need no cultivating, and the crop may even be harvested by turning the pigs in and letting them eat what they will. We know a farmer who every year grows three to five acres of field peas. He gets the seed from Canada to avoid the pea bug, but in localities where few peas have been grown the pea bug has so far disappeared for lack of its favorite food that the pea can be grown for several years without any trouble from this source. Our farmer usually gets 25 to 30 bushels per acre, and says the peas cost less per bushel than the same amount of corn. He has the peas ground with oats and corn, and keeps some of this mixture to feed his pigs the following summer, when a little grain feed does much more good than it will in cold weather.—American Cultivator.

Training a Young Cow.

Last fall I purchased a fine Guernsey heifer for $20 that had become spoiled in milking, says a contributor to the Country Gentleman. When she freshened she stood well until she found the hired man was afraid of her, when she kicked so terribly that we were obliged to put the calf to her again. The calf had been allowed to do the milking until four or five days old, which I knew was a mistake, but it occurred while I was away from home. I almost despaired of "reclaiming" that cow for the dairy, but at the end of six months weaned the calf, and, strange to say, had very little difficulty in training her. She is as quiet and gentle now as any in the herd, and bids fair to be an extra butter cow.

A Fodder Rack.

When the pasture begins to get short, the stock must have extra feed, and a feed rack for the pasture or barn yard is necessary. The illustration shows such a rack built against a fence, which has one important feature. At the ordinary feed rack the strongest and most belligerent of the stock will course along the length of the rack and drive off the weaker. With the one herewith illustrated all such difficulties are avoided, as each animal must keep his own place.

Grape Vines Bear Early.

Next to the strawberry, the man who is entirely destitute of fruit should plant the grape vine if he would wish delicious fruit of his own growing at the earliest possible time. We have ripened one or two bunches of grapes eighteen months after a thrifty vine was set. The year after that it can be made to grow four to five pounds of fruit, though it is better to thin this out to half that amount. There is no trouble in getting the grape vine to fruiting. Every bud left after pruning will make a shoot, and this will set two, three or four bunches. The chief difficulty is to prune closely enough to prevent more fruit from setting than the vine can bring to maturity.

Grade Cows.

In speaking of scrub cattle, it should be noted that there flows some very good Ayrshire, Shorthorn and Devon blood in the veins of a large proportion of the so-called common cows of this country. Such cattle are by no means scrub stock. When we see cows giving sixteen to twenty quarts and producing daughters equal to themselves, we may well suspect some good thoroughbred ancestry somewhere.

Poultry Pointers.

If the fowls are having free range you can stop feeding them meat scraps.

Keep the old hen penned in a small but comfortable coop, but let the chicks have free range.

Do not allow the drinking water to be exposed to the sun. Give fresh water twice daily.

Do not set the hens in the hen house. A sitting hen is a regular louse factory. A cool out building will be much better.

Did you ever try ducks? Get a few settings of eggs now and raise a flock. It will pay to raise them for your own eating.

Have shady runs for the chicks; and no better place for both old and young stock can be found than the orchard.

Let the chicks run in the garden if they will. They will gather seeds that will do both them and your garden a lot of good.

Don't forget that onion tops and tender lettuce are excellent for young stock. Cannot you spare a little from the garden?

If you keep the windows of the henery open at night, tack a screen of half-inch wire netting over the window so as to keep out rats, minks and other enemies.

Where Is She?

Frisky as a lambkin,
Busy as a bee,
That's the kind of little girl
People like to see.

Modest as a violet,
As a rosebud sweet,
That's the kind of little girl
People like to meet.

Happy as a robin,
Gentle as a dove,
That's the kind of little girl
Everyone will love.

The Poor Bird.

An Irishman once went hunting, and saw a redbird and shot at it. He ran under the tree to get his bird and found a frog, and said: "Faith, and ye was a purty bird till I shot all the feathers off ye."

He Was Uncle Will.

Willie and his big sister Lizzie didn't get along together very well. Willie was only 7 and his sister 17, but he resented her "bossing."

One day Willie's mamma had something to tell him, a piece of news from the household of his still older sister, who had been married a year before.

"Willie," said mamma, "God left a little baby at sister Mary's house last night. You're an uncle now, my boy. How do you like that?"

"Well," said Willie, after weighing the matter over carefully a minute, "I'll just tell you this. If I am Uncle Will, Lizzie ain't goin' to boss me no more."—New York World.

Make the Ball Roll Into the Hand.

Here is a quaint old puzzle that you may be interested in solving. Look closely at the hand and the cross and the ball. At the ordinary distance from the eye (seven or eight inches) the ball is about an inch from the index finger. If the paper is approached to the face with the nose opposite the dagger the ball will appear to move toward the hand and to rest on the top of the index finger. By then moving the paper slightly the effect may be produced of the ball's rolling along the top of the finger and then of being clasped by the hand. The illusion is more pronounced if the drawing is enlarged to three or four times the size shown.

Cats Adopt Two Queer Children.

A story comes from the far West of two lonesome old cats that brought up and cared for four frisky young coyotes. The coyotes were only 2 or 3 days old when captured about three weeks ago. The old cats had lost their families of kittens, and the coyotes were placed with them. They at once made friends with the little howlers, and fondled them as they would their own offspring, and the coyotes seemed satisfied with their foster-mothers. At first, not being pleased with the bed fixed for them in the barn, the cats carried their adopted kittens to the house several times. They defend their unnatural family upon the approach of a dog with all the fuss and fury characteristic of the cat tribe. It is a question, though, whether or not the savage animals will return the affection of their foster-mothers when they grow a little older.

Wine at Parties.

Sometimes the girls wonder what they will do when they go into society where wine is offered. Some will be brave and say, "No, I thank you," very quietly and in a ladylike way, or what is better, they will turn down their glasses at first and have it understood. That it what Mrs. Cleveland, the President's wife at Washington, does. We suppose she would like to give her dinner parties without wine, too, as Mrs. President Hayes did when she was mistress at the White House. One of the cabinet ladies, Secretary Carlisle's wife, does that now. Not long since she gave a dinner party to President and Mrs. Cleveland, and there was no wine nor liquors on the table. There were two glasses to each plate, one for Potomac water and the other for Apollinaris water. The good time is coming when people will no longer put this fateful poison alcohol on their tables in any shape, and you girls will be glad to help it along.

The Lost Dog.

There are a great many touching sights in a great city, but none much more so than to watch a lost dog. At first there is a look of startled surprise on his face when he loses the scent, quickly followed by a grim sort of humor, as though pretending his bewilderment is but a joke. He circles round and round, and his face grows thin and his eyes almost human in their anxious pleading. He starts off in one direction sure that he has found the trail; he is baffled, turned back. He looks in the faces of all who pass as if questioning to know his way. He thinks he recognizes his master and is off like a flash, only to return more anxious and eager than before. He gives himself no rest, but doubles and pursues and turns back, until all hope is dead in his faithful canine breast, and he starts off with a long lope down the street. Then it is that some demoniac boy or some detestable man flings a stone at him or kicks him as he flies by, and the cry is raised, "Mad dog! Kill him!" So the great host of idlers in ambush, who wait the opportunity for mischief as bees await the blossom of the buckwheat, are turned loose upon his track and his doom is sealed. From a lost dog to a hunted and dead cur is an easy transition.—Chicago Herald.

She Considered the Lily.

At a teachers' convention in Detroit lately a lady, speaking about the influence of beautiful objects upon the character and conduct of young pupils, told a pretty story received by her from an eye-witness, and thus reported by the News-Tribune. The occurrence took place in New York.

"Into a school made up chiefly of children from the slums the teacher one day carried a beautiful calla lily. Of course, the children gathered about the pure, waxy blossom in great delight.

"One of them was a little girl, a waif of the streets, who had no care bestowed upon her, as was evinced by the dirty, ragged condition she was always in. Not only was her clothing dreadfully soiled, but her face and hands seemed totally unacquainted with soap and water.

"As this little one drew near the lovely flower, she suddenly turned and ran away down the stairs and out of the building. In a few minutes she returned with her hands washed perfectly clean, and pushed her way up to the flower, where she stood and admired it with intense satisfaction.

"It would seem," continued Miss Coffin, "that when the child saw the lily in its white purity, she suddenly realized that she was not fit to come into its atmosphere, and the little thing fled away to make herself suitable for such companionship. Did not this have an elevating, refining effect on the child? Let us gather all the beauty we can into the school-room."

WORKING IT BACKWARD.

Remarkable Things Shown by the Kinetoscope When Reversed.

"Impossibilities made possible by means of the modern inventions in the electrical field" furnished the theme of a lecture given recently by Prof. G. Queroult in the Paris Academy of Sciences. During some of his experiments he hit upon the idea to turn around photographic records and also the series of picture seen through the kinetoscope, respectively the kinematograph. Having photographed a plant at regular intervals and shown in the kinetoscope the growth, the development of the stem, leaves, buds, flowers and fruit, the same consequence of photographic pictures reversed was presented to the eye of the astonished academicians, who wondered at the fruit turning into flowers, flowers into buds, buds drawing back into themselves and disappearing, the leaves closing, getting smaller and disappearing, the stem getting shorter and shorter, until the earth closes over it

The most incredible things are developed before the eyes of the spectator, if a most ordinary series of such pictures is reversed. A drinker takes up and empty glass and replaces it full upon the table; a smoker sees the stump of a cigar flying at him from the floor, takes it to his mouth and sees the smoke originate in the room, draws it into his mouth and into his cigar, which is gradually lengthened and finally replaced in the pocket. A wrestler, who has probably thrown away his garments, is recovered with them by their, so to speak, walking up on him to their places, while he himself performs motions of which we can understand nothing, because we never saw these most extraordinary motions performed backward; a man, for instance, seated at a table before an empty plate, works hard taking bite after bite from his mouth, until the chicken is whole again on the dish before him, and the side dishes are also returned full to their respective places. In order to fully enjoy an exhibition of the kinetoscope, such an exhibition should be completed by arranging alongside of each other the same scenes in regular order in one machine and reversed in another. It would be advisable, however, to inform the spectators previous to their looking at such a reversed series of pictures, for otherwise they might think themselves the victim of a dream, a hallucination, or something worse.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Nested Over a Doorway.

Inside the porch of a doorway of a house in Jesmond, England, a pair of greybirds built their nest. The passing in and out of the people residing in the house did not seem to disconcert the "happy couple," who helped themselves to some feathers placed at their disposal. The greybird, or song thrush, often chooses a singular place as a nesting site.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

Bryan's reception in New York on Wednesday teaches a lesson to those who can learn. It is said that it was the largest and most enthusiastic gathering of citizens concerned about public affairs that was ever held in this country. The heat was sweltering; the arrangements of the committee which had the affair in charge were defective; the leaders of the kid-glove democracy were conspicuous by their absence. Yet as many persons as could be crammed into Madison Square Garden and reached by one voice were collected together, and testified their concurrence in the speaker's sentiments so vociferously that they went home hoarse and exhausted. It was on the afternoon of that day that the Canadian Crothers announced in his Bulletin in this city that the silver excitement was on the wane. Shallow pates and asses do not realize the true inwardness of the events which are passing around us. Twopenny halfpenny politicians sneer at Bryan. It has not broken on their dull minds that he typifies the revolt of the people against parties, that his coming signifies that people are tired of the democrats, tired of the republicans, tired of their surface fends which cover a mutual understanding beneath for the maintenance of trusts and combines, and protected classes, and for the division of public plunder. Democrats taunt republicans with maintaining a tariff for the robbery of the many, for the benefit of the few, and the taunt is just. Republicans legitimately retort that the party in power gerrymandered the tariff so as to throw millions into the Treasury of the sugar trust; and the retort is also just. Private citizens look around them in every direction and discern no friends anywhere. Between them and the politicians—whatever party name they go by—there is an impassable gulf set. Whichever party wins at election, the people lose. The knaves who alternate in the possession of power divert attention from the blunder of the people by affecting to be mightily enraged with each other. It is to set this partially straight that Bryan has come. He carries the standard of one of the political parties, just as Lincoln went before the people of Illinois as a Whig. But as Lincoln's mission was to overthrow the two parties under whose wings slavery was sheltered, so Bryan will inaugurate an era in which the two parties which are partners in boodle will for a time take a back seat, and let the people have a chance. With the unerring eye which nature has bestowed on the masses for their protection, the common people understand the office which Bryan has come to fill. They do not concentrate their attention on such details as the remonetization of silver on the basis of sixteen to one. They pass over the planks in Bryan's platform which have roused controversy. They look at his general attitude in a broad way and with a wide range of view, and they conclude that he signifies a revolt of the great body of tax payers against the select circle of tax eaters culled from the two parties. This is the explanation of the unprecedented gathering in Madison Square Garden on Wednesday; it is the key to the spontaneous outburst of feeling in favor of one of whom the public knew nothing three months ago, and who claimed no votes by reason of wide spread reputation, of our passing sagacity.—Town Talk.

The apparent requirements in mining enterprises are often of a character not wholly contemplated with satisfaction by peaceably inclined men. On the 30th ult. a meeting of the Matabeland Development Co. was held in London, England, to discuss the advisability of spending $25,000 in butchering the South African natives. That was not the wording of the resolutron, but is its import. The "gun fights" in Nevada, when men reckless of the future but careful of aim got $20 per diem and all expenses to hold sundry mining property, were small affairs in the way of a mining investment compared with the sanguinary appropriation which after some philanthropic discussion was carried by the board of directors of said company. "To suppress the revolt in Rhodesia" is what the money is for; it will be turned over to the British South Africa Co. which, among other mining requirements, finds it necessary now and then to exterminate troublesome natives. As a cold-blooded business proposition, the action of the directors was upheld by the manifest exigencies of the occasion. The amusing part of it is the effort to justify the matter in a burst of "patriotism," "manifest destiny," etc. No one said "these vermin infest a country that we have seized and which contains gold that we must have. They oppose us and must be killed." "Divine Providence," "the rights of the conqueror," and the stupidity and intolerable impudence of the natives who objected to the British Company enforcing its assumptive decrees, were referred to as justifying extreme measures. One letter was read beginning "When the company, in the exercise of its undoubted rights as conquerers, called for 45 per cent of the king's cattle, and God, in his inscrutable wisdom, determined upon destroying by rinderpest the remaining 55." Of course after that there was nothing more to be said. The protest of those who said it was "an enormous butcher's bill" were drowned in a roar of disapprobation and the resolution was passed "by an overwhelming majority." The appropriation will doubtless prove a paying investment.—S. F. Sci. Press.

One thousand bags of onions and an almost equal number of boxes of pears, for which there was no sale, were last week given away and dumped in the bay from the San Francisco water front.

Dealers say that never before in the history of Oregon has the wool situation been anything like what it is at the present time. Heretofore there has always been a market for wool at some price. There has always been money in the past, plenty of it, to advance to any and all who wanted to consign their wool. People have held back for better prices in days gone by, but when the time came that they had to sell there were always buyers ready to pay the market price. Now there is no market, no price, no buyers—none who will make advances. The wool business is at a dead standstill. Mountains of wool, one of the mainstays of eastern Oregon, is tied up, and, for the present needs, is as worthless as the sands of the Columbia; 20,000,000 pounds of wool in eastern Oregon towns alone, and no one to even advance money enough on it to pay freight from one town to another. This wool is stored in warehouses at Huntington, Elgin, Baker City, Union, Durkee, Pendleton, Heppner, Echo, Arlington and The Dalles.

BORN.

ARNOT—In Markleville, Alpine Co., Aug. 7, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. N. D. Arnot—a son.

There are 1014 names on the Great Register.

Charles Collins came in from Darwin a few days ago.

Pete Laborge came in from Mazourka canyon Sunday.

J. R. Moffett returned from San Francisco Wednesday evening.

Ruth Mulholland has accompaied Miss Stella Hart to her Los Angeles home.

Schober's big team passed through town this morning en route to Mojave for a load of freight.

Mrs. P. H. Mack and Harry Mack left for San Francisco yesterday, where they will meet Mr. Mack.

E. L. Reese, of Bodie, has announced himself as a candidate for the Assembly from the 60th District.

Mr. Van Baker, Avah and Neel Bell and Rev. Hunter returned from a trip to Kings River last Saturday.

J. B. Clarke came down from Bishop on Tuesday and returned Wednesday with a load of drummers.

W. H. Virden, of Bridgeport, Mono county, has announced himself as a candidate for re-election as Superior Judge.

Mrs. A. O. Collins has returned to her home at Warm Springs after visiting several weeks with her daughter, Mrs. Bert Rhine.

Miss Edna Shepherd, Miss Nettie Irwin, N. E. Conklin and Fred Holbert were passengers on Miller's stage line last Monday.

Clouds, thunder, lightning and rain have been the order of things since last Sunday. Several heavy showers have kept the roads in excellent condition.

Nettie Irwin has left Independence, where she has been spending her summer vacation with her parents, and returned to El Paso, where she will take up her studies again.

Mrs. I. H. Mulholland and Miss Stella Hart are in Independence after a sojourn of five weeks in Onion Valley. Miss Hart returns to her home in Los Angeles to-day after spending four months in Inyo County.

W. K. Miller, the stage man, and Chris. Carrasco, of Lone Pine, were in Independence Monday. Mr. Miller informed us that he intends putting on a daily stage line between Mojave and Randsburg in the near future, and will equip the line with good stock and Concord coaches.

Board of Education met last Monday. There were three applicants for certificates before the Board, only one of whom succeeded in passing the test studies. Mrs. Dixon of Big Pine is passing the examinations for a first grade certificats. Those members of the Board present were Miss Maud Truscott, H. C. Hampton, George Willis and Supt. Austin. Absent, Mrs. Bert Rhine.

A party of campers arrived here Monday from Visalia. There were twenty animals including packs, and ten men and two ladies. Judge Cross and Supervisor Ellis of Tulare were with them. One pack animal narrowly escaped death. While following the trail between Bubb's creek and Lake Rhoda the horse lost its footing and rolled down the hillside turning over twice. It was stayed by some brush and pulled back to the trail again by means of ropes. A bad gash in the breast was sewed up and smeared with fir balsam, and the horse appeared but little worse for the experience when it arrived here.

Walter Ober, of Big Pine, has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to get around.

Sheriff Given, Treasurer Bunney and Editor Chalfant, returned from a hunting and fishing trip to Kern river last Monday. Mr. Given brought home a black bear skin as proof of having shot one while on the trip.

An Eastern fashion writer says "no woman of good figure should hide it in bloomers," and now the world desires to know whether the emphasis of the remark is on "hide it" or "bloomers."

The Prison Directors met last Saturday at San Quentin and heard a flattering report from the warden for the last fiscal year. The cost of conducting the prison was a little over 30 cents per capita a day, but the jute mill lost $12,000.

A young man was drowned last week in Kern river. He had been suffering with malaria and mountain fever and had gone to the camping grounds to find relief. He had gone to the river for a drink and falling in was quickly drowned.

Among the mountain travelers this month in the high Sierras is a fish enthusiast. He is writing an extensive work on "American Fishes" and in company with John Broder is making a collection and study of our mountain fish.

At the bier of George W. Cornwell, one of the Southern Pacific's oldest engineers, who was married to a woman and living under the name of Parker, two other women came forward, each claiming to be his wife, and heart broken scenes ensued.

T. P. Luken and Walter Richardson, of Pasadena, arrived in town last night from a two week's trip to Kings river. The gentlemen declare that the Bubb's creek country surpasses anything that they have yet viewed in grandeur of scenery. They leave to-day for Mammoth and Yosemite via Bloody Canyon. The only shadow on a glorious experience was the losing of a horse over the Bubb's creek trail.

The Anti-Debris Association pays its manager $200 per month; has another official who gets $300 per month and so on. No one in the State Miners' Association gets anything for his personal services, some of the hardest workers even paying their own expenses. During the year ending June 30, 1896, one of the liviest county mine associations in the State—Placer county—collected and disbursed $822.51, of which $655 was sent to the State Association, all at an expense of $33.60.

A Typographical Beauty.

Town Talk's fourth anniversary number, is out this week with a forty-page edition, it is replete with good things, contains upward of twenty handsome half tone illustrations, and is printed in the highest style of the art, with a beautifully tinted cover. John P. Irish contributes a long article, entitled "Who are the Creditors?" Dr. H. J. Stewart advances some excellent suggestions about a San Francisco conservatory of music. Hon. Frank McCoppin's address upon the new charter appears in full. There are editorials upon the Bryan reception in New York, of which we give our readers a copy, the approaching Presidential campaign, the Shortridge letter and other topics. It contains portraits of H. G. W. Dinkelspiel, G. W. Elder, Misses Celia and Beatrice Tobin, Mrs. John F. Swift, Mrs. E. O. Smith, Miss Xena Roberts and William I. Sterett. In addition to these are illustrations of Town Talk building, its composing, editorial, mailing and press rooms, as well as its new press. The entire number demonstrates what this journal has accomplished both in style of dress and material during its short life.

Earthquake

At 3:27 last Monday morning the residents of town were roused from their slumbers by a sharp shock of earthquake. The trembling continued ten seconds the motion being from south-east to north-west. Doors and windows rattled briskly and crumbled adobes slid to the ground. Campers testify that the rocks on the mountain side dropped in some places. The people at Lone Pine were panic stricken for a short time, fearing a repetition of the horror of 1872. All has been quiet since, however, though decided earthquake weather has prevailed.

AND SHE SHOOK!

"So you're sure I'm round," said mother earth,
As her bosom heaved with surpressed mirth,
My children have wrangled for ages gone by
"It's flat! It's curved! It's broad and high!"
"Shiver my timbers! I declare,
Let's shake all round and call it square"

From Aberdeen

Mr. N. Conklin, of Bakersfield, has been spending a few days with his brother, Mr A. L. Conklin.

Mr. G. D. Calvert and Mr. J. Belser went on a camping trip to hunt grouse on Stecker's bench last Saturday afternoon. Finding grouse conspicuous by their absence they returned Sunday afternoon with nothing but a big disgust as a result of their outing.

Master Will Calvert has gone to Keeler where he will be the guest of Master George Wrinkle of that place.

Mrs. A. A. Neil was quite ill a few days since, but we are glad to state that she is considerably better, and we hope will soon be entirely well again.

AURORA.

Death of Gen. R. P. Keating.

R. P. Keating, Supt. of the Savage and other mines in Virginia City, died at his residence on Thursday night, August 13, of typhoid fever. He had been ill since returning from the east. Mr. Keating was an old Nevadan and well known mining man. He leaves a wife and six children. His remains were taken to San Francisco for burial. It is reported that he leaves a very large estate estimated to be worth over a million dollars.

Mr. Keating was one of the principal owners in the Hillside Land and Water Company, at Bishop, in this county.

A Murderer at Large.

A horrible murder was committed last week at a logging-camp near Sequoia Mills in the mountains sixty-five miles east of Fresno. Robert L. Totton was almost decapitated by his brother-in-law, Cass Colvin, who wielded a razor. The murderer immediately left camp and took to the brush of the mountains wild. Officers pursued him. Colvin and Totton were employed as loggers, and Mrs. Colvin, who is Totton's sister, cooked for the camp. According to a meagre report from the scene of the tragedy, which is seven miles above Sequoia Mills, Mrs. Colvin and husband were quarreling when her brother came up. He took her part and began upbraiding Colvin, and accused him of abusing his wife.

Colvin became enraged at the interference of his brother-in-law, and when an accusation of mistreatment was made he flew at Totton and knocked him down. Then he whipped out a razor and sprang upon the prostrate man. In the presence of his wife Colvin slashed her brother's throat a number of times, almost severing the head from the body. Colvin executed the terrible deed so quickly that Totton could not resist. Blood spurted from the wounds, and the victim died in a few minutes.

Colvin then quietly ran to his room and secured his rifle before the other loggers learned what the trouble was and ran into the brush.

Instead of trying to make his way out of the hills into the valley, as was supposed, the murderer had concealed himself under a log landing within 300 yards of where he slew Totton on Tuesday evening.

For three days and nights Colvin lay hidden without food or water. He was starved out of the place and last Friday night about 11 o'clock emerged with the purpose of giving himself up to the officers. He crawled to the cabin of a logger named Mills and awoke him. Mills was afraid to let the murderer in and asked him if he still had the razor with which he cut the throat of his brother-in-law. Colvin replied that he had it with him. He agreed to give it up to Mills and handed it to him through a window. He was then let into the cabin.

Mrs. Colvin and her babies were stopping in the Mills cabin, and the murderer had a short talk to his wife. He then asked Mills to take him to the officers, as he desired to surrender himself. Colvin was famished, and when given a drink of water his stomach could not retain it.

Mills and the murderer made their way out of the logging camp as stealthily as possible, for if an alarm had been raised the loggers would have turned out and hanged the culprit. Colvin was fully aware of this. The two men walked to the sawmills, nine miles distant, where the two officers were stopping at a hotel, having just returned from a search through Sampson Flat to the Kings River. Mills and the murderer walked into the office of the hotel and sent the proprietor up to awaken the officers. Deputy Sheriff Timmins and Constable Ingels started at once for Fresno and landed their prisoner in jail Saturday afternoon.

What It costs.

"What does an ounce of silver cost to produce?" is a question often asked and answered, the answer being rarely rational so much depending on the point of view. One eastern authority says it can be produced for five cents an ounce, that all a miner has to do is to build a fire at the base of a cliff and melt the bullion out of the ore right there. He also states that while engaged in this primitive pastime the miner can live on five cents a day. Another authority declares that silver can be produced profitably at 65 cents per ounce. The latter estimate seems based on statistics furnished by big concerns, where silver is a bye-product of the smelter and is an incidental output of the work. It is impossible for anyone acquainted with any of the facts to give even an approximate idea of what an ounce of silver costs to produce. Of course, anyone unacquainted with the matter can say whatever his fool fancy suggests. The writer has worked where every ounce of silver produced cost $5, and again where there was a handsome profit at going prices. There are individual cases where gold can be and is produced at a cost of 50 cents an ounce. Yet, probably every ounce of gold produced on this continent has in the aggregate, taking all things into consideration, cost $20.67. To take one special case as a basis to compute the cost of silver production is a specious and unfair method of reasoning, narrow and grossly misleading. Were it possible to sum up all the money and the value in money of the time spent, it is probable that every ounce of silver produced in the United States has cost $1.29.

The Reception

A reception was given last Friday evening, at the residence of Mrs. A. Putman, in honor of Rev. G. E. Wilcox, who came in our midst Aug. 9th. At eight o'clock a procession of newly made friends arrived, and soon the house was filled with both young and old. The evening exercises were opened by reading of the scripture, prayer and singing of hymns, after which the multitude gave our welcomed brother the hand of friendship, and as he affectionately grasped each hand he invoked a blessing on each of his assembled friends. The topic for the evening was "Friendship and Sociability," on which Rev. G. E. Wilcox made a most touching address, assuring us of his sincere friendship; then a suitable programme was rendered consisting of songs, recitations and select readings. At twelve o'clock a blessing was pronounced at a very delicious supper table. After supper the time was spent in singing, conversation, and modest games were played. At three o'clock the benediction was pronounced, the Doxology, and the parting hymn, "God be With You till We Meet Again," were sung. Still the crowd lingered as if unwilling to leave the place which had afforded them so much pleasure, and where new and sacred ties of friendship were bound.

VERITAS.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends, expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

June 24, 1896.

AN APPEAL FOR ASSISTANCE.

The man who is charitable to himself will listen to the mute appeal for assistance made by his stomach, or his liver, in the shape of divers dyspeptic qualms and uneasy sensations in the regions of the glands that secretes his bile. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, my dear sir or madame—as the case may be—is what you require. Hasten to use, if you are troubled with heartburn, wind in the stomach, or note that your skin or the whites of your eyes are taking a sallow hue.

"Went fishing last week, I understand?" "Yes." "Didn't catch anything except a bad cold, I suppose?" "Not by a jug full."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

It is a whole day's task for two men to fell a mahogany tree. On account of the spurs which project from the base of the trunk, a scaffold has to be erected and the tree cut off above the spurs, leaving thus a stump of the very best wood from ten to fifteen feet high.

Hissing is out of order in the house of commons. The rule against such an indecent display of feeling dates back to 1604, when it was decided that "whosoever hisseth or disturbeth any man in his speech shall answer for it at the bar as a breach of order and contempt of the house."

The very peculiar theory has of late been propounded that all men who partake to any extent of malt drinks have large feet! The women of Holland, Germany, and even England, are quoted as examples, while the women of the wine countries—France, Spain and Italy—are, on the other hand, famed for their small and shapely feet.

A curiously ingenious device is regarded as being sometimes employed by Mongolian letter carriers. These men make very long journeys on foot, and within a time which allows them only the briefest intervals for an occasional nap. To insure themselves against oversleeping, therefore, they tie a piece of joss stick to one of their thumbs, light it and lie down to rest. When the stick burns down to the flesh the pain awakens them and they resume the journey.

The almanacs of the middle ages were consecrated almost entirely to astrology and alchemy. The oldest printed almanac of which we have any knowledge is said to have appeared in Vienna in 1460. Fourteen years later Regimontanus, a German mathematician living in Hungary, published a series of almanacs from 1475 to 1506.

The only animal known in the world which, on the approach of dissolution, seeks out the general burying ground of its species, and there digs its own grave and lies down to die, is the guanaco, or wild llama. It is peculiar in other respects, too. These animals, in fact, have a regular sanitary system, which they respect like human beings.

A Bangor woman who had read that camphor sprinkled around the room would drive away flies and mosquitos, jumped out of bed the other night, seized the bottle of camphor in the dark and gave the bed a plentiful sprinkling. The next morning she awoke to find the white spread covered with ink spots and the ink bottle empty.

The Foudroyant, which, it will be remembered, was saved from being broken up in the German timber yards, is now nearly restored to what she was when she fought under Nelson, and is as near as possible an exact reproduction of a line of battle ship of the most glorious period of England's naval history.

A "midget" testament, three-quarters of an inch long and half an inch wide, weighing only twenty-six grains, and a "mite" Bible, one and three-quarters of an inch high by one and one-eighth wide, containing 936 pages and weighing 180 grains, have just been published by a Glasgow firm. They are said to be the smallest Bible and Testament in the world.

The Dominion of Canada, consisting of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, came into existence on July 1, 1867. It was subsequently augmented by the province of Manitoba and the northwest territories in 1870, by British Columbia in 1871, and Prince Edward Island in 1873, and now includes the whole of British North America.

M. Henry, a French savant of the school of higher studies, has revealed the power of sulphate of zinc to absorb sunlight and give it back in the dark. A powder produced from this mineral gives a soft luminosity to a fair young face. A cyclist dusted all over with the same material is in himself a lamp on a pitch dark night. Damp will not spoil the effect. Rain is incapable of diminishing its brightness.

There are more Jersey cows in America than there are in Jersey, and yet there are more cows in Jersey than in any other similar area. England has twenty cows to every 100 acres. Jersey has fifty-eight, but then every farm there has its cows, and the farms are small, ranging from three to fifty acres, the reason being that the old Norman laws that still prevail in the island prevent the acumulation of property.

Dutch fishermen make astonishing catches by means of the following very simple plan: They put a number of live worms and insects in a bottle partially filled with water and then cork it securely. The bottle is dropped into the water, the fisherman sinking his lines alongside. It appears that the sight of the wriggling contents of the bottle so excites the appetite of the finny tribes that they fall easy victims to the bated hooks.

There has been great complaint of late by foreigners in Paris regarding the quality of the coffee served in the hotels and cafes. Paris has been noted heretofore for the excellence of the coffee dispensed to visitors, but for some unknown reason the coffee served recently has been of the very lowest grade. It has always been difficult to obtain a cup of good tea on the continent, but no complaint against the coffee has ever been heard before.

The recent death of Dr. Richard Salmon in England, at the ripe age of 106, bears out the truth of Dr. Saltymann's statistics regarding the increasing longevity among medical men. From the archives of his province Dr. Saltymann shows that whereas the average duration of life among doctors in the sixteenth century was 36 years and 5 months, in the seventeenth century it had risen to 45 years and 8 months, and at the present time had reached 56 years and 7 months.

There are at present no less than 2,500 journals published in Paris, in which number the technical journals hold the foremost place. There are over 200 financial papers, 190 medical papers, 170 political papers, 108 fashion papers, 104 illustrated journals, 60 sporting papers, and, among others, 8 papers entirely devoted to philately. The Gazette de France is the oldest political newspaper in France, having lately celebrated its 275 anniversary; Les Petites Offiches is 284 years old, and the Journal des Debatis 107 years.

A citizen says that he was riding on the front platform of a street car in Boston, and, as there was no one out there but himself and the driver, he, in a fit of absent-mindedness, repeated a few lines of Virgil in an undertone. To his surprise the driver of the car took up the lines where he left off and carried them on to the end, and in Latin. And yet, in cultured Boston, there hangs a sign board on which is printed this legend:

VETERINARY SURGEON.
HORSES CLIPPED SATISFACTORILY IN THE REAR.

AN ECHO OF THE TRUCKEE SMASH-UP.

MANY WILL RECALL THIS SAD AFFAIR WHICH HAPPENED IN 1892.

Mr. H Watkins, of this City, Who was Injured in the Wreck Tells of His Terrible Sufferings and Final Cure.

From the Examiner, San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. H. Watkins lives at 2008 Geary Street, San Francisco. He is a railway postal clerk, and has been in that business for years. When seen at his home he gladly told his experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. He narrates the facts leading up to his trying them, the benefits he has enjoyed by their use and the results of recommending them to others

He said: "I have suffered from rheumatism for years. At times I have been so bad that I could not raise my arms over my head. No one had worse rheumatism than I. I got it first in the Truckee smash-up. I was laid on the snow in the wreck and then taken to the railroad hospital. Ever since then I have suffered at times terribly, that is to say, up till a year ago. Once at Redlands, in San Brenardino county, I thought I should die, and at Promontory I was so crippled that I had to be carried to the mail car. No one who has not had it can understand the agony. I was not able to get out of bed at times. I had to crawl on hands and knees from the bedroom to the kitchen.

Occasionally when I tried to rise in the morning the pains would seize me and I had to be caught to prevent my falling. I tried every kind of medicine. The only thing that helped me at all up to a year ago was some fearful stuff an old Mormon gave me when I was taken down in Utah. It was horrible stuff to take and only eased me for a short time

"About a year ago I went into the 'No Percentage Pharmacy' on Market Street. While I was there an old man named Cowen of Vallejo Junction, came in. He told me he was going to get Pink Pills for his rheumatism. I told him if they could do him good they might help me too. He had been up to Byron Springs and was nearly doubled up with rheumatism. The doctors told him just as they had told me, that medicine would do him no good. Well, I didn't give up. I am a young man and you would not expect me to give myself up as a hopeless rheumatic at my age. I was ready to try anything. I bought two or three boxes of the pills and began to take them. The way in which they took hold of me was simply wonderful. I did not take many of the pills either, and, of course, I am careful not to expose myself. I have never been lame since and have never lost a night's sleep from rheumatism. I recommended the pills to my friends and I have yet to hear from the first one who has not been benefited. As for myself, I would gladly make affidavit to the good they have done me, in fact I am only too happy to do so for I cannot say too much for the benefit I have received.

"Going through Vallejo Junction on my train one day I saw the old gentleman, Mr. Cowen, and I called out to him 'how are the Pink Pills.' He replied, 'they're fine.'

"I was down in Los Angeles and called upon a postal clerk, a friend of mine. He told me that his wife was a great sufferer from rheumatism. I told her to try the Pink Pills, and now there is no one in Los Angeles who thinks more of the pills than Mrs. Carr, that is her name. I don't think she had rheumatism quite so badly as I, but she was just as anxious to get rid of it, and she is just as grateful to be well again.

"I always keep a box of the pills handy just in case I should need them, though my wife will tell you how rarely I use them now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

AMERICAN SADDLES.

Some Gems of Art Turned Out in the Far West.

All over North America for many years Cheyenne saddles have been famous, and every equestrian outside of the United States cavalry and of the Northwest mounted police of Canada, has either had his horse tricked out with Cheyenne leather, or has wished he had. The fancy work on saddles, holsters and stirrup hoods, that once made Mexican saddlery famous and expensive, long ago was copied by the Cheyenne makers, who kept up the fame and beauty of American horse trappings, but made them so cheap as to be within the means of most horsemen. In the old days when Western cattle ranged all over the plains and the cowboy was in his glory, that queer citizen would rather have a Cheyenne saddle than a best girl. In fact, to be without a Cheyenne saddle and a first-class revolver was to be no better than the sheep herders of that era.

When the writer was in Cheyenne the other day the first places he looked for were the saddle-makers' shops. He was surprised to find only one showy, first-class store of the kind, and, instead of there being a crowd in front of it, there was no sign of more business than was going on at the druggist's near by, or the stationer's over the way. The goods displayed in the windows were beautiful and extraordinary. There were the glorious, heavy, hand-stamped saddles; there were the huge, cumbrous tapaderos; there were the lariats or ropes; the magnificent bits that looked like Moorish art outdone, and there were mule skinners and the fanciful spurs, and, in short, the windows formed a museum of things that a cowboy would have pawned his soul for. The metal work was all such as a cavalryman once declared it, "the most elegant horse jewelry in creation."

Englishmen and Germans now buy the fanciest and best trappings to send abroad to their homes. Hand-stamped saddles cost from $13 to $85, but $35 buys as good one as a modest man who knows a good thing will care to use. Cowgirl saddles were on view—seven of them—with rigging for side seats and with stirrups made in slipper shapes. It is not that there are really half a dozen cowgirls in the world, or half a dozen women like the Colorado cattle queen, or the lady horse breeder of Wyoming, but there are Western girls who have to ride a great deal, and they have fond fathers and brothers, and still fonder lovers; hence the manufacture of magnificent side-saddles, all decked with hand-stamped patterns, and looking as rich as the richest Bedouin ever dreamed a horsegear being made. There is still a good trade in cowboy outfits that are ordered from Montana, the Dakotas, Wyoming, Colorado and Texas, and similar goods go to the horse ranches of Nevada, Idaho and Oregon. Moreover, as long as men ride horses there will be a trade in fancy outfits for them.—Denver Field and Farm.

Tranquil, But Severe.

"My boy," said the examiner, in the friendliest of tones, to a lad who had just finished a piece of Latin prose, and was about tremblingly to place the composition in the gentleman's hands, "my boy, I looked over your shoulder while you were writing; you have every reason to be satisfied with yourself, and with care, will get a scholarship easily, and a good class in 'Mods' as well."

The examiner whose kind manner reassured the nervous boy had been sent by the University of Oxford to test the classical attainments of the Bath scholars. He was six feet in height, very thin, very tranquil, with that studied softness which seemed to conceal a severity that could be merciless. That side of his character showed itself a few hours later. Mr. Escott describes the exhibiton, in his book, "Platform, Press, Politics and Play."

It was winter; the Avon was frozen over, and examiner and examinees were skating over the surface, the former no less at home upon steel shod feet than in the teacher's chair hearing a recitation in Greek.

An overgrown lout, whose ignorance in Greek grammar had been detected by the examiner, thought he would obstruct the examiner's progress and send him sprawling. Fancying that his act was not observed, he placed in the path such obstacles as happened to be at hand. Along swept the examiner, and as he came to the obstruction, lifted with a single stride his tall form across the barrier.

"My young friend," he called out in a voice heard by all, "the next time you want to play any of these monkey tricks, try them on one of your own height. And now, remember that you have in front of you for to-morrow the verbs in Mi, which may present difficulties to you, greater even than this truck and broomstick did to me."

The laugh was turned against the ill-mannered lad, who, as his conqueror left the river, shouted, "Three cheers for the examiner!" The man was Mr. Percival, Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, and to-day Bishop of Hereford.

The Temple of Serpents.

The small town of Werda, in the kingdom of Dahomey, is celebrated for a loathsome den called the Temple of Serpents. It is a long building dedicated to the priests and mystery men of the kingdom, and in it they keep thousands of snakes of all kinds and sizes. These slimy, crawling creatures literally own the village, as well as the temple, which has been erected for their special accommodation, and may be seen hanging from the rafters and door posts of any house in the town. In Werda to kill a serpent is a crime punishable by death. The serpents in the sacred temple are fed by a regular corps of hunters, who are paid for their services out of the public exchequer.

Feminine Fire Department.

The little town of Nasso, in Sweden, has a feminine department, 150 strong, in its fire brigade. The water works of the village consist simply of four great tubs, and it is the duty of the women "firemen" to keep these full in case of fire. They stand in two continuous lines from the tubs to the lake, about three blocks away, one line passing the full buckets and the other sending them back.

It is dangerous for people to understand each other too well.

IS THIS A SPECIMEN?

Congressman Crowley Tells How He Made His Maiden Speech.

"Did I tell you fellows how I come to make my maiden speech?" asked Congressman Crowley of Texas. "No? Well, it was this way: A gang of newspaper fellows was guying me as not making a speech. 'Speechmaking's no sign of a man's usefulness in congress,' says I. 'Better men than me are not making speeches, but if you're betting that I can't make a speech I'll just go you a ten.'

"'It goes,' says one of the gang. 'You're afraid.' And he shows the long green.

"'What's up in the house now?' says I.

"'Cannon is fighting an increase for a lighthouse keeper in your district,' says he.

"'I'll go right now,' says I. And in I goes. Well, you know what happened. I told Cannon he didn't know as much about keeping a lighthouse as a porcupine does about Ascension day, and Cannon spread himself all over me. If he'd known how I come to jump on him, I'll bet he'd laughed. Then I goes out, and the stakeholder hands me the stuff. That's how it happened."—Washington Post.

Follows Omaha's Example.

Alderman Abercrombie of St. Joseph, Mo., introduced a curfew ordinance at the session of the common council the other night. It is modeled after the ordinance passed by Omaha and Lincoln, and will no doubt become a law, as the members of the council favor its passage.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

The Best Remedy in the World—It Makes People Well.

There is one true specific for diseases arising from impure blood and a debilitated nervous system, and that is Paine's celery compound, so generally prescribed by physicians. It is probably the most remarkable remedy that the scientific research of this country has produced. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth college, first prescribed what is now known the world over as Paine's celery compound, a positive cure for dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For the latter Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

GROWING OLD.

The fairest lilies droop at eventide,
The sweetest roses fall from off the stem;
The rarest things on earth cannot abide,
And we are passing, too, away like them;
We're growing old.

We had our dreams, those rosy dreams of youth;
They faded, and 'twas well. This afterprime
Hath brought us fuller hopes; and yet, forsooth,
We drop a tear now in this later time
To think we're old.

We smile at those poor fancies of the past—
A saddened smile, almost akin to pain.
Those high desires, those purposes so vast,
Ah! our poor hearts! they cannot come again;
We're growing old.

Old? Well, the heavens are old; this earth is, too;
Old wine is best, maturest fruit most sweet;
Much have we lost, more gained, although 'tis true
We tread life's way with most uncertain feet;
We're growing old.

We move along, and scatter as we pace,
Soft graces, tender hopes on every hand;
At last, with gray-streaked hair and hollow face,
We step across the boundary of the land
Where none are old.
—Atlanta Constitution.

TWO HOUSES, BUT ONE HOME.

Of course the old house had been small. When he came out here from "York State" Bob wondered how he ever could make a house of the size he wanted. And yet he thought and wondered about it very little, for he was brave enough. He had talked it over with his wife, who laughed and sang the whole day long, and said she would be satisfied with any kind of a house he would make. And while he was felling the trees and hewing the ends of them and cutting the notches she fixed a tidy little place not far from the wagon, which had brought them over the mountains, and there she sat and sewed—crying sometimes furtively, for the very silence of it, and then singing in the cheeriest of tones and glancing out in the timber where Bob was chopping sturdily.

They lived in the wagon a month, cooking their meals at a fire on the ground, and eating, they two alone in all the wide forest, such gems of food as her dimpled hands had prepared. And finally the logs were rolled together, ready for the raising, and she sat there by the fire with Bob one night, very happy, and said little while he told her what the future would bring them. Next day was the raising. They owned a whole quarter section of land—four times as much as the richest man back there at Geneseo Corners, in York State, had ever possessed. And they had invited their neighbors to come in and help at the raising to-morrow, and this last night in the woods they sat there and dreamed the beautiful dreams of youth, and love, and perfect healthfulness. There was a little fire and the blaze of it gnawed away on the billets of birch, and the smoke went straight up to the blue sky there above the treetops—just a little way above the treetops, it seemed to them, as they talked about it.

They planned where their cornfield should be, and where they would raise oats and potatoes; and Bob wanted a big field for wheat, which couldn't be raised profitably back in York State. And then they arranged for the garden and the rose bushes and lilac trees—and their home was very near them. And then they sat there a long time in silence, the brook singing to them, and the foot of the fox pattering in the dry leaves and the cry of the owl coming to them across the hush of the forest—which was all their own.

Early in the morning, even while the chorus of song birds throbbed in the heavy gloom of the shadowy woods, the neighbors began to come. Bob heard them afar off, for the air was still. They called out "Hello!" as they came into his little clearing, one at a time, each bearing an ax, and all nodding in an embarrassed way at the little woman who wanted a home.

Early, was it? But not too early for her. They had not caught Bob's wife napping, and they thought well of her as they noted the order with which her household gods were treasured, even before there was a roof for her head. She made them a cup of coffee and they drank it, for it was good, and she brought it to them herself, and her face was very fair.

They laid the big foundation logs with four huge stones at the corners. They raised the smaller logs on that, and Bob's wife stood awed, for her home was growing, her heart was full and she almost wept with the stress of a thankfulness she never had known before, and her eyes met those of her husband when the first log over the door was laid. And she sang—though very low—all day from very happiness.

There was only a dozen men, but they worked with a will, and the timbers were ready; and the roof of poles was laid and ready for clapboards long before the day was done. They had eaten an excellent dinner, cooked in kettles they meant to tell "their women" about, and eaten from plates which Bob's wife said her grandmother had owned.

They helped Bob with the stable when the house was done and at dark they said "Good night," and shouldered their axes and tramped through the woods. Bob knelt down by his wife that night and put his arm about her and almost prayed—because in the gloom of the silent woods that unmade house looked like a home.

How wonderful it was in the following day when Bob rived the clapboards and spread them on and weighted them down against the force of a storm and hewed the timbers for the floors and "chinked" the cracks in the walls and swung a door for her! How wonderful it was when Bob's wife brought in her things and chose the corner for her cookstove and spread her treasures as fast as the floor was made! How wonderful it was when the house was completed and they sat one Sabbath morning and knew that God had given them all they wanted in the world!

This was thirty years ago. Bob has come to be called Old Bob, and the house the pioneers built for them that far-away day had come to be much too small, even with the additions time and ability had given to it. And here was the new house, ready and waiting. The carpenters had gone, the lathers and plasterers had taken their tools away, the painters had vanished. And Bob and his wife might move up into the new house whenever they wanted. Inded, Betty, the youngest girl—and the only one left at home—declared the moving was done. Certainly carpets were down in every room in the new house—most of them "boughten" carpets, though Bob's wife had insisted she wanted rag carpets upstairs and in the bedrooms, and the homely but substantial "hit-and-miss" of her hand loom had been used there.

Certainly there was new furniture—fresh from town, with swinging mirrors on the bureaus, and wire mattresses on the beds. Certainly there was an organ in one room and place for a piano in another and a big, high clock that chimed stood on the marble mantel.

But Bob and his wife stood about down there by the old house, not talking much, but just looking across the creek, and both thinking.

"The wagon stood right about here when I was notching the logs," said Bob, stepping it off and looking about in an effort to reconstruct that forest picture.

"And I sat here on a sheepskin that you had spread over a log," said Bob's wife, finding her place in the picture.

"And all that meadowland was one deep swamp," said Bob; "and back here on the hill was woods, and the road runs right where I never thought it could run at the beginning, but that was because the woods were here. Now there isn't an acre of timber on the quarter section."

"And when they got the new house up I hung our curtains at the windows," said Bob's wife.

"Yes," said Bob, "curtains that you had woven on your mother's loom; and you had rugs for the floor and comforts for the bed and all sorts of things for the kitchen—though I don't see how you contrived them."

They had gone to the door of the old house and were looking in. At the place where the fireplace used to burn they let their fancy run, and there was no modern stove with its unpoetic hearth.

"Dan's cradle stood right over there," said Bob's wife, and she almost started forward to rock it—for the mother instinct welled up again with the thrill of her youth.

"And little Letty's coffin stood right here," said Bob, as he drew again the somber picture of that earlier day.

"And here stood Ellen when she married her man," said Bob's wife, retreating a handbreadth may be, for even in the gathering gloom she felt the displacing effect of that daughter's aggrandizement.

"And there by the stump of the wild cherry tree George told me he wouldn't do it," said Bob. And through the pain of the reflection struck the sense of satisfaction, for George came back one time, and placed himself without reserve under the dominion of his father.

So they stood there as the stars came out, these two old people, shutting their eyes to the details of to-day, and trying to see no more than the gracious sweep of a golden morning. They went over the times when the orchard was planted, the trees being carried across the woods, and held by her while Bob packed earth about their tender roots, and blessed them with honest hopes of his labor.

They remembered the time when they dug the well, and how long it took them to learn that the water was better than that from the spring. They erased the big barns from the present picture and remembered the shelter of poles and straw and earth that made their stock all comfortable in those distant winters. They spoke of this and that addition to the first log house, but they kept its outlines in their mind. From this window they used to hear the wolves. From that they saw Andrew ride home from the war, one arm in a sling. Through this door came the first preacher who blessed the neighborhood. And through that trooped for a score of blessed years the sun-browned feet of growing childhood.

They followed the course of the years, in which that frost had melted away, and saw the widening sweep of their tillable land and the growing barns and the flocks and herds, and the manifold wealth of the prosperous farmer. Then they turned to the new house. However loving and neighborly the hands that had helped at "the raising," they knew it was a service different from that of the rough-looking men who came in the gloom of early morning with axes on their shoulders and called a bashful "Hello!" All the neighbors had come, it is true, and numbers of women had come over at noon to help "Bob's folks" with the dinner—though there was little need of that now when vigorous Betty had charge of the work, and her mother need really do nothing—though she was busy constantly.

The timbers had been hauled home from the modern sawmills, and were lying ready to hand. The earth was digged up for a mighty cellar. Foundation rocks lay all about the spaces set aside for the home. All the neighbors were there, but a boss carpenter had charge of the work, and he regarded the presence of the neighbors as something of an intrusion. He understood they meant well and intended it as an expression of kindliness for Bob and his family, but men not bred to the carpenter's trade were less of help than they might be, anyway.

The frame house was "raised" and the neighbors had gone. The carpenters had completed it, the lathers and the plasterers and the painters had gone away. There had been a whole spring full of preparation and there stood Bob—old Bob—and his wife at the threshold of the old house, looking up at the new.

It was all they had dreamed—and much more. It was taller and finer and fuller of ornament than they had ever planned. It had furnishings not the wildest fancy could have provided in the old days. It had ornaments rare enough for kings and chairs too sumptuous to sit upon. It was a palace!

They had moved from the old house up into the new. They had taken everything along. Bob expected to use the log cabin as a toolhouse. They had left nothing behind. And yet they missed something as they went into the newer place. They tried to conjure up that spirit of perfect proprietorship, that sense of dominion with which they entered the cabin in the dusk of the first evening. They tried to realize this later and more difficult conquest of difficulty. But they could not. And they sat in the chairs and slept on the beds and ate at a table with an unreasoning and uncomfortable sense of loss.

In the new house Bob and his wife were away from home.—Chicago Chronicle.

RELICS OF ROMAN OCCUPATION

Interesting Finds in the Excavations at Silchester, in England.

The result of last summer's labors in the excavation of the Roman city of Silchester—about ten miles to the southwest of Reading—may be seen in the rooms of the Society of Antiquarians, under whose auspices the work is carried on. The committee has been systematically engaged with this labor for six successive seasons, none of which has been more fruitful than the last as regards both the structural restoration of the city and individual finds.

About half the area—100 acres—within the walls—has been thoroughly explored, but it is anticipated that several more years' work will be required before the Romano-British city can be regarded as completely disclosed. An expenditure of at least £5,000 a year is needed for the work, which in some respects is of unequaled archaeological and historic interest, as nowhere else have so many houses, temples and public buildings of the period been discovered, and no other place has yielded a forum or a Christian church, and with some justice the committee claims that the exploration of Silchester is the beginning of the history of the civil occupation of Britain by the Romans.

The excavations last year were begun on May 7, and continued with no break, except for harvest, until the middle of October. An area of about three and one-half acres was examined, on which were two insulae (XIII. and XIV.), of which insula XIII. was clearly shown to have been occupied by the dyers, who, according to previous discoveries, worked in this portion of the city.

The real interest was centered in insula XIV., which was almost entirely covered by the foundations of two large and important houses. The western house of the two was of the courtyard type, but different from others of the kind in having the fourth side, which is usually open or nearly closed by a wall, covered by a range of large chambers with mosaic floors, some of the mosaics being of large size and good workmanship and in such good condition that three out of four were taken up and properly mounted for future exhibition at the Reading museum.

The eastern house also disclosed remarkable examples of beautiful mosaic pavements and rich panels for the walls.

Another pavement was interesting, both on account of the coarse workmanship, indicating a late date, and also for the pattern, which marked the position of the table and couches in the triclinium, of which it formed the floor. The most remarkable feature, however, in this house was the small chapel containing the base of a detached shrine for the household gods, a feature not hitherto found at Silchester.

One of the most interesting discoveries was that of a block of wood through which passed two large and perfect lead pipes, while the chase for another was cut in front. This arrangement, it has now been ascertained, represented when complete the force pump, described by Vitruvius as the "machina ctesibica." This is believed to be the first example of Roman hydraulic machinery discovered in Britain.

The most beautiful of the finds is a small pillar-molded bowl of deep sapphire blue streaked with white and yellow spots, which fortunately has been perfectly restored. No other complete example of this kind of imported glass has hitherto been found in this country.—London Times.

Saluting the Flag.

Coffee is now served out, and for fifteen minutes the sailors sit and sip it before beginning the morning work of scrubbing decks and cleaning ship. This work should be finished by five minutes to 8, when the bugle sounds the first call for colors. Upon which the quartermaster bends on the flag to the halyards of the flagstaff at the stern, and a signal boy does the same with the "jack" at the bow, and both stand ready to hoist them at 8 o'clock. A little period of waiting follows, and then 8 o'clock is reported by an orderly to the officer of the deck, who sends the orderly to report it to the captain. Presently the orderly returns and reports:

"The captain says, 'Make it,' sir."

Thereupon the officer of the deck orders:

"Sound off!"

Then ring out the clear, majestic notes of the salute to the flag, while all the men about the deck face it as it soars with dignity aloft and floats out to the morning breeze; officers and men touching their caps in reverential salute as it comes to rest and the music dies away in long, full notes.—St. Nicholas.

A Large Band.

The largest British regimental band is that of the Royal artillery at Woolwich, while the finest is generally allowed to be the band of the Coldstream guards. The Belgian Guides' regiment numbers more than 100 members. The great continental powers recognize the military band as an essential adjunct of every regiment. In Austria and Spain it is said that they frequently number as many as eighty performers, and forty is a common number in Russia, Italy and Belgium. England is still the only country which has adopted a systematic government method of educating her military bandsmen and bandmasters.

Professor in English (to young man)—How would you punctuate the following: "The beautiful girl, for such she was, was passing down the street." Student—I think, professor, I would make a dash after the beautiful girl.—Woonsocket Reporter.

A man never loves a woman less than when she is engaged in church work.

Homemade Potato Sprayer.

The sprayer illustrated herewith is inexpensive and easily made. First, a heavy iron rod about 1¼ inches thick and 6½ feet long must be procured for an axle. This may be taken from an old grain drill, or elsewhere, and adapted to the present use. For wheels, take those of the hay-rake, as a high wheel makes the flow stronger. The shafts should be about eight feet long. They are bolted to the axle, five feet apart, and fastened securely, that the rod may not turn. Two pieces of wood, three by three inches and three and one-half feet long, are bolted across the shafts 12 or 15 inches apart, one of them being placed a trifle back of the axle, and the other farther in front of it. The singletree is attached to a third crosspiece farther forward. Two more pieces, two by six inches and two feet long, are bolted edgewise across the 3x3-inch pieces, two feet apart. These pieces are hollowed out at the top so that a barrel will rest on them securely. Two stopcocks are inserted into the barrel opposite the bung, and two pieces of hose six feet long, terminating in a fine spray nozzle, attached to them. The bunghole is turned upward and a funnel used in filling it. The horse walks between the rows of potatoes, the man following and holding a nozzle in each hand above the row, on either side. When turning at the end of a row, the hose may be laid across the barrel to stop the flow. The pressure of the liquid in the barrel, if well elevated, is sufficient to produce a steady flow, and the jolting of the machine will keep the paris green in solution. With a sprayer of this kind one person can easily spray ten acres of potatoes in a day.—American Agriculturist.

DEVICE FOR SPRAYING POTATOES.

The Nooning Time.

In the longest days of the year, and when on the farm the hardest work of the year has to be done, there should be generally a longer rest at noon than is usually taken. The early morning and toward evening are the most comfortable times to work out of doors. But with a day nearly, or quite, fifteen hours long, there must be a considerable resting place in the middle of the day if health is to be preserved. The noon dinner may take half an hour or more, but after that should be a rest of a full hour or two, and if part of that time be spent in sleep both body and brain will be refreshed. Few know how great is the dependence of the nerves on sleep for their continuance in vigorous health. A noonday rest of not less than two hours will enable more work to be done than can be secured without it. If storms threaten when crops have to be secured the noon rest may be omitted, for in such case when rain comes there will be longer opportunities for resting and even for sleeping than will be desirable.

Selling Young Pigs.

There is always profit in breeding pigs, providing the breeder is not too greedy, and is willing to sell his stock at reasonable rates. Live and let live should always be the rule. In nothing is this more true than in the breeding and sale of stock. It is very easy to get a surplus of stock greater than can be either kept or fattened with profit. As the pigs grow older it costs more to produce a pound additional growth, and what is worse, this extra weight is not worth so much per pound as is that of the smaller pig. The sow pigs may be worth more as they grow older if set to breeding, but the farmer who breeds pigs largely to sell while young does not wait for the sows to get to breeding age before disposing of them. He leaves some of the profit to the purchaser of his stock, as every stock seller ought to do. If no one did this the race of buyers would quickly run out, and then the grower of young pigs would be worse off than ever.

By Products of the Dairy.

Almost all great manufacturing enterprises now derive a great part of their profits from the careful saving and use of by products that were formerly wasted. It is much the same with the dairy. There is no large margin of profit in making butter and cheese at present prices, and the question how to dispose of the by products left after these are made usually decides whether the result shall be on the loss or on the profit side. Making curd cheese without rennet from the skim milk is a profitable way to use it where a near market can be had for it. Almost every city or village would dispose of a large quantity every day if it were placed on market. Besides this, feeding skim milk to fowls, to pigs and to the cows are good ways to dispose of it. Which will be most profitable must depend on circumstances.

Removing Foul Seeds from Grain.

As long as it remains true that as a man sows, so shall he reap, it behooves him to get all foul weed seed out of his seed grain. Some practice "swimming" it out, but the heaviest seeds will not float—only the seed pods of weeds and the lighter stuff. Better sift the wild seed out, and the illustration shows how to do it easily and quickly. Removable wire mesh bottoms may be used and thus a choice made in the size of mesh to use with any particular grain or beans, peas, etc. It will pay to use a mesh coarse enough to permit all small and inferior kernels of grain to fall through with the weed seed. Then only the best and most vigorous kernels will be sowed. Such selection of the best seed year after year will bring up the quality of the grain wonderfully.—Farm and Home.

SIEVE FOR SEED GRAINS.

Watering Horses at Work.

It used to be the rule to keep horses from drinking at high noon or night after they had been working through the forenoon or afternoon, until they had eaten their feed and had cooled down. This was considered necessary in order to prevent injury from taking cold water while the system is heated. But this is cruel to the horses, as they cannot eat what they should if they are parched with thirst. The better way is to give each horse in the middle of the forenoon a pail of water into which a small quantity of oatmeal has been stirred. This will refresh and invigorate the horse without doing any injury, and will prevent him from being injured by drinking freely at noontime. The drink being nourishing, rallies the strength and enables the animal to do a greater amount of work without failure.

Killing Rose Slugs with Hot Water.

It is very slow and difficult work thinning off the rose and pear slugs when they are found on pear and grape leaves. Not many people know that they can be easily killed by drenching the leaves with water heated to 130 to 140 degrees. This is death to nearly all kinds of bugs, and the water can be applied 10 to 20 degrees hotter than this without injuring the leaves either of the pear or grape vine. If the water is applied by spraying, it should be some hotter than is required, so that it may reach the slugs at the temperature that is surely fatal to them. Very cold water or that which has had ice dissolved in it will kill the rose slugs if dashed violently against them, but it knocks off many more, and they are soon found at their work again.

Beets as Green Food for Pigs.

No other kind of root is so greedily eaten by pigs as the beet. It may not have so much nutrition as the potato, but what it has is sweet, and therefore is palatable. Even the fattening hogs will eat some beets every day, and should have them. But their best use is as green feed for sows that are giving milk. It will increase the quantity greatly, but it will need some grain feed with it to keep the sow thus fed from losing flesh too rapidly. It is expected, of course, that the sow will grow poor while suckling her young, but if this goes too far her value as a breeder is lessened, and the next litter of pigs will be deficient in number, or in vigor and size.

Bagging Grapes.

Not so much is written now as used to be about bagging grapes to keep them from insect enemies or fungous diseases. The object is much better accomplished by spraying with the Bordeaux mixture. The bags required a good deal of labor to apply, and at the low rate that grapes have lately sold for, it did not pay. Besides, it was found that the protection made the grape skins more tender, so that they were less prepared for long transportation or for long keeping. Bagging grapes is still practiced by amateurs, but it is a practice likely to be confined to them.

Dairy Notes.

The cow should have all the food that she will assimilate.

A cow that is heated and worried will not milk well and her milk will not make good butter.

You cannot feed a scrub calf into a good one, but you can easily stint a well-bred calf into a scrub.

To make the very best profit the dairyman must own the best land, keep the best cows and give them the best treatment.

Not every farmer can feed his cows a wide ration, because it is sometimes too costly to be available; but whatever the feed there should be plenty of it, and it should be accompanied by plenty of water.

How to Ship Honey.

Wm. Muth Rasmussen, Secretary of the Inyo Bee-keepers' Association gives the following rules of the North American Association for grading and packing honey:

Fancy—All sections to be well filled, combs straight, of even thickness, and firmly attached to all four sides, both wood and comb unsoiled by travel-stains or otherwise; all the cells sealed except the row of cells next to the wood.

No. 1—All sections well filled, but combs uneven or crooked, detached at the bottom, or with but few cells unsealed; both wood and comb unsoiled by travel-stain or otherwise.

In addition to this the honey is to be classified according to color, using the terms white, amber and dark. That is, there will be "fancy white", "No. 1 dark", etc.

Honey that is perfect except not water white can be graded "extra C" and "second grade C." Don't grade or mark anything No. 2 or 3; the name hurts the sale.

Dealers are expected to quote only those grades and classifications to be found in their market.

Be sure to put papers in bottom of case—not old newspapers but clean wrapping paper—and when honey is packed cover with same.

Don't nail cover down tight until you are ready to ship. Some buyer may want to examine it.

Don't put on with big nails.

Don't put in any sections of uncapped honey; it may ruin the whole case.

Don't pack any honey to sell that you would be ashamed to show were the buyer present. The whole case will sell according to quality of poorest honey it contains.

Be sure and have the case faced with the most perfect sections of the grade it contains. Honey is generally retailed from original shipping case and the appearance is its best advertisement.

Buyer will pay more for a case of honey of standard grade, than when packed without regard to grading.

If all bee-keeprs would pay strict attention to the above rules, and pack their honey accordingly, they would be prepared to quote prices so that any buyer in the United States would understand the quality of the honey offered for sale, and if it was packed honestly we would soon have a reputation, and a more secure hold on the honey consuming public than at present.

Mojave Mines.

The Enterprise is in receipt of a letter from Mr. Aug. Quitzow, who recently visited the mines at Mojave in company with Messrs. Will and Frank Putnam.

Mr. Quitzow, who is a mining attorney, and who has also had considerable experience in mining, said they made several mining locations on what appeared to be favorable lodes of mineral.

The Murry and Putnam mine, as far as their developments show, promises quite well; the lode is increasing in size as ... sink from the surface, and if present indications continue they will have a valuable mine in time: they have also more valuable locations in adjacent hills, all of which show well at point of discovery.

Mr. Quitzow says further that he met "Dr." Newman at his camp in the next canyon, and found him a courteous gentleman with an eye to business. The "Doctor" and Mr. Wilson have made many locations and will no doubt succeed in showing up some valuable properties, but at present there has been too little work done upon these locations to determine their value.

The Baron mine in which our friends, John Renz and John Ellis are interested, about four miles southwest of Murry's camp, is a wonderfully rich property. This lode is about 250 feet wide, running 1500 feet in a northerly direction through the entire claim. The mine shows for itself on the surface, nature having thrown up and exposed to the the eyesight near a million tons of ore, any part of which upon examination shews free gold. This property is under contract of a mill, which will be erected as soon as the proper mode of treating the ores from the lode has been ascertained and the question of water has been fully determined. Water and fuel are very scarce, the want of which may retard the development of these desert mines; still with grit and enterprise these obstacles may be overcome and the face of the country changed.—Porterville Enterprise.

Map of The Sierras.

The Sierra Club of San Francisco has revised and republished for sale its lithographed map of the Sierra Nevada mountains in Central California. Its size is 38x39 inches and it includes the southern part of Calaveras, Tuolumne and Mariposa counties, the eastern portions of Madera, Fresno and Tulare counties, including Sequoia and General Grant Parks, the western portions of Mono and Inyo counties, Yosemite Valley, Hetchy-Hetchy Valley, the Grand Canyon of the Tuolumne, the Kings River Canyon, Tehipitee Valley, and the Kern River Canyon. Separate enlarged detail diagrams of Yosemite and Hetchy Hetchy are also lithographed on the same sheet. This map has been compiled from all published sources, including the latest U. S. Geological surveys, and the county maps; and also in the higher regions, or those which are still officially unsurveyed, from the personal observations and explorations of members of the Sierra Club. Being designed to serve as a practical guide for residents of the valley towns and foothills, as well as for other travelers, particular care has been taken to exhibit with clearness and accuracy all roads, trails, bridges, fords and meadows, and the position and height of peaks, lakes and other objects of interest. This map is the first practically complete and accurate map of the high Sierras of California ever published. The map is for sale at Hartwell, Mitchell & Willis, 107 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

MARRIED.

DIAZ—MILLER—At Lone Pine, Aug. 22, 1896, by A. C. Harvey, J. P., Manuel Diaz and Miss Minnie Miller.

Dave Holland went to Keeler Monday.

Pat Keyes is reported very ill in San Francisco.

A. V. Davidson went to San Francisco Tuesday morning.

George Gilliam came down from Fish Springs last Monday.

Arthur Marx came back from San Francisco on Tuesday.

Treasurer Bunney and wife are enjoying a trip to the mountains.

Prof. Whitney, after whom Mt. Whitney was named, died a few days ago.

Rev. T. H. Nicholas left town on Tuesday to attend the Methodist Conference.

The base ball game last Sunday resulted in a victory for the Pintes. Score 20 to 19.

Lafe Gill, of San Diego, brother of Judge Gill, arrived from the lower country Thursday morning.

Marion Devries, of Stockton, Democratic nominee for Congress for this District, is expected here in a short time.

Mrs. Lillie Hawthorne and her son are on a visit from Los Angeles to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Van Dyke of Lone Pine.

Sealed bids for the sale of Privileges at the coming Fair will be received by the Secretary, Geo. F. Willis, up to and including Sept. 30, 1896.

Mrs. J. C. Stone of Ohio, Grand Lecturer of the Grand Lodge I. O. G. T. of California, lectured on Temperance Reform at the Church last Monday evening.

H. Levy is home again after a stay of two weeks at Coso. He is improved in health and would have remained longer had it not been for the heavy rains and wash-outs in that section.

A washout near Candelaria caused the south bound train a delay of three hours last Friday. A cloudburst near Little Lake made the stage road from Keeler to Mojave almost impassable.

The Holiness Band, who have been working earnestly in the northern part of the County for the spiritual welfare of the people, arrived here Tuesday and are conducting meetings at their old camping ground.

A jolly crowd of Big Pine campers were in town two days this week. Among them were Mrs. Gregg, Misses Clara Gregg, Carrie Gregg, Nettie Wallace, Maggie Campbell, Iva Schalton, Mrs. Louis Schalton, Steve Gregg, Wm. Gregg, John Schalton, and Geo. Mitchell.—Bodie Miner.

Tuesday evening at the Court House Hon. Marsden Manson, State Road Commissioner, talked on the condition of our County roads. He took us sternly to task for the state in which he found them, declared their roads to be a sure index of the character of a people, and admonished us to make no delay in improving them.

Wells Barnes is in town and states that the prospects of his new mine are, to say the least, very bright. The mine is a mile and a half north of McIver's and the latter has an interest in it. The ledge is from one to three feet wide and can be traced on the surface for several hundred feet. The rock all shows free gold. An assay of the rock was made and went $140 per ton. Three men are working on the claim and have already between 12 and 15 tons of ore on the dump. They intend to make a milling test in about two weeks.

Eighteenth District Agricultural Association.

INDEPENDENCE, Cal., Aug. 25, 1896.

Meeting called to order, with E. Robinson in the chair.

Present: Directors Robinson, McIver, Shepherd and Rhine. Absent: Cooley and Wells. Credentials of other directors not before the Board.

The following officers were regularly elected for the ensuing year:

President, Bertrand Rhine, P. O. address, Independence.

Secretary—Geo. F. Willis, Independence.

Treasurer—E. Robinson, Independence.

It was decided to hold a Fair on the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of October, 1896, at Independence.

The following racing programme was adopted:

FIRST DAY—WEDNESDAY, OCT. 7.

1. Indian Pony Race, one mile dash; $10 to first horse, $5 to second. Ten or more to enter; entrance fee, 50 cents. Horses owned by white men barred.

2. Two-year-old Trot, ½ mile; best 2 in 3. Purse, $75.

SECOND DAY—THURSDAY, OCT. 8.

3. Three-minute class, Trotting, best 2 in 3, mile heats. Purse, $100.

4. Running, ¼ mile dash. Purse, $25.

THIRD DAY—FRIDAY, OCT. 9.

5. For horses that have not before started. Trotting; best 2 in 3, mile heats. Purse, $75.

6. Running; ½ mile dash and repeat. Purse, $75.

7. Free-for-all Trot, for horses that have no record better than 2:44; best 3 in 5, mile heats. Purse, $100.

National Trotting Rules govern trotting races. California State Agricultural Association Rules govern running races. Entrance fees 10 per cent of purse. Entries close Sept. 20, 1896. Horses to be named the day preceding the race. Not less than 3 to enter and 2 to start. Any race not filled by Sept. 20th is subject to change by the Board.

The discussion and revision of the Premium List was postponed to the latter part of this week.

The People vs. McKinleyism.

EDITOR INYO INDEPENDENT—I crave space in which to answer an editorial squib in the Register of the 13th, which impugns Bryan's ability to manage the financial affairs of seventy millions of people because he only pays $11 taxes.

Were William J. Bryan such an individual as the Grove Johnson who served us in Congress last year elected upon an anti-railroad platform to become a wet nurse for C. P. Huntington's Funding Bill, he would probably pay more to the assessor.

Furthermore, McKinley, the Sphynx of Canton, will have to pay to Boss Hanna $118,000 more or less before he can rightfully pay any taxes whatever. Mr. Register man, hadn't you better drop the tax element in your criticisms of Mr. Bryan?

However, such arguments are quite on a par with those advanced by the gold standard and so-called neutral press all over the country. They have dealt in fallacies for twenty years, some of which I shall try to answer in a few words for the benefit of Inyo readers.

To begin with the gold people state a false premise when they say that gold is a standard of values and talk about two "yardsticks." They know that gold fluctuates; that its value depends upon the law of supply and demand—hence one of their leading authorities, the professor of political economy in Chicago University, has suggested that the price of four or five staples be named at stated periods as a standard of value. We silver men agree with the professor and measure gold by the price of not only five but practically all the commodities. We assert by this measure that gold has unnaturally appreciated by, to honest men, unnatural legislation.

They say that we will work an injustice upon the holder of notes if we make silver a legal tender, by reducing the value of his notes one-half. The fallacy in this is apparant when we cast about among the creditors and ask them would they rather be paid in silver upon which is conferred the legal tender quality or be left without payment, or to try to utilize property obtained by a foreclosure suit and constantly shrinking in value?

"Gold made more valuable by the remonetization of silver." Is wheat made more costly because the poor still have the right to use corn for breadstuffs?

Does it make horses more valuable because a large part of the work formerly done by them is now done by electricity? In short, does an increased demand decrease the price of any article?

"Bi-metallism is a good thing, but we cannot accomplish it alone." Will we be alone with Asia, Mexico and South America with us? An active trade with those countries would be worth far more to us than commerce with Europe, for they take our manufactured articles and return to us raw material, which gives us far the best of the exchange.

"We should use the money used by the most enlightened nations of the earth."

I hold that we are the most enlightened nation on the globe and that we the people of the United States not only have the right but it has become our sacred duty to cut loose from all former party affiliations and in the strength of our liberty reestablish the financial system that served the world since the dawn of civilization, and in so doing we will declare our independence of Europe and establish ourselves as the leading and guardian Nation of the New World in terms more emphatic than by any assertion of the Monroe Doctrine although it be thundered forth from the cannon's mouth.

A SILVER MAN.

C. W. Kyle addressed the people at the Court House, on Thursday evening, from a Republican standpoint. He informs us that free silver silver will kill the nation unless the antidote of a "gold standard" is speedily administered.

Wonderful Mexican Opals.

"The most marvelous country for opals that I ever saw or heard of," said ex-Assemblyman P. H. Mack of Inyo County last night at the Russ House, as he held a handful of beautiful opals up to view, "is Mexico.

"I have just returned from there and I declare the opals you see everywhere astonish you.

"I am mining for gold in an old river-bed at Guanajuato, a town of 50,000 people, in the State of Guanajuato. The opals are pretty thick there and in the town everybody has them; but it is in the little States of Queretaro and Pueblo just south of me that the opals are most plentiful.

"You get them there of almost all possible sizes, colors and shapes. I brought with me some of the rock containing the opals. The gems are scattered through the rock like garnets in granite, which many people have seen in different parts of the Rocky Mountains.

"The opal-bearing rock is often found in clay or between layers of clay and stone of different kinds, and the rock which bears the opals not infrequently changes to one great piece of opal.

"Nearly every Mexican you see has opals for sale. He will go down in his pockets and fish out a lot of them. He keeps them usually in little squares of dark or bluish paper known as jeweler's paper, the same as jewelers use for different kinds of gems. The reason is that this paper makes the gems show up better on account of its dark back ground.

"The opals are so cheap in some places that sometimes you can buy a very good one for as low as 50 cents. It depends, of course, on the place and the plentifulness of the opals.

"But if it is near the railroad you must look out, for the natives have set to counterfeiting the opals. They make them out of artistically colored glass, and unless you notice closely you are liable to get one of these glass opals under the impression that you have got a genuine jewel. Along the railroad, too, they sell more inferior opals than in the interior.

"Though nearly every Mexican you meet has opals, you will never see the natives wear any. They are superstitious about them, as they are in other countries.

"A native that is so poor as to think $5 a small fortune will oftentimes have enough opals in his possession to net $25 to $50 if he had them in this country. Besides this he always knows where he can go and get a lot more at what to us would be a mere bagatelle.

"The opals I have I brought up to give away to friends and to children that I know. Some in the collection are quite valuable. There are a number of water opals among them, and they are especially beautiful when fixed in a neat gold setting. Many of the others are quite valuable too, for some of the opals have a good deal of fire in them.

"I want to say that the Mexicans in these curious mining regions do not look with favor on the movement here of free silver. Since the Mexican Government has established free silver coinage the people have been buying just as little as they could help of the things we have. The reason is they have to pay double rates, and the result is that manufactories of different kinds are springing up in Mexico to supply home demands. There is one company that has come in there and is putting in a plant costing $1,000,000. The people there believe if the people in the United States have free silver it will tend to stop manufacturing there. As it is, they want to develop their own resources, keeping their money at home.

"But as to these opals. They are so plentiful that in many parts they are looked upon as of little value. They wouldn't be of much value if they were unable to sell them. As it is, the tourists and travelers of various kinds are their best customers. Scarcely a man goes to Mexico now that does not bring back a lot of these pretty gems with them."

Mr. Mack, who has large mining interests at Guanaajuato, is here on a business trip in reference to his mines. He considers Mexico a country of fabulous wealth and says it offers magnificent inducements for gold and silver mining.

Another Big Wash Out

This is indeed a season of washouts. Last week Conductor Epstine telegraphed from Benton to Al. Stock at Mound House as follows:

Big washout on your ranch at Big Pine.

Stock telegraphed the following from Mound House to Epstine:

Wire me immediately extent of damages.

To which Mr. Epstine replied:

As the train was winding its weary way over the classic and picturesqe sand dunes peculiar to your ranch at Big Pine one of the passengers shouted, "Look at the washout on Stock's ranch!" All hands rushed to that side of the car, and, lo and behold! the clothes lines were swaying under the burden of a big day's washing. Hence the alarm: Wash out on Stock's ranch. Damage slight. 71; collect $1.37.

Mr. Stock's feelings can be imagined, but never described.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

The Four Year Term.

J. Charles Jones, Assistant District Attorney of Sacramento county, and formerly District Attorney, is visiting Los Angeles. In conversation this morning with reference to the expected decision of the Supreme Court upon the constitutionality of the county government act relative to the four-year term of office, he said that when he passed through San Francisco a few days ago, he received information that led him to believe that the decision may be expected any day. From the information he received Mr. Jones says that he will not be surprised if the court knocks out the four years' term.—L. A. Express.

Miss Ada Lewis, who has been spending the summer with her mother and Inyo friends, left for San Francisco yesterday.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

YIELDING TO THE IMPORTUNITIES OF my hosts of Inyo County friends, expressed in petitions, letters and personally, I hereby offer myself as a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, at the approaching election in November.

The office being a non-partisan one, and as those who have so cordially invited me to seek the office represent all political parties, it would be pleasing to me to be the candidate of the people irrespective of party.

Respectfully,
N. D. ARNOT.

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

The Best Remedy in the World—It Makes People Well.

There is one true specific for diseases arising from impure blood and a debilitated nervous system, and that is Paine's celery compound, so generally prescribed by physicians. It is probably the most remarkable remedy that the scientific research of this country has produced. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D. of Dartmouth college, first prescribed what is now known the world over as Paine's celery compound, a positive cure for dyspepsia, biliousness, liver complaint, neuralgia, rheumatism, all nervous diseases and kidney troubles. For the latter Paine's celery compound has succeeded again and again where everything else has failed.

Eczema All Her Life.

Mr. E. D. Jenkins, of Lithonia, Ga., says that his daughter, Ida, inherited a severe case of Eczema, which the usual mercury and potash remedies failed to relieve. Year by year she was treated with various medicines, external applications and internal remedies, without result. Her sufferings were intense, and her condition grew steadily worse. All the so-called blood remedies did not seem to reach the disease at all until S. S. S. was given, when an improvement was at once noticed. The medicine was continued with favorable results, and now she is cured sound and well, her skin is perfectly clear and pure and she has been saved from what threatened to blight her life forever.

S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) cures Eczema, Scrofula, Cancer, Rheumatism, or any other blood trouble.

It is a real blood remedy and always cures even after all else fails.

JOHN PHILLIPS' DARING RIDE.

From Kearney to Laramie to Bring Relief to Beleagued Troops.

All the "claims" which come before Congress are not manufactured affairs by any means, and when a particularly good one comes to notice the discovery is so refreshing as to attract wide attention. Such a case appears in a bill just reported to the House for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips, widow of John Phillips, whose death was hastened by an act of exceptional gallantry in December, 1866, nearly thirty years ago, and who never received any special compensation for his services. The evidence in favor of the claim is very strong, one of the affidavits being that of Colonel Henry B. Carrington, of the regular army.

In the dead of winter, with the deep snow on the ground and the thermometer 20 degrees below zero at times, and with no food beyond what he carried in his saddlebag, Phillips made a ride of 225 miles through a country inhabited only by hostile Indians, and started re-enforcements to a frontier post, which in a few days would have fallen into the hands of the savages. In 1866 Fort Philip Kearney, in Dakota territory, commanded by Colonel Carrington, was the extreme outpost in that part of the northwest. The Sioux, under Red Cloud, who had been hovering in the vicinity of the post, became warlike, and attacked a wood train a few miles north of the fort. A detachment of troops, consisting of some eighty men, with a few civilians, made a dash from the fort for the purpose of protecting the wood train, were surrounded by the Indians in overwhelming numbers, and after a terrible struggle were massacred in a body. The bloodthirsty Sioux then besieged the garrison, which they outnumbered twenty to one, and a severe trial of endurance began. So fearful was the prospect that the women and children begged to be placed in the powder-house and blown up as soon as the attacking party should be plainly victorious.

At this juncture Phillips, who was a scout and hunter, volunteered to take dispatches to Fort Laramie, 225 miles away. He was obliged to travel by night and hide by day, to subsist on the few biscuits and feed his horse on the scanty supply of oats he could carry attached to the saddle. Those who had left the fort just before him, and a party of scouts who started soon afterward, never lived to tell the tale. But Phillips plowed his way through the snow and carried the news to the soldiers at Fort Laramie, who hastened to the relief of their besieged comrades. The Sioux were so enraged at being thus outgeneraled that they opened a campaign of annoyance and devilry against Phillips, which never ceased till he died. At one time they lassoed him with a view to killing him by torture. Repeatedly they killed his live stock and committed other wanton and vengeful depredations, of which the proof was so clear, including their own admissions, that the court of claims gave judgment against them for $2,210. His death was traceable to his perils and exposures, and to his later persecutions by the Indians.

One of the junior officers in Colonel Carrington's command at Fort Kearney was Lieutenant Grumond, whose widow in time married Colonel Carrington. She is as enthusiastic as her husband in her efforts to procure from Congress for the widow of Phillips the value of the property of which the Indians robbed him because he performed his heroic feat against them. In her affidavit she says, among other things: "During that terrible night, when an attack in overwhelming numbers was constantly expected, John Phillips called to express his sympathy for me, and, overcome by the imminent danger of all concerned, he said: 'If the General wishes, I will go as messenger if it costs me my life.' He gave me his wolf robe to remember him by if we never heard from him again. His whole bearing was manly, brave and unselfish, and beyond all praise."

Phillips was a British subject at the time of his famous ride, but afterward became a citizen of the United States.—New York Evening Post.

A Vengeful Clam.

Mr. Harry Stoll, who keeps an oyster stand in Hoboken, has discovered the thieves who have been stealing his stock. The depredations have never been very extensive, but they have been long continued and were annoying. The most singular part of it was that apparently the thieves did not carry away unopened any of the oysters or clams to which they helped themselves. When they went away they left the empty shells scattered about in the floor to mock the mystified dealer.

Mr. Stoll set many traps, but he caught no thief. He laid in wait himself, but the depredations went on just the same, and in the morning the floor of his shop was strewn as badly as ever with the empty shells.

A few nights ago one of his clams solved the difficulty for him by catching one of the thieves, a fat, sleek, comfortable fellow, who looked as if he might have been making a very comfortable living in the oyster shop. This thief was a rat, and now Mr. Stoll proclaims his discovery that rats like oysters and clams.

Nimble Lads.

In China two little rods, about ten inches long, of wood, bone, ivory, or silver, take the place of knife and fork at meals. These rods are called by foreigners "chopsticks," but to the Celestial they are known by a name that means "nimble lads." They are both held in the right hand, one between the tips of the second and third fingers, the other between the thumb and forefinger; and so neatly and lightly are they made to work together that one can easily understand the reason for their native name. Every Chinaman that considers himself anybody carries a chopstick case hanging from his girdle. As meat is always served already carved, a knife is really not needed; but they usually carry a long, narrow knife in the case, for the purpose of severing pieces of meat that have not been quite cut apart.

To Stop a Runaway.

A device for freeing a runaway horse from the vehicle has been invented by a New England man. By moving a lever the shafts are released from the vehicle and the vehicle can be guided by the same lever until it stops.

COALING SHIPS IN MIDOCEAN.

Some of the Colliers Engaged in It Are Fleet and Trustworthy.

A few years ago, to the astonishment of many people, Admiral Sir Michael Culme-Seymour demonstrated the possibility, provided the conditions of weather and sea be not especially unfavorable, of coaling battle ships in mid-Atlantic. Trouble, anxiety and a certain amount of risk are involved, but all these disadvantages might notably be lessened if, instead of employing ordinary tramp colliers of small tonnage, we built a class of fleet "coalers" specially designed for the service of the navy in war time, and if attached to them we maintained a corps of officers and men all specialists in the art and mystery of coaling ships.

The features desirable in such a vessel are great coal carrying capacity, high speed, a well-protected stern, a moderately heavy gun mounted as a stern chaser, and all the latest and best appliances to facilitate rapid coaling from her. No navy as yet possesses a vessel of this sort. Her value and usefulness would, nevertheless, be enormous. For in most seas a greater proportion of moderate than rough weather is encountered; in many seas there are islands or rocks, the lee afforded by which might be utilized for coaling purposes if only colliers happened to be upon the spot, and if it were a standing rule in any squadron to which "fleet colliers" were attached that ships should fill up with coal at every possible opportunity, even if at the moment they did not actually need it, the ability of our vessels to operate effectively at long distances from their regular bases would be enormously furthered. As for the "fleet collier" herself, when cruising with a fleet she would have no difficulty in keeping up with it, and could therefore be protected by it, and when detached her speed, twenty-two or twenty-three knots, would enable her to outstrip all but the very fastest of the enemy's cruisers, her armored stern would shield her from the shells even of them, and her heavy stern chaser would enable her to return at least as good as might be sent after her by her foe. She might be built to carry 8,000 or 10,000 tons of coal in addition to supplies for herself; if opportunity offered she might discharge her cargo at some temporary base and return home for more. She would be neither an impediment nor anxiety to any fleet to which she might be attached, but rather a source of comfort and security, and in the event of a fatal accident occurring to one of the other vessels in company she could receive the homeless crew, and even wait for a time without delaying her consorts for an instant. So many advantages, indeed, would result, especially in war time, from the employment of vessels of this nature that it is astonishing that nothing of the kind has up to the present been constructed. It is not too much to say that the most serious preoccupation of the modern admiral during active operations is the question of coal supplies.—Nineteenth Century.

Applied Theology.

Stonewall Jackson's religion was always spoken of in the same breath as his military genius—of which, indeed, it was an integral part. His servant used to say that he always knew when there was to be an especially bloody battle, for the general spent most of the preceding night on his knees. His staff could not fail to be imbued with the sentiment of their leader. Mr. J. N. Jones, a chaplain in the army of Northern Virginia, relates a characteristic incident that owes its wit and complexion to "Stonewall's" well-known religious character.

During the battle of Malvern Hill, General Jackson rode, as was his wont, into the very hottest of the fire. For some time he and his staff sat on their horses at a point at which there was a converging artillery fire, but the general seemed to be entirely oblivious of it until one of his couriers was killed. Then he turned to his staff, and told them to dismount and shelter themselves.

Major Dabney chanced to be near a very large, thick, oak gate-post, and very wisely got behind that, sitting bolt upright with his back against it.

Soon after Major Nelson rode up to bring some message from the general of another division to General Jackson, and with a soldier's keen eye, took in the situation. Delivering his message, he rode to Major Dabney, saluted and said:

"Major Dabney, every shot and shell and Minie ball strikes just where the Lord permits. You must excuse me, sir, for expressing my surprise that you are seeking to put an oak gate-post between you and Special Providence!"

The major, not at all abashed, replied: "My dear fellow, you do not understand the doctrine of Special Providence. At this juncture, I look upon this gate-post as a very Special Providence."

Stupidity of Armed Animals.

How much less wit have such animals—animals like the porcupine, 'possum, skunk, turtle—that nature has armed against all foes, than the animals that have no such ready-made defenses, and are preyed upon by a multitude of enemies. The price paid for being shielded against all danger, for never feeling fear or anxiety, is stupidity. If the porcupine were as vulnerable to its enemies as, say, the woodchuck, it would probably soon come to be as alert and swift of foot as that marmot.—St. Nicholas.

Never.

Agnes—It seems wicked to eat those dear little spring lambs that gambol on the green.

Paul—Don't worry, dear; they are never eaten while they are able to gambol.—Detroit Free Press.

Not Harmful.

Doctor—Above all, you must not exert your mental capacity too much.

Poet—But I want to finish a volume of poetry.

Doctor—Oh, that will not hurt you in the least.—Judy.

A Recognition.

Mr. Bickers—The talkativeness of women is universally acknowledged.

Mrs. Bickers—Oh, it is, is it?

Mr. Bickers—It is. The term "mother tongue" is idiomatic in most languages.—Detroit Free Press.

The man who was in the war is as unreliable as the man who has been fishing.

ARCHER'S FAVORITE HORSE.

Pathetic Story of the Famous Jockey and the Steeplechaser Fatigue.

Archer, the celebrated jockey, was riding in a steeplechase, his mount being a horse called Fatigue. The man was fond of the horse, which returned his affection with liberal interest. At the last fence the horse fell and broke his leg. Archer, though of course thrown, fell away from the horse, and was not badly hurt. The pathetic scene that followed is described by Vogue:

He started away to deliver news of the accident and arrange to have the horse shot, but was stopped by hearing a whinny. Poor Fatigue could only lift his head, but he was looking after and calling the rider he loved so well. Archer returned to the horse, and sitting down on the turf, took the poor creature's head in his lap, and sent a boy with a message for what was necessary. Meanwhile the horse lay still, except for an occasional spasm of pain.

No one wanted to shoot poor Fatigue. A small boy finally volunteered, if no one else would, but he'd "a heap ruther not." When the pistol was finally given him his small hands trembled so that Archer took the weapon from him, saying:

"You're nervous, lad; you'll bungle it. He sha'n't have his pain added to. He'll never know what put him out of his misery." Addressing the horse, he added, "If I wasn't fond of you I couldn't bring myself to do it; but you sha'n't run risks of being hurt more."

With one hand he caressed the horse's head, with the other he put the pistol to the forehead.

"Good by, Fatigue, old chap, good by," and he pulled the trigger.

Fatigue hardly struggled, but settled down, dead, with his head still on his favorite rider's lap; and Archer sat quite still till the last quiver was over, his head bowed, and did not notice that the red was staining his clothes.

MR. GLIMMERTON'S BESETMENTS.

Troubled Most Just Now Over a Whatnot In the Parlor.

"In her latest rearrangement of the parlor," said Mr. Glimmerton, "my oldest daughter has placed in front of the whatnot a comfortable rocking chair in which I have always liked to sit. The whatnot is a flimsy structure on legs so slender that they wabble when you look at them. Upon its shelves there are many delicate bottles and jars and vases and things that are always ready to fall off.

"If I were not so eternally kept down, I should be a man of cheerful spirits. Even as it is I manage to keep my head above the slough of despond, but I have a pretty hard time of it what with one thing and another, and just now the whatnot in the parlor is one of my most trying besetments. One cannot sit in the big chair now without danger of knocking the whatnot over. The first time I tried it the chair rocked back and brought up against it. All the bottles and jars and vases on the shelves nodded violently, many of them beyond recovery, and these went down with that slight but compact crash that thin china makes when it falls.

"Then I had to keep the whatnot always in mind. If I sat in the rocking chair at all, I had to sit in it carefully. Once when I had forgotten about the great calamity and had jumped up rather suddenly the chair rocked back and touched the whatnot again, this time, however, not so hard; only a few things fell. But now I have given up the chair altogether, for with the whatnot at its back it is no longer a comfort to me.

"I look at the big chair longingly, and I fancy it looks with sympathy at me, and I wait with patient cheerfulness for the next new arrangement, when the flimsy whatnot shall be on one side of the room and the comfortable rocker on the other."—New York Sun.

Christiania.

The chief street of Christiania is the broad Karl Johans Gade, which leads up from the eastern station to the palace. Here on opposite sides are two buildings of importance, where young men flock to study and old men meet to legislate. The proximity of politics and learning recalls the conception of Stein, who hoped that the presence of a great university in Berlin would have a good effect on the government. The chief Prussian and Norwegian temples of the thoughtful goddess were founded within a few years of each other. Both have displayed a readiness to welcome new ideas and furthered the cause of freedom in countless fields of thought.

The life and movement of the city are practically confined to this street and the harbor. There the dramatist Ibsen is in the habit of walking every day, and his countrymen are said to regulate their watches by his appearance. It was my fortune to lunch in a restaurant at a table not far from where he sat, but his face did not specially attract me. Those who feel more sympathy with his works and relish his portraits of exceptions would be fascinated by his grim and crabbed features, unrelieved by any frank or genial smile, for of such are the world's reformers.

Inclosed in a shed on the grassy ground behind the university buildings are two viking ships, which date from the middle ages. No relics of the past are more essentially poetic than those which mark the earliest triumphs of man in his awful struggle with things. According to all accounts, the lot of Norwegian fishermen and peasants is still peculiarly hard, for nature is a cruel stepmother, and life becomes almost tragic for them by excess of work.—Westminster Review.

VALUABLE FRANCHISE SECURED.

The franchise of easy digestion—one of the most valuable in the gift of medical science—can be secured by any person wise enough to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters either to suppress growing dyspepsia, or to uproot it at maturity. Bilious, rheumatic and fever and ague sufferers, persons troubled with nervousness, and the constipated, should also secure the health franchise by the same means.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

TOO MUCH KNIFE.

The use of the surgeon's knife is becoming so general, resulting fatally in such a large number of cases, as to occasion general alarm. The press almost daily announces the death of some unfortunate whose system could not withstand the shock of an operation, and whose life was cruelly sacrificed to the keen blade of the surgeon.

Of course, in some instances an operation is necessary, and is the only means of saving life, but such cases are exceedingly rare. So many deaths occur under these conditions, however, that the public is beginning to realize that the doctors are too hasty in resorting to the knife, and if such a state of affairs continues, there will before long be a general uprising against such measures. It is but reasonable to believe that the majority of operations are unnecessary, but when the fatal mistake is discovered too late, only the doctors ever know of their error, and though a precious life is given up, the public is assured that death would have resulted in spite of the operation, and who is ever the wiser?

The folly of resorting to the knife in cases of cancer, is demonstrated every time it is undertaken. The disease is in the blood and the cancer or sore is but the outward manifestation of a terrible condition of the entire circulation. To cut out this sore, therefore, does not in any way effect the disease, and it can easily be seen that the only correct treatment is to get at the seat of the disease, and purify the blood; the sore will then heal up naturally. S.S.S. is the most powerful blood remedy made, and is the only cure for cancer.

MR. WILLIAM WALPOLE.

To submit to an operation, is to voluntarily endanger one's life, without the slightest hope of being benefitted.

Mr. William Walpole, is a wealthy planter residing at Walshtown, South Dakota, and is well known all over the state. Under date of January 20th, 1896, he writes; "About three years ago, there came under my left eye a little blotch about the size of a small pea. It grew rapidly, and for the past year, shooting pains ran in every direction. I became alarmed and consulted a good doctor, who pronounced it cancer, and said that it must be cut out. This I would not consent to, having little faith in the indiscriminate use of the knife, though I was alarmed at my condition. Reading of the many cures made by S.S.S., I determined to give that medicine a trial, and after I had taken it a few days, the cancer became irritated and began to discharge. This after awhile ceased, leaving a small scab, which finally dropped off, and only a healthy looking little scar remained to mark the place where the destroyer had held full sway. Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to the great blood purifier, S. S. S., and I write this hoping that it may be the means of leading other sufferers to a cure."

Cancer is not incurable, but the only means of curing it is to rid the blood of the disease. S.S.S. never fails to do this, but it is the only remedy to be relied upon. It is guaranteed purely vegetable, and cures Cancer, Scrofula, Eczema, Catarrh, Rheumatism and any other disease of the blood. Other blood diseases often develop into such alarming conditions that the doctors think an operation necessary. Scrofula, for instance, often diseases the glands of the neck to such an extent that an operation is looked upon as absolutely the only relief. This is also a grave error, as the disease is in the blood and a real blood remedy is the only cure.

An operation never did cure a blood disease. Beware of the knife!

OH, YE FACES.

Faces, faces,
Crowding city streets and places,
Bright with hope, and love, and laughter,
Dark with passions of despair!
Oh, the story of the faces;
Angel faces, demon faces,
Faces, faces everywhere.

Oh! the beauty of the faces,
Sunny locks and fairy graces,
Little wandering gleams of heaven
Lost among the ways o' men.
Oh! the brightness of the faces,
Maiden faces, childish faces,
Beauty in all forms and phases,
Sojourner and denizen.

Oh! the pathos of the faces,
Blighted hopes and dark disgraces,
When the angel robe is spotted, and the White soul stained with sin;
Oh! the story of the faces—
Women faces, youthful faces—
All the harp-chords strained and broken
Ere the anthem could begin.

Oh! the pallor of the faces,
Flying from the cold death places;
Seeking, in the shouting highways,
Respite from the hell within.
Oh! the sadness of the faces,
Mother faces, widow faces,
Haggard with the toil and watching,
By the night lamp, pale and thin.

Oh! the horror of the faces,
Scowlings, frowns, and dark menaces,
Sodden with a thousand vices,
Hideous with the brand of Cain.
Oh! the terror of the faces,
Felon faces, traitor faces,
Plague spots on the fair creation,
Nightmares of a fevered brain.

Faces, faces
Crowding city streets and places—
Faces smooth with youth and beauty,
Faces lined with age and care,
Oh! the story of the faces,
Of the glad and weary faces,
Of the faces everywhere.

ANITA CORTEZ.

It was young Morgan's first appearance on any stage. The city editor wanted a two-column article on "Mrs. Bluebeard from Behind the Scenes," and Morgan was given the assignment. The press agent introduced him to the stage manager, who grunted a response and then turned his attention to weightier matters.

The stage was dirty looking; some scenery, backed up against the wall, appeared garish and cheap—not at all so soft and beautiful as when seen from the front. A chorus girl brushed past Morgan; she was plastered with rouge and had two heavy black lines painted under her eyes. Her lashes were thick with some black stuff—and yet from his seat in the parquet the other night he had thought her beautiful beyond compare.

The play had already commenced and the comedian was capering around the stage with the soubrette. A crowd of men incased in brass armor leaned against a stone painted wall, while some chorus girls gowned as peasants, were chatting and laughing a few feet away.

"What the devil are you girls gadding about over there?" came the voice of the stage manager. "I've told you a hundred times to stand in that second entrance and wait your cue there. I'll fine the whole crowd of you if I have to tell you again."

The girls moved in a matter-of-fact sort of way to the entrance designated. One of the girls, a light-haired little thing, stuck her tongue out when the stage manager's back was turned. "Cripps is an old crank," she said. The other girls laughed.

Young Morgan took a long breath. He was accustomed to profanity down at the office, but then there were no women there.

A burst of music and the girls tripped on the stage, just as the comedian, panting and persiring, came tumbling off. "I'm going to cut that dance tomorrow night, Cripps. It's too much exertion for a warm night."

"Cut your whole business for all I care," answered Cripps. "It's not my reputation you're making. The whole blooming show can go to the devil as far as I am concerned."

The comedian yawned. "Got 'em again, Cripps?" was all he said.

Six girls came jostling off the stage. One of them stumbled against a bit of projecting scenery and tore a rent in her gown. "Who's got a pin? Who's got a pin?" she shouted.

Cripps heard her. "Tore your dress, did you? That'll cost you a dollar—help you not to be so careless, too. Take the dress to Mrs. Ward after this scene and tell her to mend it."

"I couldn't help it, Mr. Cripps. I hurt my side against the scene, too. I've got enough to put up with without being fined."

"Can't help how the devil you did it," was Cripps' unfeeling rejoinder. "You girls come off that scene like a pack of frightened sheep. Take your time. Nobody's chasing you. Here, Gadsby, mind your lights! Quick now—out lights—down with that drop! Shove that wing around more—so-so—that's enough. Don't take all night with that table. That is a quick change, not a funeral! Get out of the way, you fool reporter! Push that chair on the stage. Now up lights—up lights for the love of heaven, and be quick about it!" And up went the lights as suddenly as they went out, and Morgan heard a burst of applause from the front as the "Exterior of the King's Palace" gave way in fifteen seconds to "A Room in Bluebeard's Castle." The girls were rushing up the narrow wooden stairs for a change of costume—armored knights were running past him toward the stage—the orchestra was playing a wild fanfare—the stage manager was looking at his watch and grinning triumphantly. "Made the change in four seconds quicked time than last night," he said.

"Have you a pin, please" Morgan turned. It was the girl with a tear in her gown.

The reporter gave her a pin. "The stage manager is not gracious to-night," he said.

"Same as usual," she answered. "He doesn't change much. That's his daughter over there"—and she swept her arm vaguely toward a crowd of girls who were sitting on a flight of red steps.

"The one with a pink ribbon in her hair?" asked Morgan.

"No, that's the comedian's wife—Mrs. Winters. The girl with the yellow tights is Minnie Cripps. She and the comedian's wife are thick as thieves. They don't love me and I don't love them. Some day I'll get even with them—Mrs. Winters first, though."

"You're Spanish?" asked Morgan, looking at her lustrous hair and her dark Spanish eyes.

"Yes, my name is Anita Cortez."

"I remember you now. You do a Spanish dance around a dagger stuck in the stage."

"Yes, and if it wasn't for that dance Mrs. Winters and I—oh, well, I'll tell you after the show. Going anywhere after the show? No? Well, the curtain drops at 10:54 o'clock and it takes me about twenty minutes to get out. I'll meet you in the ladies' saloon at the cafe around the corner at 11:20 o'clock. I have to go up stairs and dress for the second act now. When I come down I'll show you my dagger. It's a beauty, full of jewels, and I can throw it fifty feet and hit a bull's eye. There goes the curtain down on the first act. I'm late." And she darted up the stairs.

Then there was pushing and shoving and hauling and hoisting as the coatless scene shifters began setting the scenes for the second act. The orchestra leader came through a little door that led up from under the stage. Cripps caught sight of him.

"Don't give an encore for the opening chorus to-night, Betterton. We're four minutes late now on the first act. It's twenty-one of ten."

"All right," answered the orchestra leader. "There's a fine house out front." Then, after a pause: "Say, Cripps, I don't want to interfere, but that Cortez woman is flirting with every man in the house again. She's got my first violin daft. He made two discords just because he can't keep his eyes off her."

"I warned that Cortez minx two weeks ago that I'd fire her. The two weeks are up to-night—and she goes. I guess she knows it, too, for she's been looking ugly—confound her!" He pulled out his watch. "We're ready for you, Betterton," and as the orchestra leader disappeared through the little door Cripps called upstairs: "All down for the second act!"

A few minutes later the curtain went up on the second act. Cripps was swearing, as usual, and a sensitive chorus girl was crying because he had merely called her a "waddling hog" and had threatened to fine her if she didn't walk with her head up in the air and not down on her chest, "as if she was rooting for walnuts." The act was half over when Morgan saw Anita Cortez coming down the wooden steps. At the foot of the steps stood the comedian's wife, May Winters. Her back was toward Anita. In a second the dancer had drawn a dagger from her belt—another second and she took a quick look around. No one but Morgan observed her; she saw that he was looking at her, and so she threw a kiss at him. Then, like a flash, the dagger flew through the air and buried itself to the hilt in May Winters' back. Simultaneous with her shriek came a cry from the dancer, as she deliberately tumbled down the steps, landing on top of the wounded woman. With the quickness of lightning she pulled the dagger from the quivering flesh and sprang to her feet.

"My God," she cried. "My God, Cripps, come here. My foot slipped on the stairs and the dagger flew out of my hands, wounding May Winters, and—oh, my foot's sprained and there's my cue." And with a limp she bounded on the stage and throwing the dagger, dripping with blood, point downward, she danced around it like a wild thing; while the audience, moved by her frenzy, rose and cheered again and again at her tempestuous and whirlwind-like entrance.

Behind the scenes a different part was being played. The wounded woman was carried into a nearby dressing-room and the stage carpenter had sped up the street for a doctor. Winters, the comedian, was stanching the flow of blood with his cap. The woman was unconscious.

"She did it on purpose," said Cripps. "That fall of hers was a regular stage fall—you can't fool me."

"I don't think it was done purposely," said Winters, unsteadily. He bent his head and the tears slowly rolled down his cheeks and fell on the pink tights of the hurt woman. Cripps walked softly to the door and went out; he whistled softly to himself.

The doctor arrived just as Cripps came to the door again: "Hurry up, Winters—your cue."

"By heavens, Cripps, I can't sing a topical song now."

"It's your bread and butter out front there. Your wife's in that room. You can't help her by staying. Better look after your bread and butter."

Winters dug his nails into the palms of his hands. Cripps half led, half pushed him toward the stage. "Your hand's full of blood; wipe it on the wings as you go past," he said, quietly.

And so Winters went capering on the stage and sang and laughed and made the audience almost wild with delight, and the doctor in the dressing-room looked brave and tried to stop the flow of blood.

After he had sung three verses he darted from the stage and was in the dressing-room. Anita Cortez was helping the doctor.

"I'm very sorry about the accident, Mr. Winters," said the dancing girl, calmly. "I've lost my position by it. Cripps has discharged me."

Winters looked at her and set his teeth. She looked at him and smiled. "Accidents will happen, you know," and she sighed. "Can I be of any further assistance, doctor?"

"I think not," he answered.

She walked to the door. "Good-by, Winters," she said, without turning her head. Noiselessly she opened the door.

Winters dropped on his knees beside his wife. "Well?" he interrogated, looking up at the doctor.

"Unless there's an internal hemorrhage, she's all right. I think, though, she'll pull through. Have some one ring for an ambulance. She'll be better at a hospital than at home."

* * * * *

Young Morgan walked into the ladies' cafe at the saloon around the corner. Anita Cortez was sitting at a table. She looked handsomer off than on the stage.

"You're late," she said.

"Yes," he answered. "The manager kept me here making me promise not to use the story—it would hurt the show. And so I promised, though the city editor would kill me if he knew I had the story and didn't use it. What will you have to drink?"

"I'm not hungry," she answered. "Another thing—I didn't ask you here to eat and drink. I want to tell you a story. Once upon a time—that's the way all nice stories begin, you know—oh, but this isn't a nice story at all, so it must begin differently. Once there was a dancer, and she joined a burlesque company. There was a man in it, a comedian, whom she knew some years before. But they had certain reasons for not allowing other people to know this, so he treated her as coolly as she treated him—that is, when anyone was looking."

"Ah, I see now," said Morgan.

"No, you don't, my dear boy. Let me continue. This comedian was married to one of the chorus girls—had been married recently, too. This hurt the other woman's pride, for the man had sworn his love for her long before he had met the pretty blonde. But she didn't want the man now. She was too proud and she had also outgrown her liking or loving, call it what you will. See that table by the door? Well, three days ago the comedian came in here after the matinee. The other woman—well, I was the other woman—was sitting at that table alone. No one else was in the room. He came over to me and begged me to leave the company. His wife was jealous of me. Women grow jealous intuitively. I refused to leave the company. He got on his knees to beg me. Just then entered his wife. She marched up to the table, called me every vile name in the calendar, and before I had an inkling of what she intended to do she slapped my face. I was on my feet in an instant, but Winters came between us and got his wife downstairs. I swore I'd be even with her, and I have been."

"But," said Morgan, "if you'll pardon me saying so, don't you think she was justified in slapping your face?"

Anita Cortez laughed.

"What a guileless boy you are!" she said. "I'll tell you another story—a shorter one. Suppose a man marries a woman and in six months tires of her and leaves her to starve. Then suppose he marries another woman a year or so afterward. Wife No. 2 finds her husband with Wife No. 1 and slap's No. 1's face. Now, legally, if there was any slapping to be done the first wife should have the right, wouldn't she? Well, the first wife didn't slap—she stabbed. Will you kindly help me on with my cloak?"—Footlights.

The Kiss Ecclesiastic.

At a fashionable wedding party, just as the happy pair were about to start on their wedding tour, the pretty little bride was thanking the clergyman who had made her and her choice one; on which the reverend gentleman, who was an old friend of the family and a bit of a wag, said: "But, my dear, you have not paid me my fee."

"What is it?" said the bride.

"A kiss. Won't you pay it before you go?"

"Of course I will," she answered, blushing and laughing, and she did.

A severe old maiden lady, standing by, was terribly shocked at such levity, and worse, as she thought it, on the part of the jolly divine; but everyone else, the bridegroom included, smiled at the incident. As the old maid, a little later, was about to drive away from the door, she put her head out of her brougham window and said severely, as the parson among others bade her adieu:

"Well, Mr. Clergyman, how about that ecclesiastical kiss?"

"Not now," he answered. "I will give it to you another time. So very public here!"

She disappeared. The guests roared, and the parson scored.—London Tidbits.

Many Times Its Weight.

A noted entomologist who had been writing on the wonderful feats of strength as exhibited in the beetle family tells the following: "I selected" (he says) "a common black water-beetle, weighing four and two-tenths grains, and found that he was able to carry a load of shot in a small bag, the whole weighing eight and a quarter ounces, or exactly eight hundred and fifty times the weight of the insect. If a man weighing one hundred and fifty pounds could carry as much proportionately he could shoulder a forty-five ton locomotive and then chain a train of cars together and take the whole lot across the country at the rate of five miles an hour."

Compliments of the Road.

Tired Tatters—Yes, sir, pard; it pays ter be honest.

Weary Wraggles—I know, now, Tatters, why ye'r so durn poor.—Louisville Truth.

Making Orchards Pay.

The accompanying illustrations, engraved from photographs taken at the same distance so as to preserve the exact relative proportions of each, tell the whole story of the difference between care and neglect of a young orchard. Each of these trees is the best—not a representative, but the best tree to be found in the orchard from which it is taken, though the larger (Fig. 1) is more nearly representative than the smaller (Fig. 2). The tenants on five adjoining farms owned by one man, were furnished with a hundred or more trees to the farm. Thus the trees were all planted at the same time, in similar soil, and from the same lot of trees, so that the only difference must come as a direct result of the planting, and after-care received. In the best of these orchards there was no stinting in digging the holes. The roots were carefully spread, and the soil, mixed with stable manure, firmly packed about them. Every winter the ground has been covered with manure taken directly from the stable, a few extra forkfuls being thrown close about each tree, and during the summer the soil has been cultivated in truck and potatoes. These orchards are now seven years old, and in this particular one only several trees have been lost, in spite of the extremely dry summers, though I know of one of the orchards which has but twelve trees left and

FIG. 1. WELL-CARED-FOR TREE.

A Homemade Garden Roller.

The illustration herewith shows a handy garden contrivance that can be made in a few moments. A section is sawed from a round log, and its surface smoothed. Two round bits of iron rod are driven into the center of each end, and the roller is ready to take the place of the wheel in the wheelbarrow, the latter being unshipped for this purpose. The special value of this arrangement is that no new frame nor handles are needed for the roller, and that the barrow can be weighted to give just the pressure desired.

Growing Peppers for Market.

In every neighborhood there is usually a good demand for garden peppers about the time vegetables are being put up for pickles. We have known farmers who have made a good business growing a few hundred pepper plants, and selling the produce not only to neighbors, but through grocery stores in the near-by city or village. The plants need to be started in a greenhouse, and unless the farmer has one of these useful conveniences it will pay him to purchase the plants of some commercial seed and plant grower, who will sell them by the hundred at cheaper rates than a farmer can afford to grow for himself the small number that he requires.

Shallow Cultivation for Corn.

Nearly all authorities now agree that only shallow cultivation should be given corn, and that this should be done so as to leave the surface nearly or quite level. This is the best way to save the moisture in the soil for the dry time that is pretty sure to come when corn is earing. We never knew corn cultivated shallow and the surface kept level to fail of yielding a good crop, but we have seen many pieces half ruined by running a deep furrow between the rows just as corn was coming into tassel. This exposes a larger surface to the air to be dried out, and if any rain falls it is sure to run in the furrow and do the least possible good.

Buckwheat After Buckwheat.

The buckwheat crop is more often grown in succession than is any other, in part perhaps because it is often put on land that cannot be prepared for other crops earlier in the season. So there is no alternative when the sod is once broken up but to sow buckwheat until the land can be reseeded. We have known timothy seed sown with buckwheat, in July, and making a fair stand when the buckwheat was cut early in September. On dry uplands clover is sometimes sown with buckwheat and gets sufficient foothold in the soil to endure the winter. But wherever the land is too wet to allow any other crop than buckwheat to be grown on it, there is no use trying to grow clover. It may make a show in the fall all right, but will inevitably be lifted out of the soil by freezing and thawing the following winter.

Silver Spangled Hamburgs.

After twelve years of breeding and carefully testing nearly all breeds of thoroughbred fowls as egg producers, I give my preference to the breed shown here. I have carefully tested them for twelve years and in one experiment they showed their superiority as follows: Ten hens and a cock of Brown Leghorns, Laced Wyandot and Silver Spangled Hamburgs were placed in separate yards, fed the same and cared for exactly alike. Eggs produced:

| | May. | June. | July. |
|---|---|---|---|
| S. S. Hamburgs | 265 | 254 | 257 |
| Brown Leghorns | 204 | 185 | 122 |
| Laced Wyandots | 125 | 125 | 80 |

The Hamburgs gave more eggs per day and during July were becoming fat, while half the Wyandots wanted to sit. The Hamburgs continued to lay, showing no signs of broodiness and laying nearly as many eggs during September as in May. During the previous year the eggs from twenty Hamburg fowls sold for $56.35, making a net return over cost of feed of $1.15 per hen. This is a handsome fowl with silver white plumage, each feather ending with a most beautiful spangle. They are a small fowl and very light eaters, consuming only about half as much as the larger Wyandots. They are non-sitters, active foragers and stand confinement better than any other breed I have yet tried.—Leslie Stewart in Farm and Home.

Care of the Colt's Feet.

When farmers raise colts they usually work the mares more or less during the following summer, and for convenience they generally shut the colt in stables. These have usually board or cement floors, and the hard, unyielding surface is often very injurious to the feet of the colt. It does not hurt the feet of old horses so much, because they are generally shod, but the colt's feet are unprotected. A run in pasture is always best. If closer confinement is necessary, some small enclosure with an earth floor not compacted should be provided. This precaution will add much to the value of the colt when it comes to working age.

Weeds in the Hill.

Even when harrowing corn over the surface is done there will be occasional weeds that will escape, and by two or three repetitions of the harrowing they will be well rooted. Some of these will be in the hill, where the cultivator run through the rows both ways cannot reach them. In our opinion it pays to stop the cultivator wherever such weeds are seen and pull them out. It is true the corn may grow nearly as well, but the weed in the hill will extend its roots to the middle of the row, and all the plant food it gets will be wasted. Hand labor with corn has gone out of fashion, but it pays to do some hand labor after the cultivator has done all it can.

Orchard and Garden.

Coal ashes are beneficial to clay soil.

Testing seeds will save much time and vexation.

Currant and goosberry bushes should be pruned every year.

Be ready at the first opening in the spring to set out trees.

All trees should be transplanted before the leaves start out.

It is best to cover all wounds made in pruning with paint or oil.

THE UNGRATEFUL BAKER.

How an English Surgeon Bested a Persian Thief.

Surgeons and physicians in the United States are now and then sued for malpractice by dissatisfied patients. Not unfrequently the suit is an attempt either to extort money from the practitioner, or to fine him for not curing an incurable. In Persia patients are still more unscrupulous, and try to get back the doctor's fee, even when he has cured them. Doctor Wills, an English physician, tells in his "Land of the Lion and Sun" his experience with a Persian patient, a well-to-do baker of Ispahan.

The baker had been successfully operated upon for cataract, and the doctor had been paid four pounds; but the baker, though seeing with both eyes, regretted the four pounds. One day, while the doctor was prescribing in the dispensary to a crowd of sick folks, a melancholy procession entered. The baker, with a rag of a different color over each eye and a large white bandage round his head, was supported into the room.

The relatives informed the doctor that, through his treatment, the baker had lost his sight, and had come to get back his four pounds, together with any compensation which he, the doctor, might be pleased to make.

"Ah, sahib, dear sahib, I am now stone-blind," said the baker.

The crowd shook their heads. With much difficulty the doctor compelled the removal of the bandages, and on looking at his eyes, saw that the man's vision was good. Though angry, he was cool. The point was to make the crowd see that the man could see.

Taking a large leather box, in which was an amputating knife, he placed it on the table. Then seating himself, with the man on the other side of the table, he said:

"Of course, if I have deprived you of your sight, it is only fair that I should return the money you have paid, and also remunerate you. How much do you want?"

A beatific smile spread over the baker's face as he answered:

"Oh sahib, doctor sahib, I know you are great and generous. If you would pay back the four pounds and give me forty pounds for my eyes, I should pray for you—yes, I and my family, we should all pray for you."

"Yes, yes, he has spoken well," chimed in the spectators.

"Yes," replied the doctor, "this is what ought to be done, in the case you describe. But"—and the doctor shouted—"what ought to be done to the man who comes here with a lie in his mouth? Know you, bystanders, that this man sees perfectly?

"Ah," continued the doctor, "you dog, I'll open your eyes!" and suddenly producing the amputating knife, he flashed it before the man's face. The baker fled down-stairs, pursued by the more active of the crowd.

"Stop thief!" they shouted.

Every idler in the bazaar took up the cry; every hand and stick was turned on the flying man. He was seized ,and his turban torn off.

"Can you see now?" asked the doctor from an open window.

"O sahib, sahib, through your kindness I see, indeed I do!"

Reporters in Clover.

Three hundred and twenty journalists, including Russians, enjoyed official recognition in the work of describing the czar's coronation. Splendid club premises for their use, with servants in the imperial livery and a large staff of clerks and guides, who all spoke English, French and German. Refreshments were free at this admirable place, and gratis tickets for the opera and theaters were provided. Each journalist had a solid silver badge to wear on his coat, and found a bewildering number of princes, generals and other exalted swells told off to entertain him. No newspaper man had ever seen anything like it before.—London Globe.

Fresh Currant Pudding.

Pour over squares of stale sponge cake a very sweet custard into which ripe currants have been stirred, and serve at once. Or, stir ripe currants thickly into a rich batter made with two eggs, half a cup of sweet cream, one cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, and enough flour to stir thin; pour all into a buttered basin and steam one hour. Or stir currants thickly into a nice bread pudding. Or put layers of bread nicely toasted and buttered into a baking dish with very ripe sweetened currants between them. Pour over a little water—just enough to moisten the bread—and bake the pudding about half an hour; then serve it with sweetened cream.

Maud—Those men on the benches there watching us ride are the same crowd that you see in the front row at the theaters when the ballet is in town.

Mabel—So they are. I didn't know them at first with their hats on.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Rockefeller's Wealth.

John D. Rockefeller, president of the Standard oil trust, owns 400,000 of the 1,000,000 shares in the corporation, and their market value is said to be $100,000,000. His income from this source alone is $1,328 for every hour of the day, and his annual income from all sources is estimated at from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000.—St. Louis Chronicle.

EXPLAINS THE FUNDING BILL,

IN REPLY TO A LETTER FROM JOSEPH STEFFENS.

Business Question to be Decided on Business Principles.

The Whole Proposition of the Funding of the Debts of the Pacific Railroads Made So Clear That Anyone Can Understand It.

The following correspondence has taken place during the past week between the Hon. Grove L. Johnson, Congressman from this district, and Joseph Steffens. It explains itself so fully that no comment is necessary.

SACRAMENTO, August 10, 1896—Hon. Grove L. Johnson,—Dear Sir: Much has been said, written and published regarding the funding of the debts due the Government from the Pacific railroads and the action of Congress in relation thereto, but no clear presentation of the facts connected with the case has yet been made. Inasmuch as you are a member of the Committee on Pacific Railroads of the House of Representatives and are familiar with the question, I wish you would give me your views regarding the matter that the public and myself may get a proper understanding of the subject.

Very truly, yours,
JOSEPH STEFFENS.

Joseph Steffens, Esq., Sacramento—My Dear Sir: So much misrepresentation has been had concerning the railroad funding bill that I take pleasure in answering your request to give the facts about the matter.

I may well premise by saying that an elaborate attempt has been made to thrust this funding bill into the political campaign to the exclusion of the legitimate issues to be decided by the voter.

This matter is, in no sense, anything but a business question to be decided upon business principles.

It requires no aid from politics or politicians, but the people are injured whenever this question is sought to be made a political issue.

Men may reasonably differ as to the true course to be pursued in settling the monetary affairs of the United States and the Pacific railroads, because the sum involved is large and the interests affected many and diverse.

But it does not in any manner concern any man's politics. The efforts of partisan newspapers to advance party candidates by an unfair presentation of the matters involved should be discountenanced.

The attempt to make this whole election turn in California on the funding bill, now being made by certain interested parties, should and will fail.

All citizens should discuss the question with calmness and not be blinded by intemperate assaults on individuals or unfair statements.

Let us then understand the situation, for sometimes the statement of facts becomes almost determinate of the case itself.

There is a first mortgage upon the railroad, which is prior and superior to the mortgage held by the Government, and must be first paid or secured and will soon all be due

The Government has only a second mortgage and cannot expect one dollar in case of foreclosure until the first mortgage is fully paid.

In these, as in ordinary mortgages, the law authorizes a foreclosure and a sale of the mortgaged premises. But unlike ordinary mortgages the holders must look solely to the mortgaged property for the payment of their debt. Usually when mortgaged property is sold and fails to realize sufficient to pay the debt, a judgment for the deficiency is entered against the mortgageor and any other property, real or personal, belonging to him can be levied upon and sold to pay such deficiency. This cannot be done in the case of the Pacific railroad mortgages.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the holders of mortgages on these Pacific railroads can get their money only from the property covered by the mortgages, and cannot have any deficiency judgment against any of the stockholders of the company.

That settles the law of the case. We must deal with these mortgages then, as they are, not as we would wish them to be. We must deal with facts, not with presumptions. Therefore, in discussing this funding bill it must be remembered always that the two factors that decide the question as to the course to be pursued by Congress are:

1. The United States has a second mortgage.

2. The United States can only get its money from the property.

I believe the United States can collect every dollar of its debt, principal and interest, and shall endeavor to show that this only can be done by the passage of the funding bill now pending in Congress. This is a business question and should be decided in a business manner.

During the political campaign of 1894 the so-called Reilly funding bill was before the people and was discussed by all.

I opposed the passage of that bill in public speeches and private debate.

I had the privilege in Congressional Committee of voting against that bill, although bearing the name of another author.

I opposed the Reilly bill not because I antagonized the principal of funding, but because that bill would have been disastrous in its workings to my State.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company could not have carried into effect the provisions of that bill.

If the company had accepted the bill, and sought to do business under it, the inevitable result would have been the raising of the rates of fares and freights over the Central Pacific Railroad. That meant ruin for California.

The managers of the Central Pacific repeatedly so announced to Congress. They declared that they could not work under the bill. An examination of the earning capacity of the road, as presented by the sworn reports of its officers, and the testimony furnished Congress in connection with the payments required by the Reilly bill, will convince any fair minded person that those statements were and are correct.

The Reilly funding bill required, as a condition precedent to its acceptance by the company, that the first mortgage debt on the road should be paid, or arranged in some manner by the company, and the Government mortgage made a first lien. This could not have been done. No financier would have loaned them enough cash with which to pay a twenty-eight million dollar first mortgage and take as security for his cash a second mortgage on the same property, encumbered with another first mortgage of $57,000,000.

Even if by some miracle this could have been done, the annual payments required of the company are far in excess of its earnings, and could not have been made (as before stated) except by a material increase in the rates of fare and freight. This was demonstrated very clearly in the speeches made and tables and figures published during the campaign of 1894.

Therefore, we all opposed the Reilly bill, not because of opposition to funding and extending the debt, but because the provisions of that bill were too onerous upon the railroad company and California alike.

The present bill differs very materially from the Reilly bill, in that it provides for the payment in full of the debt due the United States from the railroad company upon terms equitable to both parties to the contract, and that will not raise the rates of railroad fares or freights in California, but permit of their reduction.

I believe that the proper method in which to treat these railroad corporations is to act toward them as though they were individuals.

If so treated no one could complain.

Let us suppose a case.

A bank holds a second mortgage on a farm and finds that the debtor cannot pay his debt as it becomes due.

The duty of its Board of Directors is plain, viz.: to send for that debtor and ascertain why he does not pay and what he proposes to do. No bank forecloses its mortgage without giving its debtor such a chance.

The bank does not want the farm, neither does the Government want the Pacific railroads.

Both want their money.

When the debtor appears he says: "I cannot pay now. My property will not sell for more than enough to pay the first mortgage. Give me time and I will give you additional security of great value and save my farm; but if you foreclose now, you will make me lose my farm, you will lose your debt and you cannot have any deficiency judgment against me."

What would any individual do?

He would not foreclose. He would immediately institute a careful search into the assets and revenues and expenditures of his debtor, into the value and productiveness of his farm and the nature and value of the additional security offered, and would be guided in his decision by the result of such investigations.

That is exactly what the Committees on Pacific Railroads of Congress did regarding the mortgage debt due the United States by the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

No sensible individual or solvent bank would order foreclosure until such investigation was had even if much clamor was heard from uninterested persons.

No good citizen would wish the Government mortgage foreclosed until such investigation was had.

The committees made the investigation and they all, except two members (one in the Senate and one in the House) agreed that the only way to secure the Government and obtain payment in full was to give the company such reasonable time in which to pay their debts due the United States as will at once secure the Government against loss, the company from ruin and the people from increased rates. We must remember that the stockholders of this company have rights and are entitled to protection.

These objects will be accomplished by the passage of the proposed funding bill.

Hence I say the committees have treated the railroad companies exactly as one individual would treat another under the circumstances.

The testimony taken by the committees was voluminous, and covered every phase of the question from the commencement of the agitation for a Pacific railroad down to the present date.

I will not take up time now in discussing the early history of this greatest achievement of the nineteenth century, although it is at once very interesting and instructive.

Neither will I, at present, speak of the land grants given to the roads which have been so magnified by some writers and speakers, and show as the facts do their insignificance as compared with donations to other roads.

It may be my privilege on some other occasion to explain these as well as many other of the transactions of the United States and its people with these Pacific railroads, but now I have not the time.

I wish, however, to impress upon you these facts, that impartial history shows first, that all the Pacific railroad legislation of Congress was taken not at the request of the railroad companies, nor of their promoters, but at the demand of the people; and second, that the lands granted were not worth one dollar without the building of the railroad.

I will in this letter speak only of the bonds granted the company.

These bonds were all granted by the terms of the Acts of Congress of July 1, of 1862, and July 2, 1864.

From the testimony taken by the committees it appears that according to the treasury reports the total amount of subsidy bonds given by the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific is $27,855,680. Not as much as the Mormon war cost the United States prior to the construction of the Pacific Railroads.

The total amount due the United States from the Central Pacific amounts as follows on January 1, 1897:

|---|---|
| Principal | $27,855,680 00 |
| Interest | $48,011,293 24 |
| Total | $75,866,973 24 |

The contract made by the Acts of 1862 and 1864 did not call for the payment of interest until the maturity of bonds, hence the large amount of interest due.

This contract was made by the Government itself. It is unilateral, in that one party to the bargain, the United States, dictated its term, and has claimed and exercised the right ever since to alter, amend and change it, regardless of the wishes of the other party to the contract.

If it was bad for the United States, no one is to blame but the United States.

It is not claimed by anyone that the companies did any more than to accept the contract that the Government made.

The Central Pacific has fully complied with every requirement of the contract from the day that it accepted the same.

When every other Pacific railroad company and many other railroad companies defaulted in their interest payments, the Central Pacific met all its obligations at the day appointed. When every other Pacific railroad company and many other railroad companies went into the hands of receivers upon the application to court of their creditors, the Central Pacific attended to its own business, paid all its debts when due and kept one railroad out of court and in the hands of its owners.

As a Californian, I am proud of this fact and proud that it was owing to the keen business sagacity, honest purpose and untiring efforts of Californians that the Central Pacific was enabled to make this glorious record. As a Sacramentan, also, I am particularly proud of it, for these men are all residents of our city.

The Central Pacific did not realize the full amount of the bonds issued to it by the Government.

They were made payable in "lawful money", meaning greenbacks, were known in commercial circles as "currency sixes," and were sold by the company at an average rate of seventy cents on the dollar, thus netting the company but $19,498,976.

This amount was much reduced, as the company was forced to buy gold at fearful premiums for use in California and Europe.

This does not change the generous purpose or statesman-like idea that prompted the subsidy, but should be remembered when talk is had about the immense sums donated to the Pacific railroads.

The debt must be settled. The question is, how? We are called upon to decide it as the representatives of the United States and the dictators of the situation. We must act upon business principles. Cries of "fraud", malevolent abuse of all who favor a funding bill, demagogical shrieks against particular men must not swerve us from our duty to settle a business like matter on business lines. What, then, is our situation?

The United States has a second mortgage for security.

There is a first mortgage on all the Central Pacific constituting a lien prior to that of the United States amounting to $27,853,000. Add this to the sum due to the United States and the amount of $103,719,973 24 is due its creditors by this company.

The holders of these first mortgage bonds are asking for their pay and threatening foreclosure.

The Central Pacific cannot pay the principal of the bonds due the United States or the first mortgage holders as they become due.

What shall be done?

As I have said before the duty of every creditor holding a second mortgage when his debtor says "I cannot pay my debts when they fall due," is to carefully examine the assets and liabilities of that debtor and see what settlement can be made so as to save the creditor if possible from loss. Lawsuits are to be avoided by nations as well as individuals.

Applying this common sense rule to the present case we find that the Government mortgage covers a line of railroad from a point five miles west of Ogden, Utah, to Sacramento, Cal., a distance of 737.50 miles, and from Sacramento to San Jose, a distance of 121.16 miles, in all a distance of 869.66 miles. It is a road without terminals or terminal facilities. It does not enter San Francisco, the queen city of the Pacific Coast, but stops at San Jose, fifty miles away.

The value of any large railroad is that it may reach some large city, some great distributing point, some center of business and population, some hub of the wheel of commercial relations, into which the spokes of trade, of manufacture, of progress, of development lead from every point the money and people of the land. This is not the case with the Central Pacific as mortgaged. It is like the heroine of Gunter's novel, "Miss Nobody from No-where", in that it begins in a desert and ends many miles from its true terminus. It is a disjointed vertebrae unable to do business of itself. Whoever purchases must make terms with other companies, else he can do no business.

In addition, the road from Ogden to the Sierra Nevadas, a distance of about 550 miles, passes over a country as barren of way business as a hen is of teeth, and acts merely as a conduit over which the people and products of the East and West can pass, as the people of New York and Brooklyn cross the great East River bridge.

The total receipts from this part of the railroad from way traffic will not pay for the oil consumed in lubricating the wheels of the locomotives that pull the trains.

All the paying business comes from California and the far East, known as through travel.

We find a mortgage ahead of the United States that must be paid or in some manner cared for, or the United States will lose every dollar of its debt.

We find that the business of the road has been increased and made valuable by the construction of numerous other railroads in California, not covered by the Government mortgage, that serve as feeders to the main line, and are absolutely necessary to be obtained by the creditor, in case he decided to take possession of the road, for without them he can do but little traffic.

We find a valuable road leading from the subsidized line to San Francisco, and and very valuable terminals at Oakland and San Francisco, neither of which is covered by the Government mortgage, and all of which are absolutely necessary to be obtained by any creditor who takes possession of the main line.

We know that the only method by which the Central Pacific can pay its debts is from its earnings. In this respect railroads are like banks and nations.

There is no railroad or bank or nation on the globe, no matter how prosperous or wealthy, that could pay its debts in cash to-day. They can only pay from their revenues or earnings, as they accumulate year by year, from business or taxes or customs.

Their debts must be defaulted, extended or repudiated. They cannot be paid on demand. If the creditors of the bank of which my colleague, Mr. Barham, is a director, should all to-day request their money, Santa Rosa would see the doors of its largest bank closed, and its officers, including Mr. Barham, pleading for time to get money, begging for the extension he refuses to these railroad companies. The Central Pacific is no worse off than any other road or banker or nation, and is better off than a majority of them, because it has never defaulted, and is to-day without a blot on its financial escutcheon.

We find that since the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Stanford case, and the opinion of Attorney-General Harmon, filed with the Pacific Railroad Committee, there is nothing left for the United States, except to get its money from the property covered by its mortgage according to its exact terms, and that the property is, as shown, disjointed, incomplete and incapable alone of carrying on any successful business.

In examining this matter further, we find the United States practically bankrupt to-today, in that its revenues do not equal its expenditures, and it is borrowing money to pay its bills, although its credit is so good that it can carry on business indefinitely. Like Barham's bank, it is running on credit. It is in no condition, however, to borrow money to pay off first mortgages on railroads. We find the owners of these roads desirous of paying every dollar they owe to the Government, and their other creditors, and having faith in their ability to do so if given time.

We find the net earnings of each road to be about $4,000,000 per annum and that it is very unsafe to rate them any higher.

We find that it would be impolitic for us to claim all of the net earnings as applicable to the payment of the debts, as some amount must be left for repairs and emergencies.

We find that the intrinsic value of these roads does not equal their debts, and that at forced sale they would not probably pay any but the first mortgage. We learn that they can be duplicated at about half their original cost.

What shall be done in view of these facts? Do we want Government ownership of railroads? If so, that is one way out of the difficulty.

We can foreclose the Government lien, pay the $27,853,000 of the first mortgage bonds on the Central Pacific and $33,532,000 on the Union Pacific; total, $61,385,000, and go into active competition in the railroad business with our own citizens who are struggling to maintain other Pacific railroads.

Is this advisable? Is it good business sagacity? Is it a proper plan for the United States to pursue? Is it wise for the nation to purchase the railroads that traverse it in every direction or even those across the continent?

As illustrating one result of Government ownership of the Central Pacific Railroad, I call attention to the fact that this corporation has since its organization paid the large sum of $6,038,554 95 for State, county and municipal taxes in California alone.

In 1895 the company paid in California for State and county taxes $363,263 57, and for municipal taxes $26,646 52, making a total of $389,910 09. These amounts were of great benefit to the people of California and assisted materially in paying the expenses of their government and will all be lost to the State if the United States owns the railroad, for United States property cannot be taxed for any purpose. Let me here state that the Southern Pacific Company paid last year for taxes in California the enormous sum of $962,151 14, enough to run many State governments.

In our neighboring State of Nevada the company has since its organization paid out a total amount of $3,661,586 31 in taxes, and last year paid $145,345 21 out of a total collected in the State of $578,887 86, being a little over one-fourth of the entire amount. Nevada would be forced to close its schools and asylums and turn its sick, insane and children loose upon the highways if the government owned the railroad and thus deprived the Silver State of the large amount of taxes paid by the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

On the northeast corner of K and Seventh streets, Sacramento, is a very beautiful building, which with its lot forms a very valuable property. It is the United States Postoffice building.

It would undoubtedly be assessed at the amount of $100,000 if owned by an individual, and would thus contribute largely to the revenues of our city and county.

Being United States property it escapes taxation.

Consequently the balance of our property must pay an increased rate to make up for this loss.

There is an object lesson for all. Such would be the action of the Assessors regarding the railroad if owned by the United States. They would mark it Government property and it would escape taxation. The rest of us would be compelled to pay an increased tax because of this large amount being stricken from the assessment roll. These figures and illustrations are instructive to all who love their country and desire its prosperity.

To those who seek position or power or blackmail by abuse of railroads and their owners, and vituperative assaults upon all who favor a business settlement of a business question, these figures amount to nothing.

We of California, and particularly of Sacramento, ought to feel kindly towards this Company.

From the day when the first shovelful of earth was dug by President Stanford in 1863 to the beginning of the year 1896, the Central Pacific had expended in Sacramento alone, for labor $51,000,000 and for material used in its workshops, $50,500,000, making the enormous total of $81,500,000 expended in this one city of California by this company.

This sum has given employment to many thousands of men, supported many more thousands of dependent women of business, created new avenues of business and stimulated the growth of California in a marvelous manner.

The yearly payroll of the company in Sacramento is upwards of $2,500,000. It is that large sum disbursed regularly to our citizens that enables us to truthfully boast of good times in Sacramento, to see new buildings arising on every street, and to note that the banks of the Capital City are refusing, not seeking deposits.

The only suggestion as to the settlement of the question of these debts due the United States by these railroad companies made by any Californian whether in Congress or not, whether drawing resolutions for a political convention, writing editorials for a newspaper or delivering a speech to Congress or its committees, outside of the abuse of Huntington and the railroad companies, interspersed with some denunciation of all who favor a funding bill, has been Government ownership.

This fact is very suggestive. It illustrates more strongly than language can, the fact that there is no solution except, first, funding or extending the debt or second, Government ownership of these roads.

I hope the Congress will vote squarely on this Government ownership scheme, so that all can see how few votes will be given in favor of investing sixty millions and losing eighty millions more of Government money in buying a Pacific railroad.

The business men and politicians east of the Rocky Mountains know, as we do, that Government ownership of these roads means no taxation upon the property represented thereby. I have already given facts and figures showing the great loss to our city and county and State in taxes if the Government owned the railroad.

The Hon. Hoke Smith, Secretary of the Interior, is frequently quoted as being against refunding. He is also on record as against Government ownership. Before our Pacific Railroad Committee he said: "I think the last thing for the Government to do would be to own a railroad. I think they had better give away their interest. I am utterly opposed to that." Secretary Smith ought to be good authority for these anti-funding people. Congressman Maguire shows that it is worse than folly to talk of Government ownership of railroads, for in his speech at the Metropolitan Temple, June 29, 1896, he said: "There is in Congress an overwhelming opposition to Government ownership and operation of railroads." What folly, then, for any one to tell the people that we must foreclose the lien and let the United States run the railroads.

There would not be to exceed twenty votes in Congress in favor of Government ownership of the railroads.

The Eastern people do not believe in it. They say it might help California, but it would hurt them.

We of California if united carry but little weight in the councils of the nation, and on this question we carry none.

The American people east of the Rocky Mountains control the business affairs of the United States, and they are solid against Government ownership of railroads. They are not willing to buy and run a Pacific railroad at the expense of the whole nation, simply to please or benefit California. Hence, even if we all worked harmoniously for it we could not secure it.

The purchase of these roads will lead to the purchase of others, for every railroad company unable to pay its debts (and none of them can if pressed) will demand that it be purchased as an act of equality, and soon our revered Uncle Sam will have his hands so full with running railroads that he cannot attend to the affairs of the nation.

It does not appear to me to be good policy to experiment with Government ownership of railroads; nor do I believe that the American people indorse the proposition. From the statements of Secretary Smith and Congressman Maguire you see that the idea of Government ownership must be dismissnd in considering how to settle this question.

Shall the United States foreclose its lien and settle its equity of redemption to the highest bidder and forever close the account with these companies?

This would be the easiest and quickest way out of the difficulty. It would end the matter in less than a year.

But at what a loss.

Who could bid at such a sale? Manifestly only three parties:

First, the Government.

Second, a syndicate of rich men owning other railroads and anxious to extend their system.

Third, the present owners of these railroads.

Considering the proposed purchasers in order we find:

First, it is impracticable for the Government to bid, because, as we have seen, the United States does not want to buy or run railroads.

Second, it would be very bad for the nation if any organization of capital should be able to buy and control a line of railroad from ocean to ocean.

The power of corporations is already too great in the United States. Such an aggregation of wealth as would be represented by such a company would dominate the business, the politics and the policy of the nation. It would be a constant menace to the rights and liberties of the people.

The form of its manager would cast a shadow over the White House itself, while his veto over legislation would be more absolute than that exercised by the President, because it would be interposed before, during and after action by Congress.

Third, the present owners would have no incentive to bid any large amount, because they would naturally desire to pay as small a sum as possible in order to obtain their roads freed from a large debt, I do not think that $5,000,000 could be obtained by such sale for both roads. If the owners of the Central Pacific, if C. P. Huntington were the bad man his detractors would have us believe, he would refuse to do anything, to offer anything, to promise any payment or arrange or urge any settlement of the railroad debt to the United States. He would stand upon his contract, upon the law. He would say, "Foreclose your second mortgage. Sell your equity of redemption. I will buy it in at a small price, and thus wipe out the $75,000,000 due the Government by an expenditure at the utmost of not more than 10 per cent thereof."

But he does not say so. On the contrary, with an honest pride in his life, he says that he, himself and his company, have always paid a hundred cents on the dollar, and he always wants to. Hence he is willing to assume the burden of the funding bill for his company. Put the case to any attorney for a bank or individual, truthfully epitomized as follows, viz.:

"I have a second mortgage on property covered to nearly if not quite its full value by a first mortgage. My debtor cannot pay either the first or second mortgage. The first mortgage is due and its holder threatens to foreclose. His property is only valuable for, and can only pay its debts from its earnings. I do not want to go into the business carried on by my debtor. His property is not complete, but is dependent upon other properties for its successful use. I am bankrupt myself, and am only carrying on my trade because of the credit I have. My debtor has faith in his property, and believes he can pay dollar for dollar if given time. He offers to pay some cash down, and a regular amount of principal and interest each year, and to give additional security. If I will give him time the first mortgage holders will give him time. What shall be done?"

And his answer to the query will be quickly given:

"Make a settlement immediately. Extend your debt. Sign the papers soon as possible, ere your debtor changes his mind."

In the settlement proposed by this bill the rights of the United States are fully protected.

The Central Pacific gives the United States a second mortgage on all its property, including its feeders and terminals, and will pay $365,000 per year of principal and 2 per cent interest on deferred payments for the first ten years, $500,000 per year of principal for the next ten years with the same interest, and $750,000 per year of principal and like interest each year thereafter until the debt is fully paid. It is true, that there are at present mortgages on these terminals and feeders, but the company is to take care of them as it must also of the first mortgage on the original road. They can all be refunded at a lower rate of interest than is now paid if this bill passes, and that increases the security given the United States.

The amount of the debt due the United States is reduced at once by the payment of a large sum, made up as follows:

|---|---|
| Treasurer's estimate of value of sinking fund as of March 30, 1896 | $6,657,471 94 |
| Treasurer's statement of bond and interest account Central Pacific, as of March 1, 1896 | 8,239,134 31 |
| Treasurer's statement of bond and interest account, Western Pacific, as of March 1, 1896 | 9,367 00 |
| Total | $14,941,273 75 |
| Credits and judgments in favor of Central and Southern Pacific to be applied | 2,400,818 20 |
| Accounts in process of settlement not yet credited, about | 100,000 |
| Transportation services, ten months, a $50,000 per annum | 500,000 |
| Interest accruing on bonds in sinking fund from March 30, 1896, to January 1, 1897 | 234,367 50 |
| Grand total | $18,185,458 95 |

This reduces the amount due the United States from the Central Pacific Railroad Company to $57,681,514 29, and for that amount the second mortgage is given, not only upon the main line but upon the feeders, the terminals and all other property of the company.

The company is to extend the first mortgage bonds (including those on the terminals and feeders) at a reduced rate of interest, and to see that they do not interfere with the operation of the settlement or the business of the road.

The Southern Pacific Company is required to guarantee the payments to be made by the Central Pacific Railroad Company so long as the two companies maintain business relations which absolutely secures them.

To obviate the objection made that the charter of the Central Pacific would expire in 1911, the committee inserted a provision in the bill providing that the corporate character of the Central Pacific Railroad Company should continue until its debt to the United States had been fully paid.

An objection has been made to the rate of interest fixed in the bill at 2 per cent.

Why any Californian who loves his State and desires to see it prosper can raise such an objection, passes comprehension.

California, as I have before stated, must pay the bulk of this debt, because the local business is a trifle and the through business is all that pays. Hence, California is vitally interested in keeping the rates of freights and fare as low as possible. That is why a large number of persons in California favor Government ownership, because they believe it would give them lower rates. A mistaken notion, but one encouraged by anti-railroad speakers and papers, and very captivating to all on the Pacific Coast.

It is as plain as the sun at noon day in a cloudless sky, that the lower the rate of interest the mortgage carries the less will be the annual payment, and consequently the lower the rates needed to earn that interest. The benefit of a low rate of interest will all come to California.

Yet these California Congressmen and newspapers and speakers with a mental obliquity of vision, painful to contemplate, vehemently object to the low rate of interest fixed by this bill.

The man who cut off his own nose to spite his enemy's face was a Socrates in wisdom compared to these Californians.

I can understand how some Eastern people, interested only in getting the money due the Government, could object to the low rate of interest, but for any Californian to object stamps him at once as unacquainted with the laws of business or the effect of the provisions of the bill, as would be commended by an open and willful enemy of the State of California.

A cry has been raised by some newspapers and persons that the Government is borrowing money at 2½ per cent to loan the company at 2 per cent, and some good people following their lead have made the same cry.

The amount to be thus borrowed and loaned has been variously stated, some putting it as high as $131,000,000.

Mark how the facts prove the falsity of this claim and how the truth again shows the utter hollowness of this opposition to this business settlement.

The amount of interest due the United States by the Central Pacific has already been paid, and hence no money is to be borrowed for that.

|---|---|
| The amount of principal due is | $27,855,680 00 |
| The amount of cash available and to be paid the United States as soon as the bill passes is | 18,185,458 95 |
| Leaving due only the small sum of | $9,670,221 05 |

These bonds do not mature finally until 1899, so that there will have been three years' payments made by the company under this bill before the United States is called upon to pay the balance.

These three years' payments amount in round numbers to $4,545,000, which deducted from the said balance leaves only the insignificant amount of $5,125,221 05 to be paid by the United States in 1899.

This is a mere bagatelle.

What becomes of the talk about the Government borrowing such vast sums at 2½ per cent, to loan the company at 2 per cent?

It exists only in in the fevered brain of these anti-railroad people who are hunting straws.

In the language of another, "They are indebted to their imagination for their facts."

It is said that this bill is not the best that could be obtained from the Pacific Railroad Companies, and that better terms were made by them.

This is incorrect. No definite propositions were made by either company except the one embodied in this bill.

All the representatives of both companies said that $4,000,000 per annum was the very highest estimate of the net earnings of either road that could be made, while the Central Pacific people said that its earnings could not reach these figures. For this reason the committee required the guarantee of the Southern Pacific Company.

As additional security for the performance by the companies of their obligations under this bill, it is provided that the charges due the companies from the United States for transportation performed for the Government shall be withheld if default is made in any payment for one year. These charges alone, will, to a large extent, meet the annual interest payments, and thus the United States is further protected against loss.

But, say these objectors, suppose the companies do not pay according to this bill either to the first mortgage or the United States, then the Government will be as badly situated as now, hence the bill is of no value, except to give the companies time?

The committee has provided for just such contingency.

The bill provides that in case it becomes, in the judgment of the President, necessary, in order to protect the interests of the United States, to pay off any of the first mortgage bonds, he may do so, and then demand the payment thereof from the company, and if default be made in repayment for one year, then the whole debt due the United States shall become due and payable, and all the rights of the United States shall thereupon be enforced.

As further security the bill provides that if either company shall make default for six months in any payment, then the whole debt shall, at the option of the President, immediately mature, and the United States shall thereupon be entitled to enter upon and take possession of all the properties covered by the mortgage, without applying to the courts or Congress for authority to do so, or may commence suit to foreclose.

This is a very valuable addition to the security of the Government. It saves the proverbial delay of lawsuits. It authorizes the prompt action needed in time of emergencies. It fully protects the United States against careless or fraudulent debtors. The first mortgages will be no larger than now. The necessity for their payment no greater then than now.

If the United States is compelled to take possession under the mortgages contemplated by this bill (which will never be necessary, in my judgment), it will not find, as it would now, if it took possession, a road without beginning or ending at any established basis, without terminals or terminal facilities, a mere trunk, destitute of arms or legs, fifty miles from the Pacific Ocean; but will at once enter into complete possession of a road in fine condition, fully equipped with rolling stock, with one arm extended 296 miles to the Oregon line on the north, gathering business and revenue from the States of Oregon and Washington and the people of Northern and Central California as it traverses the fruitful Sacramento Valley; with another arm extending 146 miles south through the fertile San Joaquin Valley, bringing business from the farms and towns that adorn Southern California; each one serving as feeders to the main line, and all working in harmonious accord for the common good. It will be given possession of the line from Niles through the far-famed Livermore Valley of rich Alameda County, to Oakland, the Brooklyn of California, and there will find magnificent terminals, sufficient for any amount of business. It will there find and be given possession of ferryboats and ferry accommodations of immense and rapidly growing value, and crossing the world-admired bay of San Francisco, will land its trains of freight and passengers in that grand metropolis of the Pacific Coast upon its own terminals. It will thus be ready, with its own equipment, to compete successfully with any railroad for the great and increasing business of the Golden State of the Union, and the whole of the magnificent domain bordering the Pacific Ocean.

If for no other reason than this last, it is the duty of Congress to pass this bill, so as to give the United States a complete, not a disjointed railroad, in case it is compelled to go into the railroad business.

Poor tools spoil good workmen. Railroads without proper facilities for working bankrupt owners, whether individuals, corporations or nations.

If Uncle Sam must run a railroad it is our duty to give him a good one. Hence, pass this bill so that if he is forced at any time to take into his possession these Pacific railroads he will be able to do a successful business with them.

The measure proposed by the committee is a fair, just, equitable, proper and legal settlement of the relations between the Pacific Railroad Companies and the United States, a question that has troubled Congress for the past twenty years. My remarks have been in detail addressed to the Central Pacific because I am familiar with that road and its abilities and properties, but they apply with equal force to the Union Pacific. Let us settle this question and on business lines. Do not be influenced by the senseless iteration and reiteration of the charges of fraud in the building of the roads. All such talk is foreign to the issue.

It is the sheerest demagogy, the worst nonsense, and would be ridiculous were it not wicked.

All these transactions are of the dead past. They cannot be legally considered. They are outlawed morally and legally, even if as badly tainted as these people claim. They do not enter into the question now to be decided, viz.: What is the best course for the United States to pursue regarding the settlement of this large debt due it?

The only answer is, pass this bill.

Under it the United States will receive each day $1,000 for the first ten years; then each day $1,500 for the next ten years, and thereafter $2,000 each day until the debt is fully paid.

The interests of all are protected. No one is injured. The rates of fare and freight are not increased, and this vexatious question is forever removed from politics.

Whoever opposes this business settlement of a business question is either ignorant of the facts or either intentionally or unintentionally an enemy of California.

I expect that my motives will be maligned, my language distorted, my statements misquoted and myself personally abused and caricatured for these sentiments thus squarely expressed, because I am sorry to say, that has been the course followed too much by the opponents of this bill.

Hence I call attention in conclusion to the fact that I have assailed no one, have questioned no man's motive or course, but have discussed this question as it ought to be discussed, viz., on its merits.

Therefore when I am assailed remember, my fellow citizens, that abuse is no argument, vituperation is not reason, and that mere slanderous attacks upon myself do not answer my truthful presentation of this matter.

BORN.

BELL—At Black Rock, August 22, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. Arthus S. Bell—a son.

Mrs. E. Johnson arrived from Los Angeles last week.

Don't forget the Fall opening at Rhine's on Saturday night.

A. V Davidson came back from San Francisco Wednesday.

Judge Arnot will not be a candidate for the Superior Judgship.

The Baxter fishing party returned from Kern river on Tuesday last.

On the last trip Miller's Mojave stage landed at Keeler with a ten-passenger load.

T. B. Rickey, and son Charles, came down from the upper country yesterday.

S. A Densmore has a small force on the old San Carlos mines doing assessment work.

New Goods have been arriving by every train for Rhine's opening to-morrow night.

Ben T. Williams came up from Mojave a day or two ago, and is visiting friends in this vicinity.

Public School will open on next Monday, Sept. 7. Mrs. M. E. T. Stevens, of Bishop, will be the instructress.

Messrs. W. R. Tibbetts, Jacob Tracy and Edward Trudo, from the Big Pine country, were in Independence this week.

Everybody should go to Rhine's to-morrow night and take a look at their immense stock of Fall and Winter goods. All invited.

The Modock mines, Frank Fitzgerald lessee are now yielding from two to three tons per day of their rich "wet" ore, and affording work for ten men.

Vincent Estrada, alias Vaquerito, charged with furnishing whisky to Indians, had a hearing before Judge Davidson on Thursday, and was held over to appear before the Superior Court.

Mat. McDonald came down from Fish Springs about a week ago, and reports the mining outlook on the hill as encouraging. He is taking a needed rest and trying to rid himself of the rheumatism.

CASH BUYERS will receive information greatly to their interests by addressing J. H. Wood & Co., Managers of Home Library and Supply Ass., No. 14 Sansome Street, San Francisco. They sell everything at wholesale prices. Send your name on Postal card.

Bishop Montgomery of Los Angeles will be in Independence on the 13th inst., and will confirm the Catholic children. He will preach in the morning at Mass, and deliver a lecture in the evening. Those who attend will enjoy a treat, as the Bishop is a renowned lecturer.

Holiness Band have good houses nightly. Only one convert so far. It may be that our people are all good and don't need salvation: but the fact remains that those who do attend whether out of curiosity or otherwise ought to be self-respecful and decent enough to behave themselves. Don't kick unless the shoe fits.

President Trenmor Coffin of the Inyo Canal Company, accompanied by a party of foreign capitalists and may-be settlers, has been inspecting the extensive land and water properties of the company on the East Side. This is the most available, ready-made colonization propositions on the whole Pacific Coast.

John Welch was in town during the week and went out loaded with mining supplies. Through years of ownership and experience with the old McMurry and Westerville mines, Jack has acquired a comprehensive knowledge of the great mining probabilities of Fish Springs hill. He is in 150 feet on a long tunnel intended to develop the north end of the ground, and makes things pay as they go.

A Sheep Man's Loss.

"Wd killed the bar!" said our county officer and our contemporary. They undoubtedly did, as the following report of an excited Frenchman who was "in at the death" will prove. Maiden and Grant were sympathetic listeners to his tale: "My petite black bear—my poor little pet! I keep him long time and he eat out of my hand. I keep him all time tied up, but one day he get loose and run off. I go quick to get him and parbleu! I see two men up ze tree and my good pet bear shot dead!" What's the matter with giving the sheepherder the skin as a souvenir?

SWAMPERINGS.

BIG PINE, Aug. 31, 1896.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—This town has had as choice a variety of entertainment of late as usually falls to the lot of nestling hamlets.

On Friday eve last our esteemed fellow citizen, Mr. Lowell Eugley of the g. o. p., shaded the footlights, to introduce the Hon. C. W. Kyle, of San Francisco, whose eloquent exposition of the issues now at stake was tingling the ears of the electors on the other side, as an orator just over from the busy haunts of men, who would enlighten the electors of the hamlet on the issues of the national campaign is now before the people.

That Mr. Kyle of San Francisco is an able attorney and apt pleader and withal a fair sized orator was the unanimous verdict of his Big Pine audience. If you ask us if he alluded to all the issues of interest to the electors of the Second Congressional District, and kept his glowing promises as to the two which he did attempt to discuss, The verdict of this audience of isolated electors would be—Ni'.

Mr. Kyle said imprimis, that this campaign was so important and an intelligent settlement of its issues was of such moment to the country, that the elector, who had the least influence over another, should be very careful in his statements thereon, in short, he should speak nothing but the unvarnished truth in the premises.

After promising to pursue a logical, truthful, candid and conscientious course in his arguments and statements, he made the startling announcement that the nomination of Major McKinley, the great leader in safe statecraft, whose coming greatness was discovered by the late Plumed Knight, was due to a colossal wave of sentiment from the laboring masses of the country.

He also told the isolated electors of the hamlet, in pathetic terms, of the army of tramps which infest the City of San Francisco, on account of the result of the underpaid labor of distant countries. Yet, strange to say, he forgot to mention the fact, that during the incumbency of our silver industry on this coast, this army was only a corporal's guard and was the pure genus tramp.

He further told us, confidentially, that a coin of the United States was not, and could not be affected by the government stamp or the legislation of Congress, that it simply represented the labor incident to its existence. But, unwittingly he quoted an instance in which a simple act of Congress did effect the value of a coin of the country

The only right new chestnut contributed by this licensed pedlar of Hanna's wares, was the solemn fact that the Republican Convention at St. Louis forced the issues of this campaign on the Chicago Convention in such a manner as to cause the better element and a large portion of the party to leave the ranks.

Yet, this instructor of the isolated electors of Inyo, with all his candor, fairness and truthfulness forgot to compare the splits and kicks of the two national conventions; but instead, how he did paint the future woes of the wage-earner in the event of the failure of Hanna's man Friday not having an opportunity to bind up the bleeding hands of the toiling millions of the land. Ye, Gods! how he did attudinize and howl over the crimes of 1866 and 1873. Yet this disciple of the Hannanistic John the Baptist, forgot to tell the isolated electors, whose missionary he was, of the slight difference which attaches to the act, which he said, was deliberately considered and passed by Congress, to meet an emergency which menaced the prosperity of the country, and characterized as the only sensible thing to do under the circumstances, now falsely called the crime of 1873. The charitable thought would be, that it slipped the memory of our instructor to mention that the act of 1873 destroyed the redemption quality of silver.

The faithful, who had read Grove L. Johnson's letter of Oct. 27th, 1894, to the voters of Inyo in which he said: "I am entirely free and untrammeled in this campaign, owing allegiance to no man, or corporation, with the single purpose of doing my duty to my country, my district and myself," craned their necks in vain to catch a little instruction on an issue handled by both State conventions. When asked the next day for his views on the candidacy of Johnson and the Funding Bill, after replying that he didn't discuss this issue on his trip unless compelled to, he quoted the latest defense of the traitor of the California delegation, as published a few days since, and promised for Mr. Johnson that he would be over here and meet the Inyo voters ala bombastes furioso.

I desire to say that the orator's candor and frankness, while discussing the Grove L. Johnson matter, contradicted his whole course on the rostrum.

Mr. Johnson will come over himself, says Mr. Kyle, to drop a few seeds in Inyo silc.

SWAMPER.

Summer Washouts.

According to all accounts, supported by a late letter from Road Commissioner Fitzgerald, the annual damage to roads and trails out in the mining country is well up to the average. In Modock Canyon the downpour washed all the earth away for a distance of two miles, leaving the road "bed rock" bare and necessitating the hauling of jigger waste up to the road from the mines, in order to give animals foothold on the steep grades and sharp turns. Nine men were taken out of the mine for the necessary repairs, and worked until they made the way passable again. The storm seems to have centered therabout, that is in the Argus range and around Matarango mountain, over into Snow Canyon and the Panamint Valley side. The extension or expansion trended westerly, covering with detritus the boiling springs in the Coso range and from thence to the east side of the Sierras near Little Owens Lake. This "local disturbance" occurred August 20th, but over to the east in the Telescope range, bounding Death Valley on the west, the so-called cloud bursts generally come in July.

From Aberdeen.

The residence of J. W. Calloway was the scene of considerable excitement for about five minutes last Monday morning. The burning soot from the kitchen stovepipe had fallen on the roof, which quickly ignited, and but for the timely discovery of the fire the entire building would have soon been in flames.

Master Will Calvert has returned from Keeler.

Messrs. Rogers and Montague are rusticating in the mountains.

Weary of living "out of the world," Mr. D. M. Rogers loaded his house on a wagon and took up his residence half a mile nearer Aberdeen.

AURORA.

While on a trip to San Francisco last week we met Dr Charles Turner of Rio Vista, and his wife, formerly Miss Emma Yandell of Bishop. The young couple were enjoying their honeymoon and intended to leave shortly for their home at Rio Vista. Charles Thurs on formerly of this town, and his bride, were also seen.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. By WALTER BESANT.

CHAPTER I.

"Nell," cried the boy, jumping about, unable to stand still for excitement, "it is splendid! He has told me such things as I never dreamed. Oh, splendid things! Wonderful things!"

"Tell me, Will."

"I am ashamed. Well, then, he says—he says," the boy's face became crimson, "he says that I can become whatever I please, if I please. It is all in me—all—all! If I want to become a statesman, I may. If I want to become a judge, I may. If I should like to be a bishop, I may; if a great scholar, a great writer, I may. All, he says, is possible for me if I choose to work—all if I choose to work. Oh, Nell, isn't it—isn't it wonderful?" He dropped his voice, and his eyes glistened—his large dreamy eyes—and his cheeks glowed. "If I choose to work! As if I should not choose to work! Only those fellows who have got no such glorious prospects are lazy. Work? Why, I am mad to work! I grudge every hour. Work? You shall see how I will work!"

He was a lad of 17, handsome, tall and straight; his eyes were full and impid; his face was a long oval; his mouth delicate and fine, but perhaps not quite so firm as might have been desired. At this moment he had just held a conference with his private tutor. It took the form of a remonstrance and explanation. The remonstrance pointed out that his work was desultory and apt to be interrupted at any moment for any purpose; that steady grind was incompatible with the giving away of whole mornings to musical dreams at the piano, or to rambles in the woods, a book of poetry in hand. The explanation was to the effect that the great prizes of the world are all within the reach of every clever lad who starts with a sufficiency of means and is not afraid of work, and that he himself—none other—possessed abilities which would justify him in aiming at the very highest.

But he must work—he must work. He had been to no school and knew nothing of competitions with other fellows. He must make up for that by hard grind. Think what it may mean to a young fellow of imagination and of dream, this throwing open of the gates of the temple of ambition, this invitation to mount the steps and enter that great and glittering dome. The temple within is all glorious with crowns of gold, set with precious stones, and with crowns of bay and laurel. Day and night ascends a hymn in praise of the living. They themselves—the living who have succeeded—sit on thrones of carved woodwork, precious beyond price, and hear and receive this homage all day long. This lad, only by looking in at the open doors, gasped and blushed and panted. His color came and went; his heart beat; he could not stand still.

His companion—they were in a country garden, and it was the spring of the year—was a girl of 15, who hung upon his words and adored him. Some women begin the voluntary servitude to the man they love at a very early age indeed. Nelly at 15 loved this boy of 17 as much as if they had both been 10 years older.

"Yes," she said timidly, and the manner of her saying it betrayed certain things. "And you will work, Will, won't you?"

"Work? Nell, since your father has spoken those words of encouragement I feel that there is nothing but work left in me—regular work—methodical, systematic work, you know. Grind, grind, grind! No more music, no more singing, no more making rhymes—grind, grind, grind! I say, Nell, I've always dreamed, you know"——

"You have, Will."

"And to find that things may actually come true—actually—the finest things that ever I dared to dream—oh!"

"It is wonderful, Will!" Both of them began to think that the finest things had already been achieved.

"It is like having your fortune doubled—trebled—multiplied by 10. Better. If my fortune were multiplied by 50, I could spend no more, I could eat no more, I believe I could do no more with it."

"Genius," said the girl, blushing, because it really did seem an original thing to say, "is better than riches."

"It is, it is," the possessor of genius replied, with conviction. "To have enough is to have all. I can, if I please, become a bishop, a judge, a statesman—anything, anything. Nell," his voice dropped, "the thought makes me tremble. I feel as if I shall not be equal to the position. There is personal dignity, you know."

"I shall row in the varsity boat."

The girl laughed. "You not equal, Will! Why, you are strong enough for anything."

"I have made up my mind what to do first of all. When I go to Cambridge, I shall take up classics. Of course I must take the highest classical honors. I shall carry off all the university scholarships, and the medals, and the prizes. Oh, and I must speak at the union! I must lead at the union, and I must be an athlete." He was tall and thin, and he stretched out his long arms. "I shall row in the boat—the varsity boat, of course. I shall play in the eleven."

"Oh, Will, you are too ambitious."

"No man," he said severely, "can be too ambitious. I would grasp all. I must sweep the board."

"And then?"

"Ah! There, I have not yet decided—the law, to maintain the social order; the house, to rule the nation. Literature, science, art—which?"

"In whatever you do, Will, you are certain to rise to the front rank."

"Certain. Your father says so. Oh, I feel as if I was already a leader of the house. It is a splendid thing to rule the house. I feel as if I was lord chancellor in my robe—on the woolsack. Nothing so grand as to be lord chancellor. I feel as if I was archbishop of Canterbury. It is a most splendid thing, mind you, to be archbishop of Canterbury. What could be more splendid? He wears lawn sleeves, and he sits in the house of lords. But I must work. The road to all these splendid things, as your father says, is through work. It wants an hour yet to dinner. I will give that hour to Euripides. No more waste of time for me, Nell."

He nodded his head and ran into the house, eager not to lose a moment.

The girl looked after him admiringly and fondly. "Oh," she murmured, "what a splendid thing to be a man and to become archbishop and lord chancellor and leader of the house! Oh, how clever he is, and how great he will become!"

"I've had a serious talk with Challice today," said the private tutor to his wife in the evening.

"Will is such a nice boy," said the wife. "What a pity he won't work!"

"He's got enough money to begin with, and he has never been to a public school. I have been firing his imagination, however, with the rich and varied prospect before a boy who really will work and has brains. He is a dreamer. He has vague ambitions. Perhaps I may have succeeded in fixing them. But who knows? He is a dreamer. He plays the piano and listens to the music. Sometimes he makes verses. Who knows what such a lad might do?"

CHAPTER II.

Two years later the same pair stood in the same place at the same season of the year. Term was over—the third term of the first year at Cambridge.

"I haven't pleased your father," said the young man. He was slight and boyish looking still, but on his face there was a new stamp—he had eaten of the tree of knowledge. "I have won no scholarships and taken no prizes. My grand ideas about university laurels are changed. You see, Nell, I have discovered that unless one goes into the church a good degree helps nobody. And of course it ruins a man in other ways to put in all the time working for a degree."

"You know," said Nell, "we don't think so here."

"I know. Then, you see, I had to make the acquaintance of the men and to show them that I was a person of—of some importance. A man who can play and sing is always useful. We are an extremely social college, and the—the friction of mind with mind, you know—it is the best education possible for a man—I'm sure it is—much better than poring over Plato. Then I found so many things in which I was deficient. French fiction, for example, and I knew so very little about art. Oh, I have passed a most busy and useful time."

He forgot to mention such little things as nap, ecarte, loo, billiards, Paris and London as forming part of his education. Yet everybody will own that these are important elements in the forming of a man.

"I see," said Nell.

"But your father won't. He is all for the senate house. You do take a little interest in me still, Nell, just a little interest—in an old friend?"

"Of course I do, Will." She blushed and dropped her eyes. Their fingers touched, but only for a moment. The touching of fingers is very innocent. Perhaps it was accidental.

"Nell," said the young man, with deep feeling and earnestness, "whatever I do—to whatever height I rise, I shall always feel"—here he stopped because he could hardly say that she had stimulated him or inspired him—"always feel, Nell, that it began here—it began here." He looked about the garden. "On this spot I first resolved to become a great man. It was on the very day when your father told me that I might be great if I choose. Of course I knew so much before, but it pleased me; it stimulated me. I told you here, on this spot, and you approved and cheered me on. Well, I don't, of course, tell any of the men about my ambitions. Mostly, I suppose, they have got their own. Some of them, I know, don't soar above a country living—I laugh in my sleeve, Nell, when I listen to their confessions—a country living—a house and a garden and a church. That is a noble ambition truly! I laugh, Nell, when I think of what I could tell them, the rapid upward climb, the dizzy height, the grasp of power and of authority!"

He spoke very grandly and waved his hand and threw his head back and looked every inch a leader—one round whom the soldiers of a holy cause would rally. The girl's eyes brightened, and her cheek glowed, even though she remembered what at that moment she would rather have forgotten—the words of her father at breakfast. "Challice has done nothing," he said. "He has attempted nothing. Now he will never do anything. It is just as I expected. A dreamer! A dreamer!"

"It was here," Will continued, "that I resolved on greatness. It was on this spot that I imparted my ambition to you. Nell, on this spot I again impart to you my choice. I will become a great statesman. I have money to start me—most fellows have to spend the best part of their lives in getting money enough to give them a start. I shall be the leader of the house. Mind, to any one but you this ambition would seem presumptuous. It is my secret which I trust with you, Nell." He caught her hands, drew her gently and kissed her on the forehead. "Dear Nell," he said, "long before my ambition is realized you will be by my side, encouraging and advising and consoling."

He spoke as a young man should and tenderly, as a lover should, but there was something not right—a secret thorn—something jarred. In the brave words, in the tender tones, there was a touch, a tone, a look out of harmony. Will Challice could not tell his mistress that all day long there was a voice within him crying: "Work, work! Get up and work! All this is folly! Work! Nothing can be done without work—work—work!"

(To Be Continued.)

HOW TO MAKE LOVE.

New and Very Novel, Though Not Successful, Method.

A good story is told of a young man who had gained access to the house of one of the richest and most aristocratic families in the city. He fell in love with the only daughter of the house, and tried to ingratiate himself with her in every possible manner, especially by bringing her the latest publications.

One day the father of the young lady found one of these books lying on the table, and began glancing through it. In one of the chapters he found a number of words underlined with a lead pencil—not beautiful passages, but insignificant words as "I" and "you." He turned over leaf after leaf, and found everywhere the same thing.

He connected up the underlined words, and read as follows: "Dearest Fraeulein: Will it insult you if I tell you that I adore you, and——"

In short, a love letter of the most gushing description, and closing with the suggestive words: "Answer in the next chapter."

Then he took a lead pencil, underlined some words in the next chapter, wrapped the book in a piece of paper, and handed it to the footman, whom he instructed to take it back to the young gentleman.

The latter opened the volume, his heart throbbing like a sledgehammer, and found the words underlined in the next chapter. He read as follows: "You young scoundrel! If you dare to cross the threshold of my house again, I shall kick you out of the window."—New York Mercury.

Too Careful of the Baby.

There are few things that cannot be carried to excess, however excellent they may be, in themselves considered. Even a baby may be fussed over, and fidgeted over, and taken care of, and coddled, till it is in danger of growing up a weakling, if it grows up at all. On this point the New York Tribune lately had a few sensible paragraphs.

"When my first child was born," said Mrs. A., "I had the usual young mother's craze for a daintily kept baby. The layette was one of those gorgeous gift affairs, with frocks which Victoria, I am sure, would have thought much too fine for the royal children—besides every conceivable fantasie in which the most luxurious-minded infant could by any possibility be attired. I used to gloat over the sachet-scented, exquisite little belongings, and the moment I was up and about after baby's birth I began to play doll with my small daughter, decking her out in first one thing and then another.

"I had one of those fussy French nurses, immaculate as a new pin; and between us we scrubbed and polished up that poor baby until it's a marvel it didn't fade away before our eyes. After a bath in almond meal-softened water, with plenty of Lubin and sweet-smelling talcum, she did look a darling in her sheer, beribboned draperies, and I, foolish mother, never noticed her languor and waxen skin.

"I did take note that her hair wouldn't grow; that worried me, for, no matter how becomingly dressed, a child with a billiard-ball style of coiffure does not realize the fondest dreams of the maternal heart. I sewed dolls' crimps in her bonnets, which was all very well for outings, but inadequate for home, so finally I called in the doctor.

"He was a grumpy person, very curt and not over-civil at times. 'Bathed too much,' he said, briefly. 'Look at her skin—all the life washed out of it. Too much care given that child. Let her get dirty and stay dirty. Nothing better for children than judicious neglect.'

"It was a new idea and I went to work at it. Very shortly we went to our country place, and I noticed the farmers' babies who ate almost any kind of country food, sat in puddles and went bare-headed whether the rain fell or the sun scorched. They were inevitable victims of future dyspepsia, but the fact remained that, as babies, they were sturdy and rosy, and mine wasn't; and I concluded to try judicious neglect.

"I invested in gingham pinafores and stout shoes, dumped a load of clean sand at the side door, and inaugurated a perpetual feast of mudpies. Pauline was instructed not to say 'Don't,' save in extreme moments, and baby began to live the life of a young animal left to the beneficent care of sunshine and fresh air, undisturbed save at regular intervals for food and sleep.

"I bought a pig that she might hang over the pen and tickle piggy's back with a stick. It afforded her hours of pure rapture to echo the pig's grunts with her silvery coo, and in some mysterious fashion the association was conducive to health. I never could understand why, only it was. She would always return blooming and serene, and if to a nap, slept better after having spent this pleasant period with her porcine friend.

"I bought chickens that she might feed them, got doves and other pets about the place, finding that animals gave interest but no overstimulus to the baby nerves. In short, I never had my wax dolly again; but in the autumn I carried home a blooming, sturdy little maid whose splendid spirits and perfect health more than compensated for occasional mud stains and torn pinafores."

Burials.

There is at least one country in the world where it costs nothing to die. In some of the cantons of Switzerland all the dead, rich as well as poor, are buried at the public expense. Coffins and all other necessary articles are furnished on application to certain undertakers designated by the government. Everything connected with the interment is absolutely gratuitous, including the grave and the religious service. All classes avail themselves freely of the law.

The Ruby.

The ruby in the center of the Maltese cross on the top of the British crown is the stone that was given to the Black Prince by King Pedro of Castile after the battle of Nejara. Henry V., of England, wore it in his helmet at the battle of Agincourt.

When people try to show all the love there is in them, they are tried for insanity.

A HISTORIC CANNON.

Was In the Mexican War and Is Now Used as a Curbstone Fender.

Almost the only relic in existence of the battery that was established in this city during the Mexican war is an old cannon that is at present doing duty as a curbstone fender. At the time the battery was constructed it was on the edge of the bay and near where the corner of Broadway and Sansome street now is.

When peace was declared, the battery was dismantled and the material of any use was carried away. For some reason one cannon was left behind, carriage and all. There appeared to be nothing the matter with it, and it was even used several times to fire Fourth of July salutes.

As the years went by the carriage was moved away and remained lying on the ground for a time. When Battery street was cut through, it received its name from the old fort, and the cannon was rolled down to the edge of the curb as a reminder of the old days.

How long it lay there is a question that nobody can answer, for those who might have done so are all dead. At any rate it is known that a patriotic drayman concluded that the cannon should be taken care of. He got a number of volunteers, and when the curbstone was put in the crowd carried it to the corner and poked its muzzle down into a hole. It has remained there ever since.—San Francisco Call.

Typhoid Fever and Bananas.

William C. Ussery, M. D., of St. Louis says that the best food for those suffering from typhoid fever is the banana. In this disease, he explains, the lining membrane of the small intestines becomes intensely inflamed and engorged. Eventually it begins sloughing away in spots, leaving well defined ulcers. At these places the intestinal walls become dangerously thin. A solid food, if taken into the stomach, is likely to produce perforation of the intestines and dire results will follow. Therefore solid foods or foods containing a large amount of innutritious substances, as compared with nutritious substances, are dangerous and are to be avoided. The banana, although it may be classed as a solid food, containing as it does 95 per cent nutrition, does not possess sufficient waste to irritate these sore spots. Nearly the whole amount taken into the stomach is absorbed and gives the patient more strength than can be obtained from other food.—New York Tribune.

Trying Ordeals For Presidents.

In writing of the pardoning power invested in the president, Hon. Benjamin Harrison says in The Ladies' Home Journal: "The papers in these murder cases are usually voluminous—a full record or an abstract of the evidence making part. If the trial seems to have been fairly conducted and no new exculpatory evidence is produced, and the sentence does not seem to have been unduly severe, the president refuses to interfere. He cannot weigh the evidence as well as the judge and jury. They saw and heard the witnesses, and he has only a writing before him. It happens sometimes that the wife or mother of the condemned man comes in person to plead for mercy, and I know of no more trying ordeal than to hear their tearful and sobbing utterances and to feel that a public duty requires that they be denied their prayer."

Wouldn't Gratify Them.

Mr. Bangs—Don't you think we'd better pull down the parlor shades? We shan't be home for ten days, you know.

Mrs. Bangs—No, indeed. If we put the shades down, half the women in town whom I know will hustle up here and leave their cards. I'm not going to gratify them in any such way.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

TRAVEL WITH A FRIEND

Who will protect you from those enemies—nausea, indigestion, malaria and the sickness produced by rocking on the waves and sometimes by inland travelling over the rough bed of ill laid railroads. Such a friend is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Ocean mariners, yachtsmen, commercial and theatrical agents and tourists testify to the productive potency of this effective safeguard, which conquers also rheumatism, nervousness and biliousness.

"Have you intellectual city people with you this summer, Mrs. Bayview?" "No; they all have frightful appetites."

This Engine is guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

WHY?

I married my wife, why?
Listen and I'll tell you;
Not because she makes good pie,
Tho' she can, I tell you;
Not because she's wondrous wise,
Versed in Greek and Latin;
Not because she likes to dress
in fine silk or satin;
Not because she rides a wheel,
I still wear the bloomers;
Not because in kindliness
All my crochets humors;
Not because on politics
She keeps always posted;
Not because she knows how I
Like my meat when roasted;
Not because of beauty rare,
That is quickly over;
Not because while she works hard
I could live in clover;
Not because she does possess
Fortune that's immense;
Simply just because she's got Good sound common sense.
—Charles W. Hird, in Boston Post.

Yes, that's the title of my story. "Oh, we won't like that story at all," I think I hear you exclaim, but please begin it, and I think you will enjoy it. It's true, every word, and happened nineteen years ago in a country district about thirty-five miles north of the city of San Diego.

THE STORY.

"Why, Miss Kate, I don't see the school-house."

"I think perhaps we're not near enough yet," answered Miss Kate, rather doubtfully.

"Oh, yes, we are. Don't you remember we could always see it when we reached this tree?" said the little boy again.

"Well, Willie, I do believe you are right and that our own little schoolhouse has been either swallowed up or blown away!" exclaimed the young teacher, as she stopped suddenly in the path, gazing with astonishment at the place where the building should have been.

"We weft it all wight yes'day afnoon, didn't we, Mith Kate?"

"Yes, Daisy dear, but it's gone now; let's go up to where it stood and see if we can discover what has become of it."

So up the steep hill they climbed; when they arrived at the spot, which was really a very barren, unsheltered place, they found that some mischief-worker had been very busy during their absence.

One of the walls of the building lay at quite a distance, while the other three were piled on top of each other near at hand.

The hills and knolls around were strewn with a medley of papers, clock, stoves, pencils, chalk, desks and books.

Who or what had done the mischief? How could it have happened?

After talking it over quite a while they decided it must have been a sudden squall of wind, purely local, which had played havoc with their little temple of learning while they had been soundly sleeping the night before.

Dispatching one of the boys for the trustee who lived in the neighborhood, Miss Kate and the rest of the children went to work to gather up those of the furnishings which had not been ruined.

The schoolma'am felt pretty blue; the hot tears filled her eyes as she bent over her task. What was she to do? Here she was far away from home. Ah, the thought of her mother, brothers and sisters in that home, whom she was trying so hard to help, and now she had no schoolhouse in which to teach! Was it not disheartening?

It was a very lonely place; thinly settled. The trustees had been paying her a high salary, and had even given her an extra amount for teaching on Saturdays, because she was the very first instructor who had been willing to remain during a whole term.

Thus her thoughts ran, her face growing more serious all the time.

"It was a good thing it happened at night, Miss Kate," said one of the boys, trying to cheer her.

"Yes, Benny."

"Jush shink, Mith Kate, if it had happ'n'd the day you forgotten to bwing the key, and we all had to cwimb in and out of the windo'! We'd been all hurted badwy wen, wouldn't we?" chimed in dear little Daisy Brownie.

"Oh, here comes Mr. Case!" they shouted, running to meet the easy-going, good-natured man.

"Wall, I declar', Miss Kate," said he, puffing and blowing after his climb, "this is too bad, reely! What are you a-going to do?"

"Mr. Case, I think I'll pack my trunk and start for home to-morrow; I believe a steamer sails from San Diego for the north to-morrow, does it not?" said she, with trembling lip and flashing eye.

"Thar, thar, not so fast. Of course I can't say just what the other trustees of the deestrict will want to do, but I swan, we'd all hate to have you go.

"I guess I'd better hitch up the old roan and jes' drive over and let Mr. Jones and Mr. Sykes know 'bout this a-happenin', and come and tell you this evenin' what we decide to do.

"Now, you go home, like a good girl, and jest make up your mind that we'll not let you get off for such a little thing as the schoolhus's blowin' down! Will we, young uns?"

"You bet your boots we won't," shouted the boys.

Thanking him for his encouraging words Miss Kate and her faithful little flock started for home—a long walk of a mile and a half before her.

It was in the lovely springtime of the year and the air was so full of the songs of birds and the sweet fragrance of flowers that they soon recovered their good spirits and had not gone very far when they had to stop and have a good hearty laugh over the funny misfortune.

One by one the boys and birls bade their teacher good-by as they reached their homes, rushing with eagerness to tell the exciting news to their parents, who were filled with wonder when they saw their children returning from school so early in the day.

During the evening Miss Kate received the promised call from Mr. Case, who brought the welcome news that the schoolhouse was to be immediately rebuilt, that the trustees had determined to build it much nearer her boarding-place, in a pretty, little sheltered dell.

Until it was ready, which he thought would be in about a week, she was to hold her classes in his front room.

Again thanking him for his kindness and bidding him "good-night," she went to bed with a very happy heart.

The next day the children met with their teacher in Mr. Case's front room, and every day after that until the school building was ready.

Mr. Case's house, by the way, consisted of two tiny rooms, the one in which the lessons were recited being the family sitting and bedroom.

And worst of all, there was a teething baby in the house, whose peevish cries often drowned the voices of teacher and pupils.

My! how glad a day it was when the little unpainted schoolhouse was ready for its occupants once more, even though it had no floor save the one furnished by Mother Earth—even though its stove and clock were warped and rusty and its books and maps tattered and torn. Then the kind trustees had placed it in such a pretty spot.

All during the days of the spring term the one little window and the door were thrown wide open to admit the sweet scents and the sounds of the season.

Mocking-birds sang in the canyons close by.

The little squirrels were wont to come and sit on the wood pile by the open door.

Humming-birds, oh, so brilliant, darted hither and thither, and the flowers were so abundant and so gorgeous that the dell seemed to have been deluged with vari-colored paint from the great pots of the giants on the mountain-tops above.

So you see, my dears, it was not such an ill wind, after all, that one night blew down the little country schoolhouse.

Uncle Sam's Menagerie.

The sovereign power of the government has won a victory in a legal controversy which is officially labeled "the United States vs. seventeen boxes of snakes and twenty-three monkeys." It was a peculiar case, and appears to have been the outcome of the jealousy of a clique of importers of snakes and monkeys in New York toward a rival. The members of the clique made up their minds that they would not tolerate a new dealer, who might become a formidable competitor in the market. When they were called on as experts to fix valuations they named their estimates so high that the consignee of the snakes and monkeys could not afford to pay the duty assessed. The goods were detained by the custom-house authorities and placed in bond. Government officials did not know how to take care of the goods. Snakes should have a bath every day, and these did not get proper treatment. The monkeys, too, were not well cared for. The result is that about all the reptiles are now dead, and the decision of the court is that the government need not make good the large loss of the consignee. This may be good law, but wherein the justice of it consists it is impossible to see.—Buffalo Express.

The Eskimo Character.

We found the Innuits very quick-witted and intelligent; with unvarying good nature and a keen appreciation of fun, they proved themselves companionable in spite of their uncleanliness. Their skill manifested itself in many ways during these long excursions. Later in the year it showed itself, on one occasion, in a particularly interesting way. Having found it necessary to cross a glacier on a hunting trip, our Innuits passed at the edge and halloed to ascertain the direction of the echo. On the return a storm of snow and fog had obliterated all landmarks, but the Indians easily found the way by means of the echo.

There was always a charm in their strange melodies, and particularly at night, as they slowly rowed along the black waters among ghostly, beautiful icebergs, under the starless sky. And such melodies! They were like the sighing of the winds, low, contented, full-breathed, yet with an undertone of sadness. But at times their songs are vehement with joy and action.—Century.

Not a Financier.

"Look here," said the city editor to the new reporter, "you allude in this story to Mr. Roxwell as a financier."

"Why, he handles a great deal of money."

"I don't care if he does. I don't want you to call him a financier. He hasn't any side whiskers."—Washington Star.

There is a certain kind of man that no amount of effort will ever make a man out of.

To Regulate Water Flow.

Regulating the flow of water into troughs and tanks is something which causes farmers more or less anxiety and trouble, for the reason that many of the patent regulators now in the market fail to work satisfactorily for any length of time. Many simple home-made devices, however, can be made to work. The one shown in the illustration, which is from the American Agriculturist, has a number of strong points.

REGULATOR FOR WATER TROUGHS.

The water pipe enters near the top of the tank, which places the valve out of water, thus relieving it of all danger from rust or the collection of sediment. However, where necessary, the pipe may enter nearer the bottom of the tank, and if the valve is kept clear the device will still serve its purpose. Another point in its favor is that, if desired, the valve can be closed just as effectually when the tank is one-fourth full as when filled to the brim. The lower half of the long, jointed lever connecting the valve and float has a shorter one attached to it, the upper end of the latter having a number of holes in it. By having a hole in the upper half of the jointed lever and using a pin, the angle at the joint can be changed at will. Making it as large as possible will necessitate the float being lifted near the top of the tank before the valve is entirely closed, but by decreasing the angle the valve will be closed while the float is still near the bottom. A sealed can or bottle makes a good float. A board or block of wood soon becomes soaked, and in consequence its lifting power is greatly diminished.

Cow Peas for Soiling.

As Northern farmers become better acquainted with the cow pea and its advantages, they are likely to largely use it in conjunction with and partial substitution for corn as a fodder crop. It is much richer than corn in nitrogenous nutrition, and that is always the kind that is most costly and hard to procure. Besides, the cow pea gets its nitrogen as clover does, from air in the soil. It is one of the leguminous order of plants, all of which have this power. The chief objection to growing cow peas in the North is the difficulty in ripening their seed. One or two kinds will ripen in New England in a favorable season and if put in early. But we can procure the seed cheaply from the South, and if farmers found they could never ripen its seed, they could still afford to grow some every year to feed in alternation with fodder corn or to put in the silo. It is not, however, so good for the silo as corn, as the nitrogenous material of which it is composed heats too rapidly, making it as hard to save sweet as clover ensilage is.

A Movable Chicken House.

A chicken house that can easily be moved about is shown herewith. In size it is convenient for a hen and her chickens. Slats are vertical in front and far enough apart to allow chicks to run in and out. In front is a base board, nailed to a bottom strip extended from each side, on which chicks may be fed. It is well to provide shade or shed rain by a board awning as shown.

MOVABLE CHICKEN HOUSE.

A floor to the coop is not necessary, as hens prefer to dust at will.

A Costly Job, but It Pays.

The cost of applying paris green as a protection against potato bugs has been estimated by Prof. Fernalds at a sum equal to about two cents per bushed of the crop. At this rate it costs about $5,000,000 a year to insure against potato bugs throughout the country! That may be a little high, but what a saving if the Colorado beetle had been stamped out upon its first appearance twenty years ago! A concerted campaign at that time, at state and national expense, would have done the business. Just so we advocate Congress providing the money to help Massachusetts stamp out the gypsy moth—a pest which that State alone has held in check for some years at a cost of half a million. If allowed to spread over the country, the gypsy moth would do more damage each year than potato bugs, rose bugs, grasshoppers and chinch bugs put together. Here is a chance for government work to good purpose and in a way that would benefit the whole country.—Farm and Home.

Sweet Corn in Succession.

By planting some of the very earliest sweet corn on rich land the last of April it is possible to have it on the table from the middle of July until long after frost has nipped the leaves. It is the late varieties of corn like Evergreen that are in order for late use, and there should be at least two plantings of these, one for early and to ripen seed, and the other late and not intended to ripen at all. If the corn is cut before frost and the green ears are plucked from the stalk and put in a cool cellar, the corn will be nearly as good most of the winter as it was in the fall. We know some farmers who only can or dry corn for late winter and spring use, as they keep green ears of their latest planting fit for use until January or later. If the ears are left on the stalks they will ripen too much to be in good condition, but if plucked off and kept very near down to freezing temperature and in a dry place to prevent mold, late Evergreen corn can be kept in condition long after frost and snow have come.—American Cultivator.

Dry Lima Beans for the Table.

Few of those who like the succulent green Lima beans know that they are, if not equally good, at least superior to common field beans when dried for winter use. We used always when growing Limas to put up those that we could not use green, and the winter supply was usually exhausted before spring. We think a profitable market for Lima beans in their dried state can be found in most cities or villages if farmers will tell their city friends how good they are. Lima beans have, even when dried, much of the rich, nutty taste that makes them popular when eaten green. There is another reason also for saving the late beans left at the end of the season for use in winter. They are quite often used for seed, with the result of making the Lima bean crop each year a little later, so that in some places very few would be fit for use until frost came and nipped the vines. The first fruits of anything in which earliness is important should always be used for seed.

Protect Haystacks from Rain.

Where hay is stacked out of doors for several months, it will pay to secure large sheets of old canvas and stretch over the stack, pinning the corners by driving a peg in the stack. The plan is a modification of the smaller hay caps used extensively in the field, during the hay harvest, when rainy weather suddenly comes on. Such a cap will effectually keep rain and snow from the hay, thus rendering it far more nutritious and palatable to stock.—Farm and Home.

A PROFITABLE HAY CAP TO USE.

Ridding Lambs of Ticks.

For some time after shearing the wool on the new shorn sheep will not harbor ticks. They consequently all congregate on the young lambs, whose wool has been growing since birth and makes a convenient hiding place. Our way when we kept sheep was to get a quantity of tobacco stems and boil them, making a strong decoction of the tobacco. This would kill the ticks on all the lambs immersed in it, and we never knew the lambs to be injured thereby. If a careless plunge immersed the nose of the lamb into the liquid it would be sickened thereby for a little while, but would soon recover.

Pinching Back Grape Shoots.

Grape vines left unpruned during the summer exhaust themselves by producing an enormous amount of useless wood. In the fall most of the new roots are cut out, and those that remain are silowed very few buds. Into these all the strength of the vine is thrown. Some strong-growing varieties, like the Rogers Hybrid, have been known to make eighteen to twenty feet of long, slim cane. If pinched back when the vine had grown shoots three or four feet long, the new canes will be thicker and much better prepared to bear a crop the folowing year.

Caring for Spring Planted Trees.

If half the trees planted each spring lived through their first season the demand for nursery stock would not be so large as it now is. Yet we doubt whether the lack of care in planting and keeping the tree in condition after planting is in any way beneficial to the nurseryman. The cost of the tree and all the labor bestowed upon it becomes a total loss if it dies. This is very discouraging, and after a few such experiments the planter concludes that fruit growing don't pay, which for him is probably a proper enough conclusion.

SOUTH AFRICAN RUINS.

Buildings at Zimbabwe that May Be of King Solomon's Time.

It would seem that, at some far distant date, a people more civilized than any of the present Kafir tribes had penetrated into the region we now call Mashonaland, and had maintained itself there for a considerable period. Remains of gold-workings are found in many parts of that country, and even as far as the southwestern part of Matabeleland—remains which show that mining must have been carried on, by primitive methods, no doubt, but still upon a scale larger than we can well deem within the capabilities of the Kafir tribes as we now see them. There are, moreover, in these regions, and usually not far from some old gold-working, pieces of ancient building executed with a neatness and finish, as well as with an attempt at artistic effect, which are entirely absent from the rough walls, sometimes of loose stones, sometimes plastered with mud, which the Kafirs build to-day.

These old buildings are, with one exception, bits of wall inclosing forts or residences. They are constructed of small blocks of the granite of the country, carefully trimmed to be of one size, and are usually ornamented with a simple pattern, such as the so-called "herringbone" pattern. The one exception is to be found in the ruins of Zimbabwe, in southern Mashonaland. Here a wall thirty feet high, and from six to twelve or fourteen feet thick, incloses a large elliptical space, filled with other buildings, some of which apparently were intended for the purposes of worship. There are no inscriptions of any kind, and few objects, except some rudely carved heads of birds, to supply any indication as to the ethnological affinities of the people who erected this building, or as to the nature of their worship. Such indications as we have, however, suggest that it was some form of nature worship, including the worship of the sun. We know from other sources (including the Egyptian monuments and the Old Testament) that there was from very early times a trade between the Red Sea and some part of East Africa; and as we know also that the worship of natural forces and of the sun prevailed among the early Semites, the view that the builders of Zimbabwe were of Arab or some other Semitic stock, is at least highly plausible.

Two things are quite clear to every one who examines the ruins, and compares them with the smaller fragments of ancient building already mentioned. Those who built Zimbabwe were a race much superior to the Bantu tribes, whose mud huts are now to be found not far from these still strong and solid walls; and those other remains scattered through the country were either the work of that same superior race, or, at any rate, were built in imitation of their style and under the influence they had left. But whether this race was driven out or peaceably withdrew, or became by degrees absorbed and lost in the surrounding Bantu population, we have no data for conjecture. If they came from Arabia they must have come more than twelve centuries ago, before the days of Mohammed; for they were evidently not Mussulmans, and it is just as easy to suppose that they came in the days of Solomon, fifteen centuries earlier.—Century.

Danger in Excess of Exercise.

Housework, chores, gardening, walking, climbing, cycling, running, swimming and many other sports give just the kind of exercise that is indicated in certain conditions, due regard being had to the physiological effects of varying dosage. Oertel has shown how the simple exercise of walking may be adapted to sufferers from cardiac debility by prescribing the distance and speed and the number and length of the rests on definite paths graduated according to their slope. His interesting and original work has not only given a new direction to the treatment of certain cardiac affections, but is destined to have an important influence in establishing accuracy in the prescription of exercise. Whoever has studied the map of the environs of Reichenhall, Bavaria, prepared by Oretel for the application of his method, will acquire a vivid idea of what precision of dosing in exercise means. In this map the different paths suitable for the work are marked in four different colors, to indicate those that are nearly level, those slightly sloping, moderately sloping and steep, and figures are placed along each route to show the space that should be traversed in each quarter hour.

The locality itself is prepared for its remedial use by placing benches for resting at suitable distances, and by marking on certain trees near the path circles, colored to correspond with the map, to indicate the difficulty of that particular section. By systematic practice on the easier paths the heart and system are progressively trained and strengthened. Intelligent analysis may do the same work for cycling, horseback riding, and many other familiar exercises. In this way the dosage is practically reduced to a definite number of kilogrammeters in a given time, and a step has been taken in placing the prescription of exercise upon a scientific basis.—Appleton's Science Monthly.

A Freak.

"Blykins is the most modest man I ever saw!" said a friend of his.

"What makes you think so?"

"I never yet heard him claim that the bicycle he rides is the best on the market."—Washington Star.

Admiration.

"What do you admire most about Snobbe's literary work?"

"The compensation he manages to get for it," replied the person who is chronically envious.—Washington Star.

"May I be at liberty to quote you as indorsing the sentiment that the voice of the people is the voice of God?" asked the interviewer. "I would not like to commit myself to that sentiment until after the convention," answered the candidate.—Indianapolis Journal.

SENATOR JOHN W. DANIEL.

Temporary Chairman of the Democratic National Convention.

One of the most striking and in one sense most commanding figures at the Democratic convention at Chicago was Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, whom the free silver men in the convention made temporary chairman, thus refusing to accept the choice of the national committee, Senator David B. Hill.

Senator Daniel was born in Lynchburg, Va., in 1842. He served in the Confederate army of Northern Virginia during the war and received a wound that has since been to him the source of constant pain. He was riding his horse when a cannon ball took away a portion of his thigh. He fell and lay for some time in the midst of the battle until one of his own soldiers, who was also wounded, dragged him behind a log. There the two lay together for more than half an hour with the bullets flying, the shells bursting and the battle going on all about them. When the fight was finished Daniel was carried to the hospital. The surgeon said he would die, but a section of the thigh bone was cut away and his youthful vitality was such that he recovered. He has to-day six inches of bone out of one of his legs, and still he manages to do good work, though he is in constant pain.

After leaving the service he studied law and has practiced it since 1866. From 1869 to 1872 he served in the Virginia House of Delegates and from 1875 to 1881 in the State Senate. In 1870 he was a Democratic elector-at-large and was a member of the Democratic conventions of 1880 and 1888. He was a member of the Forty-ninth Congress and was elected to the United States Senate to succeed William Mahone. He was re-elected and his present term of office will expire in 1899.

Senator Daniel is one of the ablest speakers in the South and is called the silver-tongued orator. He has a remarkably striking and cultured face.

HIS BIG UNDERTAKING.

Samuel Plimsoll Would Unite Yankee and Briton in Brotherly Love.

Samuel Plimsoll, who wants to unite the people of the United States and Great Britain in brotherly love and mutual admiration, is a wonderful man. He recently arrived in New York for the sole purpose of patching up all differences between the Yankee and the Briton, and is not at all dismayed by the size of the undertaking. Mr. Plimsoll is getting on toward 75, and most of his life has been spent in smoothing the path of the British sailor. His present mission is, therefore, new to him. He began life as a lawyer's clerk and changed that occupation for a high stool in a brewery.

SAMUEL PLIMSOLL.

Then he went down to London and opened a place of business for himself. In 1868 he was elected to parliament and was instrumental in securing the passage of several acts amending the shipping laws. These measures were of great comfort to the English sailor. In 1880 he went back to the House of Commons, but gave up his seat to Sir William Vernon Harcourt, who promised to use his influence as cabinet minister to further all parliamentary matters affecting the well being of sailors. Mr. Plimsoll has written and published two books, "Our Seamen" in 1877, and "Cattle Ships" in 1890. Both works have done much to make the lot of Jack Tar happier. Six years ago he was made President of the Amalgamated Sailors' Union, but afterward retired.

His Previous Existence.

Gutherz—Look here, Zapfer, do you believe in the transmigration of souls?

Zapfer—No; do you?

Gutherz—Most certainly I do; and I am thoroughly convinced that I was an ass at the time I lent you that $50.—Salisbury Truth.

Out in the Cold.

Boggs' Old Friend—Great heavens, man! Do I find you reduced to playing a cornet on the street corner to make a living?

Boggs—I ain't doing this to make a living. My wife won't let me practice in the house.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Some people's politeness savors a great deal of a rebuke to those who forget to be polite.

FINANCIAL CATECHISM.

[Sacramento Bee.]

1. What is bimetallism?

A. The equal treatment of the two metals, gold and silver, as money, at a given rate of coinage.

2. What is meant by 16 to 1?

That in coining the two metals into money 16 ounces of silver are to be deemed equal to 1 ounce of gold.

3. What is the present commercial ratio of silver and gold bullion?

It is about 30 to 1.

4. What caused the divergence between the coin and bullion value of silver?

The demonetization of silver in 1873 by the country and some of the nations of Europe.

5. Why was silver demonetized?

It was demonetized because of the desire to limit the supply of money, making money dearer, thus increase its purchasing power, and therefore to the advantage of money dealers, bondholders, creditor classes and those having fixed incomes.

6. Was not the demonetization of silver in 1873 due to its over-production as compared with gold?

It was not due to the over-production of silver, because (a) for many years prior to 1873 the world's production of gold had been about three times as great as that of silver, and (b) in 1873 silver bullion was at a premium of 3 per cent over gold.

7. How does the world's production of gold and silver for the last 100 years compare with the other?

Between the years 1792 and 1892 the world's production of gold exceeded that of silver about $600,000,000.

8. What is the ratio or the two metals as they exist by weight in the world today (available for money)?

It is about 15 2-3 to 1, which means that there are only about sixteen times as many tons of silver in the world available for money as there are tons of gold.

9. What, therefore, is the natural ratio between silver and gold?

Sixteen to one is the natural ratio between silver and gold bullion and would manifestly be the present commercial ratio had not there been legal interference.

10. To whose advantage is it that nations have been induced to adopt the gold standard?

To the advantage of all creditor nations, especially England. Two hundred million people now use gold alone as redemptive money who in 1873 used both gold and silver; hence the constant rise in the power of gold (and money based on gold), which rise shows itself in the fall of prices of commodities.

11. If we had free coinage of silver would not this country become the "dumping ground" for silver from all nations?

There are, it is supposed, about four billion dollars of silver coin and bullion in the world, and if all of this should come here it would only give the United States a per capita of about $58, which is only a little more than we had of all kinds of money in the North at the close of the war when times were exceedingly prosperous. France to-day has nearly this amount of money per capita, and is one of the most prosperous countries in the world.

12. What is there to prevent this silver from coming to our mints for coinage?

There are three conclusive reasons: (a) Other nations have no more silver than they need; (b) Europe annually uses about twice as much silver as she produces, and (c) the great bulk of the silver now in existence is already coined at ratios more favorable to silver than 16 to 1, some being 15 to 1 and some 15½ to 1.

13. If silver coin should not come to our mints for recoinage would not England continue as at present to depress the price of silver bullion?

North and South America produce 75 per cent of all the silver now being produced in the world, and ten times as much as Europe does, so that the United States and the other countries of the Western continents could easily control the price of silver bullion regardless of other nations.

14. Why not put more silver in our silver dollar so as to make the bullion and face value equal?

Because this disagreement is due to adverse legislation, which, when corrected, will restore the parity by reducing the demand for gold and increasing the demand for silver. Besides we would be foolish to undervalue our own products. By rights we should demand 15½ instead of 16 to 1.

15. If silver should come to our mints for coinage faster than their present capacity, would not that prevent the full rise in the price of silver bullion?

The capacity of our mints could easily be enlarged to meet all demands.

16. Will not the people object to using so much silver on account of its bulk?

Silver certificates, as now used, will easily float all the silver that may be presented.

17. Would there be vault room for the storage of so much silver?

All the silver coin and bullion in the world could be put in a room sixty-six feet square and sixty-six feet high, silver being, like gold, a precious metal; all the gold coin and bullion in the world can be put in a room twenty-two feet square and swenty-two feet high, which shows how easily it may be "cornered."

18. Would not the free coinage of silver so stimulate the production at the mines as to create a flood of the white metal?

The annual output of gold and silver is small and is barely 5 per cent of the present supply, so that it would take twenty years before the present amount of the metal is doubled, and that would not more than keep pace with the increase of the population and wealth of the world, and especially not of the United States.

19. What then, is really the only problem that we, as a nation, have to solve regarding the free coinage of silver?

We have practically only to take care of and absorb our share of the annual production of silver, which is for the whole world only about 5 per cent of the present available supply.

20. What has the wealth of a country to do with the amount of money it possesses?

A very great deal, as a moment's reflection will show. A country like China or Japan needs but a small per capita circulation of money to make its exchanges of property, and to prevent a fall or rise in prices; and manifestly an old and well developed country of small area like France or Germany will need less than a new and undeveloped country of great area like the United States.

21. Is it not true that the bankers of our country have generally plenty of money in their vaults which they are unwilling to lend?

This is true, but it shows that money is dear and commodities cheap. Money can be borrowed if there is ample security, but cannot be bought. It will not readily exchange for commodities of labor. Property invested in money is now more valuable than when invested in commodities. Free coinage of silver will put new money in circulation, will enable the people to earn more money and render money less dear and more ready to exchange for commodities and labor.

22. So much business is now done through the banks by checks and drafts, does not there now exist less need for money than formerly?

All will agree that this country never had as prosperous times as between 1864 and 1873, and business was done then as much as now through the banks, while in many lines of business money is now used where orders on stores and other obsolete devices were formerly employed.

23. What was the per capita of money circulation at the end of the war in 1865?

Before the Southern States which had been in rebellion began to use the national money there was a per capita circulation of about $50, not including the 7-30 bonds which, having been paid out by the Government to the soldiers, also largely passed as currency among the people.

24. At that time what was the ratio between the amount of money in circulation and the total wealth of the country?

There was about $1 in money to $20 in other property.

25. What is the present ratio between money and property in France?

It is about 1 to 25.

26. What is the present ratio between money and property in the United States?

Estimating our circulation at one and a half billion dollars and our present wealth at sixty-five billion dollars, the ratio is about 1 to 45; but if we deduct the money in the United States treasury and the legal reserves in the banks (which have no effect upon the prices of commodities, not being in competition with them) the ratio is about 1 to 55.

27. What is our present per capita of circulation?

A liberal estimate is $22, but if the deductions just referred to be made, the circulation is about $18.

28. What do we learn from these comparisons?

We learn that while we have doubled our population and trebled our wealth since 1865 our money circulation has relatively decreased, and could nearly be doubled before we should have as ample business facilities as those we enjoyed prior to 1873, or as France now possesses.

29. Will not free coinage of silver benefit the silver miners and no one else?

When one class of producers thrives, other classes, by supplying that class with their commodities, thrive also. Silver and gold differ from other commodities in that when they are stamped by the Government they become money for which every person seeks and no one thinks he has too much.

30. What effect does the increase or decrease in the volume of money have on the price of commodities?

When there is an increase in the volume of money the price of commodities rises, and when there is a decrease in the volume of money the price of commodities falls.

31. What proof is there that this law is true?

The ablest writers on economics in Europe and America and the experience of our own and other countries teach this. In Australia and California, for example, when the gold mines were yielding bountifully times were good, but now that the mines, especially those of Australia, have become nearly exhausted, the times are hard and prices exceeding low.

32. Is it not true that the present low price of commodities is mainly due to improvements in machinery, etc.?

Some authorities are willing to concede to this cause 6 or 8 per cent of the fall in prices which has occurred during the last twenty-five years; but other authorities contend that the improvements in the methods of mining gold and silver, which have been great, will fully offset all this decline.

33. Is it not true that the low price of commodities, especially manufactured articles, is due to over-production?

There has been an increase of production in many articles, but in general not an over-production. The benefits of an increase of production should go to the producer, and not to the non-producer. Money should increase with commodities and business to such an extent that the general average of prices may be preserved.

34. Have not the low prices of wheat and cotton been caused by the increased competition of India and other countries?

The increased production of these articles has not kept pace with the world's per capita of population, but our wheat and cotton growers are now only receiving the gold price of silver for their products, while those in silver-standard countries—their main competitors—are receiving its mint or coin price for theirs. For many years past the price of wheat and cotton has followed very closely the price of silver bullion. Hence every advance in the price of silver is a benefit to our wheat and cotton-growers, and this is the reason why our northern farmers and our southern planters are so universally favoring the free coinage of silver.

35. Is it not true that the production of gold increases each year, and hence in time will supply all needed metallic money?

The output of gold increases slowly each year, but does not keep pace with the increase of population and business or with its use in the arts; and hence gold is in reality growing constantly scarcer and hence dearer.

36. What caused the panic of 1873?

The too rapid contraction of the currency after the war.

37. How long did the business stagnation continue without improvement?

For about six years until 1879, when under the Bland-Allison Act our Government began to buy $2,000,000 of silver each month.

38. What was prophesied about this issue of silver by John Sherman and other timid financiers?

They said that we could not float at par more than $50,000,000.

39. From 1878 to 1893 how much silver did we issue?

We issued about $500,000,000, which was ten times as much as was thought possible, and the money is still at par. We could absorb a billion dollars more and then not equal the per capita circulation of the currency of France.

40. What have been the best times that we have had since the panic of 1873?

The best times have been between 1878 and 1893, while we were putting the $500,000,000 of new silver into circulation and thus helping to sustain general prices.

41. What has been the fall in prices since the bankers' panic of 1893?

From 15 to 20 per cent. on nearly all commodities, and since 1873 nearly 50 per cent.

42. What is the financial condition of Mexico and other silver standard countries?

They have had no panics and business is steadily improving and American capital finds better employment there than here.

43. Why have they such good times in Mexico?

Because they have plenty of money, and hence the price of their commodities measured in their money does not fall, nor do their taxes, debts and other fixed charges relatively rise, as these are now doing in the United States under the gold standard.

44. What effect does this fall in prices have on us as nation?

It tends to discourage production and commerce, and works to the constant impoverishment of the debtor classes.

45. How has this fall in prices affected our national and other long-time debts?

All debts are paid in the products of the labor of the debtor, and as most of our debts are held by foreign countries they are paid in farm products, mainly wheat and cotton and it will now take more than twice as large an amount of these commodities to pay the same amount of debts as in 1873. Thus on account of the fall in their prices it will now take more wheat or more cotton to pay off our national debt (now reduced to $889,000,000) than it would to have paid the debt in 1873, when it was $2,105,000,000. Hence we are now paying our whole national debt at the rate of over $2 for $1 received. When a comparison is made with the condition of affairs in 1866 matters are still worse and "our people," as the Historian Ridpath says, "have paid and paid for thirty years and at the end have paid just this—nothing."

46. Why would it not be better, before the United States declares for the remonetization of silver, to wait for an international agreement?

Because, first, we ought to govern our own affairs as we did in 1776; second, the great european nations are controlled by their creditor classes, the same as we have been here, whose interests are to have gold rise as high as possible, and debtors be required to pay them an ever-increasing amount of products for nominally the same amount of debt, and so these nations will refuse to agree to bimetallism; third, because we know most of the moneyed men of this country, for the selfish reasons just given, favor gold monometallism and are opposed to the use of silver as standard money at any ratio. The offer to promote an international convention is only a device to help defeat the cause of bimetallism for another four years.

47. Why do the large city newspapers so generally oppose free silver?

Most of the large papers are run by capitalists whose selfish interests are with the money lenders.

48. Why do so many of the prominent business men in the cities seem to be opposed to free silver?

Most of them receive their ideas on the subject from the daily newspapers, and especially from the bankers, upon whom most of them are dependent for loans, which might be denied them if they were known to favor free silver. Business men who are not dependent on their bankers are generally capitalists and have the same selfish reasons as the bankers for opposing free silver.

49. Had their been free coinage of silver since 1873 instead of the present gold standard, what would have been the present condition of affairs?

There would have been plenty of money in circulation, and hence no panics and no general fall in prices, and we should have had a more rapid and general accumulation of wealth—participated in by all classes—and aggregating, it is believed, about eighty billions of dollars in the United States instead of sixty-five billions, as now estimated.

50. What is the duty of every one who desires to see general business prosperity?

To study this money question for himself and to learn, as every one can, what great evils have come, not only upon our own nation, but also upon the toilers and producers of Europe, by the demonetization of silver and to realize that neither we nor they can ever have good times until both gold and silver are standard money. It rests with the people to say at the polls whether we shall have these good times this Fall or wait in misery another four years.

RIDING ON A SUNBEAM.

A New Invention For Carrying Sound Without Wires.

When walking through the laboratory of the Volta bureau with Dr. A. Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, I picked up on one of the shelves a piece of pine board about half an inch thick and eight inches square. Out of the center of it extended a speaking tube, which apparently rested against a thin disk of bright metal sunk into the opposite side. This metal was like a silver mirror, and was about as large around as the bottom of a tumbler. I asked Dr. Bell what it was, and he told me that it was a perfected instrument whose original construction enabled him to project his voice from one point to another through the medium of a sunbeam. It enabled him, in other words, to send sounds along a ray of light without the aid of an electric wire. He took the instrument and put the tube to his mouth, holding the mirror so that it caught the sun and cast a little shadow disk of light on the opposite wall. Then by breathing slightly he made this shadow increase and diminish, and assume various shapes by the action of his breath against the mirror diaphragm.

"That shows you," said he, "how the action of the diaphragm is carried along the ray. Now, if you will put a little bottle with some soot in it where that shadow is on the wall, and speak into the tube, you will find that the sound will travel along that ray of light, and by having a receiver connected with the bottle one would be able to hear what you are saying. We have spoken by this means to and from points 200 yards apart, and there seems to be no reason to doubt that speech may be sent along a beam of light for great distances. In our experiment in this we first used selenium, a very rare substance, and very sensitive to light. We have found, however, that we can produce very good results with common soot, and the discoveries may yet be made which will make such an invention commercially practicable."—World's Progress.

NATURE OF THE ELDER DUMAS.

Mme. Dorval, the Actress, Always Called Him Her "Good Dog."

I did not meet the elder Dumas until he was on the wane, but was acquainted with him before he fell under the influence of Adah Isaacs Menken. When young, his hair was fair, then dark, but when I saw him it was gray and in texture less woolly than the negro's. His lips were thick and extended from ear to ear when he laughed, and his teeth were uneven and set apart from each other. He flattered himself that his nose was straight. It was, however, lumpy, with wide, strongly marked and quivering nostrils. To the pride of life he was insensible. But he was a slave of the flesh, though in a fitful way, and the never ending pressure of creditors obliged him to react against his conviviality. One saw that he was a force of nature and a child of nature.

His small hands and feet and his singularly acute though good natured blue eyes alone indicated blood derived from a long line of civilized northern ancestors. There were traces of Africa in his speech. His laugh was a guffaw, but its hilarity was contagious. When a case of suffering was made known to him, his face at once fell, and if he knew the sufferer the broad face contracted, and he howled until he had spent his grief. Mme. Dorval, whom he and Victor Hugo thought the greatest actress of her time, for emotional parts, used to call him her "bon chien" and her "gros chien." In the hour of death she did not lay aside this term of endearment, which any one else would have resented. He was doggish in many respects, but of the generous, impulsive, Newfoundland type.—"The Elder Dumas." by Emily Crawford in Century.

No More Book Proposals.

Search reveals the amazing fact that the proposal—in literature at least—is becoming obsolete. Stories there are of a plenty, but in the English publications they mostly relate to mysterious disappearance of diamonds or are tales of conspiracy or intrigue, and in the American product the proposal is all done behind the scenes—the reader is introduced to the engaged couple or to the married pair. The sentimental age is passing evidently, and we contemptuously hurry over the romantic episode to reach those dramatic crises in life which seem to occupy the attention of both writers and readers.—Chicago News.

DIED.

GRAY—Near Independence, Sept 10, 1896, L. C. Gray, a native of Norway, aged 78 years.

Mrs. Shepherd has returned to Keeler.

Last Saturday night Rhine's made a display of their Fall goods.

Tom Hughes came down from Bishop yesterday, returning to-day.

The State Fair is in full blast at Sacramento and thousands of visitors flock the streets.

Miss Etta Naylor has returned from Dayton, where she has been acting as station agent.

We are indebted to Mr. Baxter for a fine specimen of trout caught on his late fishing expedition.

Weather has a hazy, earthquaky outlook, suggestive of cosmic dust and the approach of Fall.

J. C. Roeper is manufacturing a fine line of sausages at the Independence market. Try them.

Independence Pintes beat Independence white boys in a game of baseball last Sunday. Score 17 to 16.

Last Wednesday, Admission Day, was celebrated in grand style at Stockton by the Native Sons of the State.

The Hirsch mill is undergoing repairs. One of the wheels is out of gear and the mill has suspended work for a week.

Mrs. W. M. Richards and her little son are in town after a visit to her people in Nevada City. The lady intends to reside permanently in Independence.

Trenmor Coffin and the gentleman who has been investigating the Eastside properties, in the interest of Holland capitalists, left for Carson Thursday morning.

Grand Master Warboys of the Odd Fellows will make an official visit to Inyo Lodge, No. 301, I. O. O. F., on next Tuesday, September 15th. Elaborate preparations are being made by the Lodge to entertain the visitor.

H. L. Bixby and A. L. Lovett of Santa Ana arrived at Independence yesterday and remained in town a couple of days. The young men have been making a camping trip through the mountains and have been out about six weeks.

The Republican County Convention was held in Bakersfield last week, Hon. A. R. Conklin was re-nominated by a large plurality for Superior Judge. Great excitement prevailed in the Convention over the success of Judge Conklin and after his speech he was overwhelmed with congratulations.

It is a remarkable fact that since the dawn of civilization there was been a steady flow of gold and silver, especially the latter, to India and China, and none of it has ever come beck. In the absence of banks and places of security the inhabitants hoard their gains and earnings and the soil of India and the Celestial empire is thus a veritable gold and silver mine.

The Los Angeles Mining and Metallurgical Journal (which long name spoils its former more distinctive and sensible one of Bullion) locates the Mammoth mine and mill in Kern county, at some point about 200 miles south of where it is—in Mono county. The same journal, speaking of the Hocumae placer claims, "on top of the great divide on old Baldy," in San Bernardino county, "8000 feet above sea level and about 2000 feet below the summit" as being "said by geologists to be the old bed of Owens river." It is a safe bet that no geologist ever attempted to justify such a theory and couldn't if he did. There are too many lofty elevations of primary rocks between.

Death of a Pioneer.

In his little home nestled at the foot of the Sierras one of our pioneers passed away last Thursday. The deceased, L. C. Gray, was a native of Norway, aged 78 years. He came to the West in the early '40's and later established a large general merchandise business in Arizona. Under the name of Hitchcock & Gray the firm did an extensive business and had large mining interests throughout the West. In '74 he came to Inyo County as Superintendent of the Kearsarge mine, in which he was a heavy stockholder. The mine paid well in streaks but at length its best ore seemed to give out and little or nothing has been in sight for many years. It is estimated that half a million has been sunk on the mine. Mr. Gray's last years have not been spent in the opulence of his earlier ones, but he seems to have been strangely content in his mountain home. He was a man of wide learning and had traveled extensively. Mr. Hollé and Mr. Schroeder spent the evening of Wednesday with him, when he appeared in good spirits. His body was found in the field near his house on Thursday, and from all appearances Death had led him gently without a struggle into the great beyond.

Judge Arnot Will Not Come.

I beg to announce through the columns of the INDEPENDENT, that for personal reasons, which can be of no concern to my Inyo friends, I have concluded to adhere to my former determination not to become a candidate for the Judgeship of Inyo county.

It would be impracticable for me to address a line to each friend in the county, much as I should like to do so, and I trust each one will consider this public notice as a personal notice to himself. I wish to thank all my friends for their many acts and expressions of kindness and esteem and to assure them that I and my family greatly and truly appreciate them. Especially do I wish to thank the local newspapers—the Register and the INDEPENDENT—for their warm advocacy of my election to this most important office. I trust I shall always enjoy the respect and esteem of the people of Inyo county. I love and esteem them. To live in such a community would be delightful to me, and I only regret that the conditions seem to require me to forego that pleasure. With esteem and respect, I remain, Very sincerely,

N. D. ARNOT.

Premiums for School Work.

S. W. Austin, County Superintendent of Schools, will give five premiums for school work to be exhibited at the Fair. The following is the list of premiums to be competed for:

1st Premium—Best specimen of Penmanship. Open to pupils of 1st and 2nd years.

2nd Premium—Best specimen of Penmanship. Open to pupils of 3rd and 4th years.

3rd Premium—Best original letter addressed to the County Supt., of not less than 150 words. 5th and 6th years.

4th Premium—Best exhibit of three maps selected from Advanced Geography. Open to 7th and 8th years.

5th Premium—Best original essay on some industry of Inyo county. Over 250 words. Open to pupils of all grades.

Each pupil who received a premium in 1895 is debarred from competing for the same premium this year. Rules governing the exhibit will be in force this year.

The following teachers are appointed a committee to take charge of all school exhibits.

MR. FRANK MOORE,
MRS. M. E. T. STEVENS,
MISS M. M. GREGORY.

Will Pa nt Our Fish.

William C. Harris, one of America's best authorities on game fish, editor of the "American Angler" and "The Fishes of North America," arrived in this city a few days since, accompanied by the world-famous artist, J. L. Petrie. He left New York on July 5th and has visited the principal streams of Idaho, Montana and Washington, studying the habits of the fish that frequent those waters.

Mr. Harris catches the fish and Mr. Petrie paints them by the river bank, while they retain their iridescent coloring. These gentlemen will travel in all over 10,000 miles to catch and paint twenty-five varieties of fish. They have been at work on this series of paintings for over six years and have painted ninety varieties. The present year will probably complete their labor.

The National Museum will purchase the original oils and the reproductions will be issued in "The Fishes of North America."

Their principal object in visiting California is to visit Whitney creek and paint the golden trout of Mount Whitney and the yellow-tail, barracouda and rock fish of Catalina.

They will go to Visalia today (Tuesday) and thence to the Kern river country. From there to Catalina for a month, and thence to Arkansas Pass to catch and paint the tarpon of Texas.

Mr. Harris is well on toward sixty years of age, but is just as enthusiastic an angler as ever and as hale and hearty as many of the younger generation of half his age. He is well known to all American and continental anglers. The results of his labors will be looked forward to with pleasure by his many admirers.—Examiner.

Notice.

There is at present at the Goodale ranch at Fish Springs the following stock: 1 roan horse branded WH, connected, on left hip; 1 bay horse J left hip and 57 right shoulder; 1 white horse E M left hip, badly blotted; 1 buckskin mare circle 6 left hip and shoulder; 2 dark brown mule colts, P M or B M left hip, blotted. Owner will please pay charges and take them away.

VOLNEY GOODALE.

Fish Springs Sept. 7, 1896.

The ladies of Mojave will give a leap year ball on Sept. 18.

From Aberdeen.

If reports may be credited, Aberdeen is the place for corn. Report says that Mr. D. M. Rogers has corn that will average three or four ears to a stalk, and the ear's are as long as a man's arm. We hope to see some of this corn at the coming fair.

Messrs. F. Fuller, D. Tapman and Ira Callaway have returned from Mono county.

Master Rolla Doss of Los Angeles, arrived on last Thursday's train, and has taken up his residence with his sister on her homestead.

Mr. Tapman is feeling independent of railroads and stage coaches. He brought a nice little pack train, consisting of five burros, back with him from Mono. Pianos are at a discount in Aberdeen.

AURORA.

For Judge.

In this issue Walter A. Lamar, Esq., comes before the people as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge of Inyo County. He has been practicing law in Independence for the past five years and has always proved himself an upright, conscientious gentleman in his dealings with his fellow men. He is running independent of any party and his prospects of obtaining the future judgeship are bright.

POLITICAL ANNONCEMENTS

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

His Lip Gone.

M. M. Nicholson, who lives at the corner of Curran and Anderson Sts., Atlanta, Ga., had a cancer for years. It first appeared on his lip and resembled a fever blister, but spread rapidly and soon began to destroy the flesh. His father and uncle had died from Cancer, and he sought the best medical aid in different cities, but it seemed impossible to check the disease. Several operations were performed but the cancer always returned. This continued for years until the partition in his nose and his entire upper lip were eaten away. All treatment having proved futile, he looked upon death as the only relief.

"Some one recommended S.S.S.," he says, "and a few bottles afforded some relief; thus encouraged I continued it, and it was not long before the progress of the disease seemed checked. I persevered in its use, and remarkable as it may seem, I am completely cured, and feel like I have new life. S.S.S. is the most remarkable remedy in the world, and everyone will agree that the cure was a wonderful one."

A Real Blood Remedy.

Cancer is in the blood and it is folly to expect an operation to cure it. S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is a real remedy for every disease of the blood. Books mailed free; address Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

ONE AND TWO.

By WALTER BESANT.

CHAPTER III.

It was at the beginning of the Michaelmas term that the very remarkable occurrences or series of occurrences began which are the cause and origin of this history. Many men have failed, and many men have succeeded. Will Challice is perhaps the only man who has ever done both, and in the same line, and at the same time. The thing came upon him quite suddenly and quite unexpectedly. It was at 2 in the morning. He had spent the evening quietly in the society of three men and two packs of cards. His own rooms, he observed, as he crossed the court, were lit up—he wondered how his 'gyp' could have been so careless. He opened his door and entered his room. Heavens! At the table on which the lamp was burning sat before a pile of books—himself. Challice rubbed his eyes. He was not frightened. There is nothing to alarm a man in the sight of himself, though sometimes a good deal to disgust, but if you saw in a looking glass your own face and figure doing something else you would be astonished—you might even be alarmed. Challice had heard of men seeing rats, circles, triangles even. He thought of his misspent evenings, which were by no means innocent of whisky and potash. He concluded that this must be an appearance, to be referred, like the rats and circles, to strong drink. He thought that it would vanish as he gazed.

He had spent the evening with three men and two packs of cards.

It did not. On the contrary, it became, if anything, clearer. There was a reading lamp on the table which threw a strong circle of light upon the bent head of the reader. Then Will Challice began to tremble, and his knees gave way. The clock ticked on the mantelshelf—else there was no sound. The college was wrapped and lapped in the silence of sleep.

He nerved himself. He stepped forward. "Speak," he cried, and the sound of his own voice terrified him. Who ever heard of a man questioning himself in the dead of the night? "Speak! What does this mean?"

Then the reader lifted his head, placed a bookmark to keep his place and turned slowly in his chair—one of those wooden chairs the seat of which turns round. Yes. It was himself, his own face that met the face of the returned reveler. But there was no terror in that face—a serious resolve rather—a set purpose, grave eyes. He, the reader, leaned back in his chair and crossed his legs.

"Yes," he said, and the voice again startled the other man. "You have a right—a complete right—to an explanation. I have felt for a long time that something would have to be done. I've been going on in a most uncomfortable manner. In spite of my continual remonstrances I could not persuade you to work. You must have recognized that you contained two men, the one indolent, dreamy, always carried away by the pleasures or caprices of the moment, a feather brain; the other ambitious, clear headed and eager for work. Your part would give my part no chance. Very well. We are partly separated. That is all. Partly separated."

The dreamer sat down and stared. "I don't understand," he said.

"No more time will be lost," the worker went on. "I have begun to work. For some time past I have been working at night. I am not going to stand it any longer."

"That's what made me so heavy in the morning then?"

"That was the cause. Now, however, I am going to work in earnest, and all day long."

"I don't care, if it's real, but this is a dream. I don't care so long as I needn't work with you. But, I say, what will the men say? I can't pretend to have a twin all of a sudden."

"N-no. Besides there are other difficulties. We belong to each other, you see. We must share these rooms. Listen, I have quite thought it out. At night we shall be one. At breakfast and in the hall we shall be one. You shall give me the entire use of these rooms all day and all the evening for work. In examinations, of course, you will remain here locked in, while I go to the senate house. You will go to chapel for both."

"N-no! Chapel must belong to you."

"I say you will go to chapel for both." This with resolution.

"Oh!" the other half gave way. "But what am I to do all day?"

"I'm sure I don't know. Do what you like. If you like to stay here, you can. You may play or sing. You may read your French novels. You will not disturb me. But if you bring any of your friends here it will be awkward, because they will perceive that you are double. Now, we will go to bed. It is half past 2."

CHAPTER IV.

In the morning Will awoke with a strange sense of something. This feeling of something is not uncommon with young gentlemen who go to bed about 2. He got up and dressed. A cup of tea made him remember but imperfectly what had happened. "I must have had too much whisky," he murmured. "I saw myself—actually myself—hard at work." Here his eyes fell upon the table. There were the books—books on political economy—with a notebook and every indication of work. More—he knew, he remembered, the contents of these books. He sat down bewildered. Then it seemed as if there was a struggle within him as of two who strove for mastery. "Work!" cried one. "I won't!" said the other. "You shall!" "I won't!" A most ignoble quarrel, yet it pulled him this way and that toward the table or back in the long easy chair. Finally the struggle ended. He fell back. He closed his eyes. When he opened them again, the room was cleared of the breakfast things, and he saw himself sitting at the table hard at work.

"Good gracious!" he cried, springing to his feet. "Is what I remember of last night real—not a dream?"

"Not a dream at all. I will no longer have my career blasted at the outset by your confounded laziness. I think you understand me perfectly. I am clear of you whenever I please. I join you when I please."

"Oh! And have I the same power?"

"You? Certainly not. You are only the half that won't work. You have got no power at all."

"Oh! Well, I shall not stand that."

"You can't help yourself. I am the Intellectual Principle. Mine is the will. Mine is the clear head and the authority."

"What am I then?"

"You? I don't know. You are me—yourself—without the Intellectual Principle. That is what you are. I must define you by negatives. You cannot argue or reason or create. You remember, like an animal, from assistance. You behave nicely because you have been trained. You are—in short, you are the Animal Part."

"Oh!" He was angry. He did not know what to reply. He was humiliated.

"Don't fall into a rage. Go away and amuse yourself. You can do anything you please. Come back, however, in time for hall."

The Animal Part obeyed. He went out, leaving the other part over his books. He spent the morning with other men as industriously disposed as himself. He found a strange lightness of spirits. There was no remonstrating voice within him reproaching him for his laziness, urging him to get up and go to work. Not at all. That voice was silent. He was left quite undisturbed. He talked with these men over tobacco. He played billiards with them. He lay in a chair and looked at a novel. He had luncheon and beer and more tobacco. He went down the river in the college boat. He had an hour or two of whist before hall. Then he returned to his room.

His other half looked up, surprised.

"Already? The day has flown."

"One moment," said Will, "before we go in. You're a serious sort, you know, and I'm one of the—the lighter ornaments of the college, and I sit among them. It would be awkward breaking off all at once. Besides"——

"I understand. Continue to sit with them for awhile and talk as much idiotic stuff as you please. Presently you will find that a change of companions and of conversation has become necessary."

Nobody noticed any change. The two in one sat at table and ate like one. They talked like one. They talked frivolously, telling stories like one. After hall they went back to their chambers.

"You can leave me," said the student. "I shall rest for an hour or so; then I shall go on again."

This very remarkable arrangement went on undisturbed for some time. No one suspected it. No one discovered it. It became quite natural for Challice to go out of his room in the morning and to leave himself at work. It became natural to go to hall at 7 with a mingled recollection of work and amusements. The reproaching voice was silent, the Animal Part was left at peace, and the Intellectual Part went on reading at peace.

One evening, however, going across the court at midnight, Will met the tutor.

"Challice," he said, "is it wise to burn the candle at both ends? Come, you told me this morning that you were working hard. What do you call this? You cannot serve two masters."

"It is quite true," said the reading half on being questioned. "I have foreseen this difficulty for some time. I called on the tutor this morning, and I told him of my intention to work. He laughed aloud. I insisted. Then he pointed out the absurdity of pretending to work while one was idling about all day. This is awkward."

"What do you propose then?"

"I propose that you stay indoors all the morning until 2 o'clock, locked in."

"What? And you look on while you are mugging?"

"Exactly. You may read French novels. You may go to sleep. You must be quiet. Only you be here all the morning. In the afternoon you may do what you please. I may quite trust you to avoid any effort of the brain. Oh! And you will avoid anything stronger than tea before hall. No more beer for lunch. It makes me heavy."

"No more beer? This is tyranny."

"No. It is ambition. In the evening you may go out and play cards. I shall stay here."

They went to bed. It seemed to Will as if the other part of him—the Intellectual Part—ordered him to go to sleep without further thought.

This curious life of separation and of partial union continued, in fact, for the whole of the undergraduate time. Gradually, however, a great change came over the lazy half—the Animal Half. It—he—perceived that the whole of his reasoning powers had become absorbed by the Intellectual Half. He became really incapable of reasoning. He could not follow out a thought. He had no thoughts. This made him seem dull, because even the most indolent person likes to think that he has some powers of argument. This moiety of Challice had none. He became quiet, dull. His old wit deserted him. He was heavy. He drifted gradually out of the society which he had formerly frequented. He perceived that his old friends not only found him dull, but regarded him as a traitor. He had become, they believed, that contemptible person, the man who reads. He was no longer a dweller in the Castle of Indolence. He had gone over to the other side.

Life became very dull indeed to this half. He got in the habit of lying on a sofa, watching the other half, who sat at the table tearing the heart out of the books. He admired the energy of that half; for himself he could do nothing. If he read at all, it was a novel of the lowest kind. He even bought the penny novelette and read that with interest. If he came to a passage which contained a thought or a reflection, he passed it over. He had ceased to think. He no longer even troubled himself about losing the power of thought.

Dr. A. S. Parker of Fallbook, worshipful master of its Masonic lodge, has had the unusual experience of conducting his own father, Dr. P. J. Parker, into the Master Mason degree. This occurred at San Diego, the son being invited to act by Worshipful Master Daney.

CORSICANS KEEP THEIR WORD.

Death Will Not Deter Them From Redeeming a Pledge.

A writer tells the following pathetic story of a sequel to the story of Bonelli, who secured the price put on the head of a well-known brigand by murdering an old pilgrim and palming off the body as that of the brigand. Casanova (the brigand), commonly called Cappa, was already dead when Bonelli was beheaded. The story of his death is picturesque and it breathes the ancient faithfulness and honor of the Corsican character. Cappa was horrified by the conduct of Bonelli, and, none the less, much affected by the news of the murderer's arrest. Cappa felt himself ringed in an all sides and fled to the mountains of Prunelli-di-Slam-Orbo. This district has long been famous for the courage and hardiness of its sons. In Louis XVIII.'s reign a few of its hillmen kept 5,000 soldiers at bay. Here Cappa withdrew and hid himself in a lonely valley, watched over by shepherd friends, and here the hunted outlaw fell sick. The mountaineers tended him as well as they were able. An old priest also ministered to his comfort, and, while succoring the needy body, tried as well to play the "soul friend" to the bandit. He influenced Cappa sufficiently to make him promise never again to use gun or knife in killing a fellow man.

Cappa was still ill when the annual festa of a distant village came round. The shepherds had no fears for their guest. They did not know that spies were set to watch him. The men of the valley were seen leaving the place and information was sent to the nearest gendarmie. The sick man had with him only a few children, some of whom kept a lookout.

The police, who were not in strong force, ventured with grave misgivings into the dangerous, scarcely known region. On perceiving them the youngsters gave the alarm and the weak and ailing bandit seized his gun, making down a narrow path for a wall, beyond which was the Magnis—the outlaws' asylum, "the heather" of the Scottish royalists, otherwise dear life, safety! When he had all but gained the wall he saw a single gendarme close to him.

Cappa was a dead shot. In an instant he had covered his enemy. But he remembered his solemn promise to the old priest. He dropped his weapon and let the gendarme go free. The police are under orders to shoot down bandits as a keeper shoots down vermin. This fellow, of course, fired. Cappa was hard hit, but he dragged himself across the fence and into the thick covert—far he could not go. On his knees, clasping his gun with one arm and with the other clasping a tree hole, his pursuers found him some hours afterward, stark and cold, quite dead.—Westminster Gazette.

Remarkable Water Force.

The effect of the hydraulic motor, which is now being used for the purpose of removing masses of earth, well nigh passes belief. A stream of water issuing from a pipe six inches in diameter, with a fall behind it of 375 feet, will carry away a solid rock weighing a ton or more to a distance of 50 or 100 feet.

The velocity of the stream is terrific and the column of water projected is so solid that if a crowbar or other heavy object be thrust against it the impinging object will be hurled a considerable distance. By this stream of water a man would be instantly killed if he came in contact with it, even at a distance of 200 feet.

At 200 feet from the nozzle a six-inch stream with 375 feet fall, projected momentarily against the trunk of a tree, will in a second denude it of the heaviest bark as cleanly as if it had been cut with an axe.

The "Tree of Life."

The Guaraunos are to be found all over the delta of the Orinoco. They eat little, and wear less. Many authorities claim that they subsist on the moriche palm-tree alone. Whether this be true or not, the tree in question is without doubt an indispensable factor in the problem of life. Not only does it furnish a safe elevation for a home, but gives a nutritious sago, or meat, from which bread is made, a tree fifteen years old yielding six hundred pounds of this meal. In addition, the juice furnishes a kind of wine, and out of the fiber is made cord, rope, hammocks, and a rude species of cloth. This tree, owing to the many and various purposes it serves, was called by the early missionaries the "tree of life."—Century.

Deepening the Hudson.

The deepening of the Hudson river to twelve feet as far as the state dam, seven miles above Albany, will probably be completed within the next two years. The improvements being carried out by the national government call for a channel 12 feet deep and 400 feet wide to Broadway, in Troy, and a channel of the same depth, but only 300 feet wide to the state dam, at the head of navigation. The contracts for this work, let in 1893, cover the removal of 4,620,000 cubic yards of earth and 100,000 tons of earth and the building of eight miles of dikes. The estimated cost is $2,500,000.

A Mystery of Vision.

The ancient naturalists, anatomists and opticians had a great deal of trouble in explaining why it was that only a single image resulted from double vision. In fact, it was not until the stereoscope was invented that the phenomenon was generally understood. Even Spurzheim attempted to explain it by declaring that only one eye was active at a time.

The Size of the Moon.

The moon is a comparatively small world; yet, although three of Jupiter's and one of Saturn's moons are much larger, it is, in proportion to its primary, the largest satellite of the solar system. Its diameter is twenty-one hundred and sixty miles, which means that it would take forty-nine moons to make a globe the size of the earth.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Sarcasm.

"I want to pay this bill," he said to the hotel clerk. "But I think you have made a slight error here in my favor. I've been reading over the extras, and I cannot find that you have charged me anything for telling me you thought it might rain."—Emporium Echo.

A Famous Book Is "Ossian."

In his book on "The Study of Celtic Literature," Arnold showed that one of the qualities which the English people admire most in some of their great poets is the very quality which above all others is the distinguishing characteristic of the Celtic bards, and that Ossian in particular is saturated and pervaded with the quintessence of this trait. To denote the characteristic trait of Celtic poetry Arnold used the word Titanism. No one has defined Titanism, but it has been caricatured in the saying, "The Celtic mind seems always sailing nowhere under full sail."

Those who wished to know the full meaning of the word were recommended to discover it by devout study of Byron and Keats. "And where did they get it?" asks Arnold. "The Celts," he answers, "are the prime authors of this vein of piercing regret and passion, of this Titanism in poetry. A famous book, Macpherson's 'Ossian,' carried in the last century this vein like a flood of lava through Europe. * * * Make the part of what is forged, modern, tawdry, spurious, in the book as large as you like, there will still be left a residue of the very soul of the Celtic genius in it, and which has the proud distinction of having brought this soul of the Celtic genius into contact with the genius of the nations of modern Europe and enriched all our poetry by it. Woody Morven and echoing Lora and Selma with its silent halls, we all owe them a debt of gratitude, and when we are unjust enough to forget it, may the muse forget us."—Macmillan's Magazine.

Kant's Windlasses.

Kant, the German metaphysician, was a singular being. The English writer Thomas De Quincey made close observation of Kant's personal peculiarities, and frequently dwelt upon one of them with intense amusement.

Kant, among other studies in the art of taking care of himself, avoided ordinary garters. He permitted no ligature to be placed on any part of his body, fearing to hinder in the slightest degree the circulation of the blood.

He found it necessary at the same time to keep up his stockings. Accordingly he had loops attached to them, and outside each hip he wore a contrivance which may be called a box windlass. These affairs somewhat resembled an angler's reel, with a spring which secured the line at any given point.

Behold Kant then expounding his philosophy to a select circle of disciples. Like the famous counsel who could not state his arguments without twisting a bit of twine, Kant worked the windlasses as he talked.

The idea of this grotesque fancy so tickled De Quincey that he often lingered on the odd sight it must have been to observe the master "paying out the cable" or hauling in "the slack" by aid of this curious machinery!

Russian Methods.

Georg Brandes, the Danish critic, relates an amusing incident of his recent travels through Russia in his "Indtryk Fra Polen" ("Impressions In Poland"), published at Copenhagen. Passing the German frontier, he relates, the first thing which attracted the attention of the Muscovite custom house officer was two numbers of the Paris Nouvelle Revue. "What is this?" asked the official in German. "A French monthly." "What are its contents?" "It's impossible to give them in a minute." "Very well, then, it will go to the censor general at Warsaw." "Is this review prohibited?" "Prohibited is everything that I do not understand," replied the Russian, and all Danish books of Herr Brandes, even his Chinese-French dictionary, were consequently confiscated.

THE POWER OF MUSIC.

Strange force, concealed in some forgotten song,
That dost past hopes and dreams of love recall;
And as the notes harmonious rise and fall,
Canst bring to me in light both clear and strong,
The forms of dear ones who have slept years long;
Whom I thought dead, but now they live once more,
And at thy call come smiling as of yore!
O, tell me that the flight of time was wrong;
That all life's sparkling hopes again are bright,
And these dark years between were but a dream!
Lay not thy harp aside, or cruel night,
The child of day's bright hopes, shall o'er me steal,
And this blest moment but a vision seem,
While I again life's bitter woe must feel.
—Boston Journal.

A BRAKEMAN'S STORY

It was so quiet outside that when the long freight train would come to a standstill with an abrupt, awkward jerk we could almost hear the big, drifting flakes as they fell. Not a breath of air was stirring and the big, round moon filtered down through the snowstorm with a white, softened light that revealed near-by objects in a strange, ghostly sort of a way. The soft-coal fire that spluttered fitfully in the old-fashioned cast iron upright stove lacked cheer enough to break the spell of the outside air. Without knowing precisely why, we sat mostly in silence or muttered an occasional monosyllable observation as to how soon we might reach Jersey City. We were four hours behind time and somewhere back of us we knew was the West Shore express, likewise behind time and endeavoring to make up something of its lost run.

Sitting in the little red caboose in the rear of the big freight train, rumbling along through a blind fog of snow with a flying express at our heels gave an uncanny sensation that I, for one, did not relish in the least. The drummer who had boarded the train at Newburg sat morosely on a pile of grips, which afforded him a softer seat than the hard, wooden benches strung along the sides of the car. A couple of shippers anxiously discussed the prospects for getting their stock to market without having them half frozen to death.

At the entrance of Joe, the brakeman, however, the glum little party seemed to thaw at once. He swung down off the roof of the last box car and in through the door in a cheery, wholesome sort of fashion that warmed us at once.

"Joe," said one of the shippers, "be we going to reach Jersey City afore Christmas?"

"Isn't this good enough for you to live in? How'd you like to be out braking to-night?"

"'Taint no snap, that's a fact," the shipper assented.

"No, you bet it ain't," said Joe, decisively. "But this ain't a patching to what it is sometimes."

Something in the manner in which Joe carefully filled his cob pipe, took a bit of stick from the floor, poked it into the fire and lit his pipe slowly and thoughtfully, indicated that a story was coming.

"Strange," said Joe at last, with a ruminant look into the fire and a long, steady pull at his pipe, "somehow to-night reminds me of the day afore Christmas two years ago. That was when we brought Johnny Haines home. Guess you must 'a known Johnny," he added, turning to the shipper.

"Nope. Heard of him. Go on, Joe. What was the story?"

"Not much of a one," Joe replied deprecatingly. "Just a brakeman's yarn, only it's a little out of the common run. The first day I ever saw Johnny Haines I thought he was about the handsomest lad I ever set eyes on. He came up on No. 6 on her first trip. We used to meet often up and down the road and got to know each other pretty well. He was one of these lads with a fresh, pink and white complexion and a jolly laugh that made you warm up to him at once. He was straight and strong, and when he used to stand jauntily on top of the car, the train going forty miles an hour and he not seeming to think it was moving at all, there wasn't a girl along the road that hadn't a smile for him as he went by. The lad was anxious to stick and worked hard, and, as he kept his mouth shut pretty close, it was a long time before we found out anything about who he was. He had little ways about him that made us think once in a while that he hadn't been brought up to work, and his hands at first were as soft and white as a girl's. One of the fellows told us a story of how Johnny belonged to a good family, but got kicked out for some reason or other, but we always thought he made it up, and, in fact, we never did find out his story until that night. I mean the night we took him home."

Joe stopped, pulled vigorously at his pipe for a few minutes, blinked rather suspiciously several times, and finally the rather husky voice went on:

"It seems that the lad's name wasn't Haines at all. He took that to conceal his own. His first name really was Johnny, though, and, as that was what everybody called him, the last didn't seem to make so much difference. When he first came on the road he was a little past 20, and his open, boyish ways made some of the fellows guy him and want to play tricks on him at first. But it didn't take them long to find out that he had plenty of mettle. A gang of us were laying around the Albany roundhouse one day, waiting for a train to be made up, when 'Bill' Lawson began to nag him and see if he couldn't get a fight out of him. It seems they had some trouble down the road, and when 'Bill' had offered to fight Johnny had refused. He tried to keep out of Bill's way, but when 'Bill' said he was afraid, Johnny turned and walked squarely up to him and said quietly: 'You take that back.' I never knew just how it was done, but 'Bill' made some sort of a feint, and the next moment the big, hulking lubber was lying on the ground. 'Bill' didn't seem to know what hit him. But he went at Johnny with such a savage look that a lad without genuine pluck would have turned feather. But when 'Bill' lay sprawling on the ground a second time we found out that Johnny was a scientific boxer. There was an ugly gleam in 'Bill's' eye when he got up, and as he got close up to Johnny all of a sudden he flourished a big jackknife he always carried. How he got it out of his pocket I never could tell. He made a lunge, but Johnny dodged cleverly and the knife just grazed his face. He was on 'Bill' quicker than it takes to tell it, choking the life out of him. We started to separate them, but when we found that Johnny had 'Bill' so that he could not do any damage with the knife we let them fight it out. 'Bill' finally held up his hand for mercy and then Johnny let him up. After we got them cooled off Johnny made 'Bill' shake hands, and, though he didn't show it then, I think afterward 'Bill' came to think as much of him as the rest of us.

"Up the road not very far from Albany there is a pretty little farm that runs down to the river, and right at the corner of it was a water tank. It happened that on this farm there was a dark eyed little girl who was the idol of all the boys along the road. She wouldn't flirt with us, but she used often to come down to the water tank and get little packages which the engineer, who was a friend of the family, used to bring down from Albany. She was plump and peachy, with dark eyebrows and long lashes, and under them the prettiest pair of eyes I ever saw. There wasn't one of us who wouldn't have married her quick if she'd had us. But she was sort o' reserved and shy and none of us had nerve enough to make love to her. All except Johnny. All the girls smiled on Johnny and he smiled on them. He didn't have to see the lass twice before he was head over heels in love with her, and it wasn't long before he made he[illegible] about it. To woo was to [illegible] with Johnny, and regular as his t[illegible] passed the farm Jenny—that was the little dame's name—was always there to meet him. We used to chaff Johnny a good deal over the matter, but we couldn't get much out of him. Somehow, through the engineer or somebody, though, we found out that Johnny was going to marry the girl if he could get his father to consent. He couldn't very well marry on the salary he was getting as a raw brakeman.

"Things ran along through the summer and into the fall, and we noticed that Johnny had got very quiet and reserved like, and was evidently brooding over something. At last we found out that Johnny had been promised a raise, and that along about the holidays he was to be made a passenger brakeman, and then he was doing to get married. There wasn't one of us that wasn't glad of it, or who envied him his good luck. The fall stretched way into the winter, I remember, and my, wasn't it beautiful weather! You'd stand up on top of a car, and as the train wound along the river shore mile after mile, just drinking in the air and view. Braking is a hard life, with lots of danger and pretty slim pay. But those days we'd forget all about the hardships and everything else. Johnny was on the same train with me and happy as a lark, thinking how he would marry and go up to Albany to live. I used to notice, though, that every once in a while his brow would cloud up, as if he was thinking of something that hurt him.

"Such weather couldn't last, though, and when the end came, it came with a squall. The thermometer dropped forty degrees, and a cold, driving rain that had set in in the afternoon turned toward night into a drifting, blinding snow. We had a big train that night, and with the snow and the sleet and the cold it gave us no end of trouble. She parted three or four times going not more than twenty miles, and it was cold, dangerous work slipping along the top setting brakes or getting down to make couplings. The wind howled and whistled and the snow cut your face like going through a hedge. It was dark and the lanterns didn't show plain through the snow, and everything seemed to go wrong. Several times we thought we were stalled in the drifts, but we'd uncouple and send the engine and two or three cars through the drift, and then back up and take the rest of the train through. We wanted to get through to Albany, for the next day was a lay off, and two days after that came Christmas.

"Johnny and I fought like beavers against the cold, and, I tell you, it was ticklish work. I felt more anxious about Johnny than I did about myself, for I was old at the business and he was new, and I know how easy it was for a sudden jerk to send a man flying down between the wheels. But Johnny wouldn't listen. He said he wasn't afraid, and just then the whistle sounded 'down brakes.' We were sitting in the caboose, shivering around a dirty little fire. I had frozen three of my fingers, and I thought my ears were frosted, too. You see the storm came so sudden we didn't have time to get on any mufflers, and the mittens were pretty thin.

"Well, we climbed out, and Johnny ran on ahead, saying that he was all right and he'd take the front. The cars on top were as slippery as glass, and we had almost to creep along from one car to another to keep from falling off, for she was running at a good pace, and the snow on the tracks made the cars lurch and swing. I looked up and through the snow and the dark I recognized the landmark, and knew we were nearing the water tank, where Johnny's girl lived. Just at that moment the train gave a frightful jerk and I saw the engine go rearing in air, and about a hundred feet ahead I saw a lantern swing wildly in the air and go down. I went flat on the car and hung there for dear life. We stopped in ten or twenty yards and I swung off the car like mad. 'Great God,' I thought, 'if that was Johnny!'

"Something made me feel that he had gone under the wheels, and when I crawled ahead a few cars there I found him, lying all white and still. He was too much stunned to say a word. We picked him up and started to carry him to the house—where Jenny lived. I saw that the wheels had gone over both legs—over one near the thigh and the other below the knee. My, but he was a game lad, for all the torture of carrying him up the hill couldn't wring a word from him. We knocked at the door and said one of the boys had got hurt—that the engine had jumped the track. A white little face came to the door and looked at us a moment, and then as soon as she saw me and my face Jenny shrieked out, 'It's Johnny!' But she didn't faint or cry, nor say another word. We just carried him in and put him on the bed and she took charge of him. One of the boys rode over to get a doctor, but when he came he saw at once that it was no use. It was only a question of how long Johnny could survive the shock. He lay there very quietly, and finally when the doctor's examination was finished, he said: "Is there any show, old man?"

"I couldn't reply, but he knew as I turned my head away what the answer was. Johnny was quiet for a moment, and then pulling Jenny's hand with his own weakly, he said in a husky voice: 'Little girl, I want to go home.' And that he insisted on all the rest of the night. We didn't think that he'd be alive by morning. But he was, and we decided to put him on board the morning express. The wrecking train had thrown the engine out of the road and cleared the track, and when the express came down we [illegible]gged her and took Johnny aboard. [illegible]ll Jenny would tell us was that his father lived in New York. But she gave the conductor an address for a wire.

"We didn't think that he would last the journey, and about half way down he suddenly clutched Jenny's hand hard and then lay back still. The little girl threw herself upon him sobbing as if her heart would break, but it didn't do any good. Poor Johnny was gone."

Joe paused a moment and looked into the fire.

"Well," he said, "to cut it short, when we got into Jersey City Johnny's father was there. It didn't take more than a glance at his clothes and his portly bearing to tell me that he was a rich man. He sprang into the car and would have pushed me out of the road. I knew who he was, and I held on to him, and I said: 'Wait a minute. Johnny was pretty badly hurt.' He grabbed me like a vise, and said, in a set voice, 'Can he live?' I shook my head, and he gasped, 'Is he——'

"I led him over to where the boy lay, but he didn't want to see him. He looked very hard at the little girl who sat there sobbing, and said, slowly, 'Is this Jenny?' And then he took her very quietly in his arms and kissed her.

"I went to the funeral the next day. That was the day before Christmas. The old man's hair had turned white, and his face was as lined and rigid as though he was mounting a scaffold. He was twenty years older than the morning I saw him first. It seems that Johnny had been brought up, like most boys, to have all the money he wanted. He got wild and in with a fast gang, and, to try to curb him, his father, who was a wealthy banker, got him a place in a store as cashier. Johnny's allowance wasn't enough, and he made it up out of the cash drawer. When it was discovered his father made up the amount, and then sent Johnny adrift. He never spoke to him afterward, and when Johnny, after a year's good service on the road, appealed to him for money enough to get married on the old man returned the letter. I found it in Johnny's coat pocket the morning we took him home."

The train whistled for a station, and "Joe," grabbing his lantern, escaped into the night and the falling snow.—New York Herald.

Memorial to John Hancock.

For 103 years the tomb of John Hancock in the Old Granary burying ground has been marked only by the name "Hancock." The bronze marker of the Sons of the American Revolution was placed in front of the tomb several years ago, and has since remained there. In 1894 the General Court appropriated a sum of money for the erection of a suitable memorial to mark the spot. This has been completed, and workmen are now engaged in placing it in its position, just under the shadow of the Park street church. The monument is 16 feet high, the base is of Milford granite 5 feet by 6 feet, and 20 inches thick. The shaft is 12 feet 6 inches long, by 3 feet 6 inches wide, and 1 foot 6 inches thick. The portrait on the shaft is after Copley, and is surrounded by a wreath. The coat of arms of John Hancock, consisting of a shield, on which are three cocks on a hand, bearing the crest of a winged griffin, with the inscription "Obsta principus," will be displayed on the top of the stone. Under the portrait is this inscription: "This memorial erected A. D. MDCCCXCV, by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to mark the grave of John Hancock."—Boston Transcript

The Horse Nettle.

This pest of many a good meadow farm is commonly found from Connecticut south to Florida and west to Texas. It is very abundant in portions of the prairie States, especially Illinois and Missouri, occurring not only in fields and along roadsides, but in the streets of cities and on vacant lots and too often in cultivated fields, where it does great injury to crops. Its common name, horse nettle, botanical Solanum Carolinense, does not indicate that this weed is closely related to the cultivated potato, but the botanical name of the genus shows close relationship. An examination of the flowers shows they much resemble those of the potato, being bluish or whitish in color. The berry, commonly called the seed, also resembles that formed on the potato. The leaves have large prickles on the midrib and some of the larger lateral ribs. They are also slightly hairy. The stem is beset with numerous stout prickles. Many of the related plants of this genus are annuals, but horse nettle is a deep-rooted perennial, its roots often extending three feet or more into the soil. This fact makes it a very tenacious weed, very difficult to exterminate. For this reason the weed grows in dense patches, which are carefully avoided by stock in pastures. I would advise plowing the land at this season, allowing none of the leaves to appear. The plants should be kept down the succeeding year. Plow the ground again next summer. Sow thickly with rye and keep watch of the nettle, allowing none to grow. Careful work for two seasons should remove it.—Farm and Home.

A TROUBLESOME WEED.

Growing Early Plants.

An economical mode of growing early tomatoes, melons, etc., where but a few are desired, to produce crops for home use, is to use egg shells. Break the shells near the small ends, fill with rich dirt and plant a few seeds of the kind desired. The shells may be set in a shallow pan or box of bran and placed in the sunlight on warm days, care being taken not to expose them to cold at night. When transplanting simply set the shell with the plant in the ground. The roots of the plant will soon break through the shell.

For Hanging Milk in Wells.

Where ice is not at hand, the custom of hanging milk cans in the well, for coolness, is often practiced. The illustration shows a device for holding four cans securely within the well, with a chance to draw up water between the cans, the curved iron rods affording this chance. If the well is not large enough for a square frame, a stout hoop can be used, thus economizing space. It is surprising how nicely milk and many other articles can thus be kept in a deep well, even in extraordinarily hot weather. It is equally surprising how many families fail to use this simple device, which is so easily made and so very convenient.

Fall Fresh Cows.

The annual yield of milk is easily 10 per cent greater from cows fresh in the fall than from those which calve with the coming grass. If well fed and comfortably housed they yield a good quantity of milk all winter, and as the flow begins to cease materially there comes the favorable change to grass, and the yield is increased and held for some time.

Salt with Phosphate.

It is always a good plan to put some salt with phosphate drilled in with the seed grain. It keeps the mineral in soluble condition for the roots of the young grain to take hold of. It also increases the tendency to fermentation of vegetable or animal manures when used, as it must be, in small quantities. Large dressings of salt make the soil barren for one or two years until the rains have washed out the surplus above what is needed.

Cost of Growing Corn.

I send you the result of keeping an account of the cost of producing a field of corn, containing fourteen acres. I kept an account of time in breaking, pulverizing, planting, cultivating, harvesting, etc., and charged for the same such costs as the labor could be hired for in this locality and board themselves. I could give an itemized account, but will not take the space. The land, fourteen acres, was valued at $40 per acre, and a charge of 8 per cent. interest was made on the investment. Cost of corn in crib per bushel was 19 cents of 620 bushels to the field. The fodder was estimated at twenty-one tons, or about one and one-half tons per acre, and cost in the mow $3.41 per ton. The corn was husked by a "corn husker." This is the cost should I have hired everything done. The fodder cost in cash, not including any of my own labor or labor swapped for or boarding hands, etc., $1.93 per ton. The total cost of corn in crib and fodder in mow, including the 8 per cent. interest, was $192.20. The value of the corn at 25 cents per bushel, and the fodder at $4 per ton was $239, leaving a profit on the fourteen acres of $46.80, saying nothing about loss of soil fertility, or barnyard manure applied to the field. The fodder to be worth as much as the corn would have to be worth $7.38 per ton. This would increase the profit somewhat. One thing about the account showed the difference about estimating and knowing. When the corn was being husked it was estimated by good farmers at sixty bushels per acre. But when the corn and land both were measured, it was found to yield only a fraction over forty-four bushels per acre.—C. L. Hawkins, in Indiana Farmer.

What High Breeding Does.

Individual records of noted animals of certain breeds are valuable and important in many ways. While a farmer may not have a cow equaling one with a high record, yet the records of noted cows are indications of what can be accomplished by breeds. The breed is brought to a higher degree of improvement also by the endeavor of enterprising breeders to suppress existing records. It is the desire to compete and excel with individuals that has made the reputations of the breeds.

For Picking Fruit.

A very useful and convenient contrivance for picking peaches, pears, etc., is made in the following manner: Take a strong butter tub of the smallest size, and bore a hole in the center of the bottom. In this hole insert a long pole and nail firmly. Now drive a row of small nails around the top edge, and it is ready for use. This will pick as well as one bought at a store, and costs nothing except the labor of making.

FRUIT PICKER.

Sheep and Short Grass.

Sheep are partial to short grass and will travel over a field of long grass to select the short herbage. White clover is the best of all the foods for sheep and they prefer it to other kinds. When seeding old pastures, or beginning with the new, white clover seed should be used liberally. Sheep will seek the shade during the day, preferring to graze after the sun begins to set, and it is for that reason that they cannot be shut up at night as a protection against dogs.

Odds and Ends.

When the eyebrows and lashes are scant rub them every night with vaseline.

To keep insects out of bird cages suspend from the top of the cage a little bag filled with sulphur.

Always buy small nutmegs in preference to the large ones. They have a much more delicate flavor.

Try a penny or large silver piece for readily removing paint from glass. Simply wet it and rub the paint.

Sift a little flour over suet when it is being chopped and it will prevent the pieces from adhering together.

Don't forget to offer pure cold water to the baby occasionally. The milk is for food, and is not sufficient to quench the thirst of the little one.

To make a cream soup yellow and rich the yolks of eggs are used. The eggs are first beaten thoroughly, and after the cream or milk has been added to the soup they are stirred in just before it is taken from the fire.

A teaspoonful of borax put in the last water in which clothes are rinsed will whiten them surprisingly. Pound the borax so it will dissolve easily. This is especially good to remove the yellow that time gives to white garments that have been laid aside for two or three years.

JOHN R. M'LEAN.

Man Who Came Near Being a Vice Presidential Candidate.

John R. McLean, who was second in the race for the Vice Presidential nomination in Chicago, is plucky in everything he undertakes. He was a base-ball catcher one time, and a more determined one never faced a pitcher. Harry Wright was one of the men he caught for, and that was before the days of masks and stomach pads. After his base-ball enthusiasm was partially knocked out by a foul tip, which took him to a dark room for two months to repair an impaired eye, his next ambition was to print the best newspaper in Ohio.

He inherited the Cincinnati Enquirer from his father, and while there may be some question as to the realization of his efforts he has certainly succeeded in building up an extremely influential and profitable newspaper. Then he fell a victim to the wiles of Cupid and married Miss Mary T. Beale, daughter of General Edward F. Beale, of Washington. The bride was about 25 years old at that time and the groom ten years her senior. He has one of the swellest of the swell houses in Washington, entertains handsomely and has among his guests the biggest men of both the Republican and Democratic parties. Two or three years ago he said he would not accept any political position, but preferred the life of a private citizen. Mr. McLean is very wealthy. Some people estimate he is worth $20,000,000. He is a large holder of real estate in Cincinnati, a heavy owner of street railway stock in Washington and the chief stockholder in the principal gas plant of that city. He is about 45 years of age, handsome, practical and far-seeing in a business sense.

Auroras in the Arctic Regions.

The light was lessening day by day, though the beauty of this ice world did not wane. I think I never felt the strength, the glory, of silence so vividly as on the 26th of the month, standing on a rocky height above the bay. Across the heaven beautiful auroras streamed at frequent intervals in colors of faint orange, green, and blue, scarcely dimming the myriads of brilliant stars that glittered in the deep blue vault, which lightened to turquoise at the horizon. Majestic cliffs swept away across the bay, with its shadowy, greenish-blue bergs, all bathed in one shimmering veil of transparent gold from the light of the moon. In a silence that made the beating of the heart and the pulsation of the blood in the veins seem almost audible, I was suddenly attracted by a peculiar, occasional crackling sound. Presently the sound came very near, and, turning, I perceived a yellowish-white object, about three feet in length, steadily approaching. The little creature gradually circled about, until it paused about fifteen feet away. As I had remained motionless, its curiosity led it to sit down upon its haunches and deliberately stare at me. Twice it seated itself, and then, running behind a boulder, peeped over the edge, until, satisfied or alarmed, it disappeared. It was an Arctic fox.—Century.

She Respected His Dignity.

A Scotch woman was returning by a train from a market town, where she had made a few purchases. Just as the last bell rang a fussy gentleman, elegantly dressed, and with a "mind-thyself" looking face, rushed into the compartment, flung himself hastily into a corner, pulled out an evening paper and proceeded to devour its contents. Hardly had he become seated when the woman timidly addressed him: "I am very sorry, sir, but——"

"I never listen to beggars," fiercely interrupted the gentleman. "If you annoy me further I'll report you."

The woman's eyes flashed, then twinkled. She said no more, and the old gentleman retired with an angry frown behind his paper.

All went merrily as a marriage bell until the train arrived at Cromlade, when the "auld wife," in stepping out, again addressed the churlish individual in the corner:

"I care na, sir, whether ye report me or no, but I want that pound of butter ye've been sittin' on for these last six mile."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A Giant of the Sea.

A monster iceberg stranded near Hampden Beach, N. H., a few days ago, but floated away the following day. It was as big as a church, and it had a marked effect on the temperature in the vicinity.

"A woman's no means yes," said the man of 20, who naturally knows all about women. "That may be the rule," assented the married one, "but it doesn't work both ways. Unfortunately a woman's yes doesn't mean no."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A PREMIUM ON GOLD.

The gold contractionists seem imbued with the notion, at least they let no opportunity pass of imbuing others with the belief, that if we should open our mints to the free coinage of silver gold would advance to such a premium that it would take twice as many dollars to meet our indebtedness that is by its terms payable in gold as now; that in brief, the burden of all gold obligations would be doubled, and that our inability to shoulder these increased burdens would lead to the bankruptcy of all those who have been so unfortunate as to incur indebtedness payable in gold.

But it is upon property that debtors must depend for the payment of their indebtedness; it is with commodities, not gold, that debts are virtually paid. Now we are told that the free coinage of silver would give us a fifty-three cent dollar, that the price of everything measured in this dollar would be proportionately enhanced, in short, that prices would be nearly double what they are now. Our producers, we are further told, would be obliged to sell their produce for fifty-three cent dollars, that consequently, the burden of their debts which they would have to pay in one hundred cent gold dollars would be nearly doubled, that they would have to give two silver dollars where they now give but one. But if prices were so enhanced that debtors could obtain two silver dollars for the same quantity of produce with which they now must part for one, in what way would they be injured, even if they had to part with two silver dollars to obtain one gold dollar? Clearly the burden of their indebtedness would be no greater than now. If the planter got double the price in silver for his cotton and the farmer double the price for his wheat it is obvious that the burden of their indebtedness would in no way be increased even if gold were at a premium of one hundred per cent.; that if they got twice as much for their products they would be no worse off even if they had to give twice as many dollars as now in satisfaction of a gold debt.

But that gold should go to a premium of one hundred per cent. is outside the range of possibilities. It might go to a premium, but to a premium equal to the present difference in the bullion value of the gold and silver dollar, never. Before gold could go to a premium, all our gold must disappear from circulation and disappear from circulation it could not until silver in equal volume was coined to take its place. Gold would not only leave the United States because it would buy more somewhere else than here, because our foreign creditors could buy more cotton with it in India, more wheat in Argentine and Russia with the ounce of gold than here. In short, if prices of those things of which our foreign creditors have need were higher in America than elsewhere, gold would be exported. Otherwise it would not. Consequently, under free coinage our gold could not be exported until silver was coined to take its place, for only an addition to our currency would cause prices to rise so that gold would buy less of our products than of the products of others. A contraction of our currency such as would be inevitable upon the export of gold, would inevitably force down prices, and this would put a stop to gold exports, for lower prices would tempt our foreign creditors to take our products in preference to gold.

So until silver in equal volume to our gold was coined our gold would not be exported and there could be no premium on gold. But suppose silver to an amount of the gold we now have in use as money was available for coinage and coined, and suppose that as a result our gold should disappear. Where would it go? In idleness it could not be forever kept with profit. Gold of itself is useless. Men do not want gold for gold's sake, but for what gold will buy. Only by exchanging it for the products of labor can it be made to serve the needs of man. So our gold would go where it would find use as money, go to where it would be of service in exchanging the surplus products of labor. To silver-using countries it would not go. There it would have no more demand than here. So to the gold standard countries of Europe it must go to be added to their stock of money.

And what effect would this disposition of our gold have on our producers? Evidently the sending of our two or three hundred millions of gold to Europe would make gold more plentiful there as it became more plentiful it would be easier to get, and as it became easier to get and cheaper, prices would rise. And just as gold prices in Europe rose the further would our wheat and cotton sent abroad go in payment of our gold indebtedness. Thus our producers would be benefited, and our debts lightened, not made heavier by the export of our gold.

And while gold was thus falling in Europe, whence we had sent our gold, what would be the effect on the price of silver of our demand for the two or three hundred million dollars' worth necessary to take the place of gold? Clearly, the increased demand would cause it to advance. How much would depend upon the supply of silver available to fill this demand? If a supply at our coinage price sufficient to meet this demand could not be obtained, the parity between gold and silver at our coinage ratio would be restored, our gold would not disappear, and it could not go to a premium. And, meanwhile, what must be the effect on gold prices of the enhanced gold-price of silver? As the gold cost of the ounce of silver rose, the cost of everything bought by gold-using from silver-using countries and paid for with this ounce of silver, would rise in like proportion; for experience teaches that the silver prices asked by silver-using peoples are not dependent on the gold price of silver. They regard silver as stable—as indeed it has proven for many years. They look upon gold as rising and falling in price, and they ask for their products the amount of gold which will bring to them a fixed amount of silver. If gold commands a large premium, and a small amount of gold will buy the ounce of silver, the gold-price they ask for their products is proportionately small. If the premium falls, the gold price they ask rises; for it is a price in silver they insist upon obtaining, not a price in gold.

So, just as the increased demand consequent on the opening of our mints to the free coinage of silver caused the gold price of silver to rise, the cost in gold of everything which our foreign creditors have been in the habit of obtaining from silver-using countries would rise likewise, and naturally they would turn to us for the wheat and cotton they found it cheaper to buy elsewhere when the gold-price of the ounce of silver they could send in payment was smaller. Consequently, the demand for our products would increase, and the increased demand would lead to better prices; and, as prices rose, the burden of our indebtedness would grow less and less.

To recapitulate: it is not a question of how many silver dollars (supposing gold to command a premium) it would take to meet our gold indebtedness, but how many bushels of wheat and corn and pounds of cotton and pork and flour. The one question is: How would the opening of our mints to silver, even should it drive gold to a premium, affect the gold-price, and consequently the debt-paying power of our commodities? And to this there is only one answer. The export of gold would cheapen gold and hence raise gold prices in gold-using countries. The increased demand for silver would advance the price of silver, and as the price of silver advanced, so would the gold-cost of everything bought in silver-using countries advance. Thus would the competition of silver-using peoples that we are now forced to contend with in the European markets be stript of much of its severity. Consequently, the market for our products would be broadened, and the result would be that we would get better prices. So our produce would go farther than before in paying our debts, and thus would our indebtedness be lightened.—The American.

To those who claim that it would be repudiation for the United States to pay its bonds in anything but gold, we commend the following:

The United States has never issued a gold bond. Even those issued by Grover Cleveland were "coin" bonds. In one of his messages he urged Congress to give him authority to place the word "gold" in the bonds, claiming $16,000,000 would be saved to the country by so doing, but Congress refused. As early as 1868 the Supreme Court decided that our obligations were payable in the coin dollar of the United States—"a certain amount in weight and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the Government." The Matthews resolution, which passed Congress January 28, 1878, declared the bonds of the United States to be payable, interest and principal, at the option of the Government, in silver dollars containing 412½ grains each of standard silver. At that time silver dollars had for five years prior been limited as legal tender to the amount of $5, but the Bland-Allison Act restored their full legal tender qualities, and the Matthews resolution was passed so as to avoid any misunderstanding as to the status of the silver dollar in relation to bonds issued thereafter, and it was further recited that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds is not a violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor."

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

With the New Woman on the Platform It Will Be Time to Look Out.

"Dey tells me," said Aunt Dinah pausing in the dining room door and resting her hands on her hips, "dey tells me dat de wimmin is ad a meetin goin on whar dey jiss spechifys same as de men. Is dat so?"

Her mistress laid down the paper in which she was reading the reports of some of the brilliant papers delivered before the Association For the Advancement of Women, and tried to explain matters to her.

"Dey des got up on de platform, did dey?" asked the old woman, "an speak right out in meetin?"

She was assured they did.

"An dey kin talk back?"

She was informed that was their privilege.

"Bless Gord I done live to see dis day!" she replied fervently. "I lay I'll des git Brer Jones at de meetin dis very night. De odder night I felt called on to 'zort sinners, an he say: 'Set down, Sis Dinah, de wimmin must keep silence in de chu'ch. Dey's de weaker vessel.' I was hot, an I 'spon': 'Ef dey wa'nt no wimmin in de chu'ches, Brer Jones, whar would de chuc'h be? Who pays de preacher? Whar you get dat fine coat on yo' back? Ain't it de Daughters of Zion done raise de money? Don't seem lak I hear nobody complainin 'bout wimmin in de chuc'h when it comes to passin roun de hat.'

"You say de time comin when de wimmin gwine run de town? Dey'll clean up things then, sho'. I boun de mayor himself can't sweep like me, let 'lone depupity pleec'men. Des give me a broom an I kin clean mo' street in a hour dan de committee does in a year.

"An wimmin gwine to vote too? Good marster, how the worl do change! Fus' de niggers an den de wimmin. Rec'on folks think some dem wimmin what's been goin to school an colleges is got most much sense as niggers now.

"What's dat you say? Wimmin gwine purify politics an ain't gwine sell their votes? Sho'! What's de good of votin if dey ain't no two-bitsin it? Dis ole nigger's been plannin to lay off work an vote for all it's worth."—New Orleans Picayune.

JACK'S TRUE YARNS.

THE OLD NORTH WOODS GUIDE TELLS TWO GOOD STORIES.

How He Captured a Bear With No Weapon but His Boot Toes—He Was Once Saved From Freezing by a Bottle of Kerosene and Some Matches.

Jack Ormiston is still alive to tell some of the most wonderful tales that are heard in the Adirondacks. Jack has been a guide for some 30 years, ever since he has been big enough to carry a pack basket. He is tall and loose jointed, and his muscles are as hard as hickory knots. His black grizzled beard covers nearly all of his broad face. A pair of small, blinking black eyes do most of his talking for him, but when he is properly aroused he can spin a tale at the camp fire that will startle the screech owls and frighten the wailing loons down on the lake shore.

"Yer've heerd some of the fellers say, hain't yer, how I kotched that old bear last fall?" asked Jack.

We assured him that we never had, and it was strictly true, because he had told us a dozen or more times himself.

"Waal, yer must know where Tully pond is," continued Jack. "Blessed if I don't kotch a bear mighty queer there last fall. Jim Hodge give me a lift on the job, I must say, but that ain't the point. Fact is, the great point wuz the toe end of these boots. I wuz comin down this way along ther trail when I heerd a rustling overhead in a tall pine. Golly, when I looked up, kinder quick sideways, fer I feerd somethin wuz goin ter drop, I see a mighty big bear comin along one of the limbs toward the trunk.

"He started ter come down the trunk back end first, winkin at me. My gun wuz over at camp. I didn't have a thing with me, and Jim wuz half a mile back on the trail. That bear I could see had a mighty fine hide that would bring me somethin like $30, with the bounty. I didn't care ter have him run away, nor did I want ter shake hands with him and pass the time of day with him till Jim come along and put him asleep with a bullet. I didn't make up my mind none too soon. The bear warn't half way down the tree when I rushed at him, not knowin what I would do ter own that hide and capture the bounty. I looked around fer a club, but none come in sight, so when I got ter the foot of the tree there warn't nothin but one thing ter do. I just hauled off and kicked that bear.

"It wuz the first experimentin of the kind I ever heerd of, and by gosh it beat anything I ever see. The bear clawed hard inter the bark and snapped at me. He was easin up a bit with his nails when I swung him another and another. I yelled for Jim and swung again. I yelled six times, kickin between every yell. Then Jim answered, and I kept up yellin and kickin, first with one boot and then the other. The bear didn't drop an inch. Just as he eased up a little bit I swung again. Gosh! It seemed as if Jim wuz takin his time comin along that trail. Just as I swung the forty-ninth kick Jim come in sight. I dropped flat on my back. Jim popped one inter the bear, and it flopped over on ter me. Jim wuz the most surprised man yer ever see. It wuz two hours before I could prove ter him that I wuz tellin the truth about that bear."

Then Jack piled another log on the fire and started in on a new tale.

"This spring I come near bein done fer," he said. "Kerosene kept me in pickle long enough ter get near a fire, and then I wuz all right again."

We wanted to know if kerosene oil wasn't a new beverage for him.

"No, I didn't drink none," he continued. "I started ter cross Brandy brook on a log. I wanted ter cut off a three mile walk around by the trail. The water wuz high, and there wuz a strong current running out inter the lake. This log wuz about a foot and a half through. I rolled it off with the stream. I tucked my breeches in my boots and straddled the log. I hadn't kicked a dozen strokes before I got out inter the swift water, and then I could see I wuz in fer it. I kicked ter back up again ter the shore, but it wuz no use, so I let it go. It came on dark, and my feet began ter freeze. My old boots had been well greased, but the water dripped in at the tops and soaked my stockin's. I tried kickin harder ter keep my blood stirred up. I drifted over toward Bear mountain, and knew that if the wind kept up I would land somewhere before midnight. Just as I wuz gettin almighty froze I thought of a bottle of kerosene I had to oil my gun. Yer can bet I wuz wishin it wuz somethin more cheerin than kerosene oil. A little alkehal and sugar at that time would er slipped down inter them boots from the inside and melted them frozen toes, but there warn't nuthin but kerosene. I poured it half and half inter each boot, and I know it helped ter make me easy fer a time. But by and by it seemed ter me the oil must be freezin too. It wuz lucky I had my old matchbox along in my vest pocket, high and dry, fer then the idea struck me that if I lit a match and sent it down inter the oil it would warm things up some. There warn't much else ter do er think erbout. I wuz makin fer Bear Mountain island slow, but steady. If I didn't get there till midnight, my feet would both be froze off, so I made up my mind ter try the matches. Lucky fer me my boots had wide tops so I could send the lit match right down ter the bottom where it 'ud do the most good. Well, sir, the first match in the right boot did the trick fine. It took fire and thawed things out quicker'n I thought. Blisters raised all over, and when it all got scalded all comfortable I wriggled around and put out the fire. Then I tried it on the left foot, and it worked just as well. There wuz enough matches left to start a fire on the island when I drifted in there toward 12 o'clock."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $5 00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned at Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time-Table above Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno. aug3-tf

Lowell A. Eugley was down from Big Pine Thursday.

Pat Clinton came up from Cerro Gordo on Sunday last.

Charles Parsons of Bishop was in town on Wednesday last.

R. P. Hession, Jr., was down from Big Pine early in the week.

Local weather prophets predict an early and severe winter.

J. J. Gann left on Wednesday on a visit to his mine, near Medock.

Our farmers have commenced putting up their second crop of alfalfa.

E. Robinson has brought his cattle down from the Monache country.

The Holiness Band pulled up stakes on Monday last and left for the lower country.

Some men look well in plug hats, while others look like—well, the dogs bark at them, anyhow.

In the game of baseball last Sunday between the white boys and the Piutes of Independence, the latter won with a score of 31 to 7.

Bishop Montgomery and Father Bannon held Catholic services in the Pavilion on Sunday last. Next Sunday, Sept. 20, they will hold services at Bishop.

Here's a vile campaign lie: "It is reported on the streets that McKinley's wife will sue for a divorce, because he has been too intimate with Hanna."

Only three more weeks before the commencement of the Fair. Our farmers, merchants, miners and stockraisers should commence preparing their exhibits.

Reports from Kern river confirm the news that Editor Chalfant is not only a sprinter, but as a sapling climber is at the top of the heap—when bruin is around.

Constable A. P. Smith came down from Big Pine Monday, having in charge Lee Duck, a Chinaman, who is held to appear before the Superior Court on a charge of selling liquor to Indians.

Miss Etta Naylor, who lately returned from Dayton where she had been acting as agent for the C. & C. R. R., during Mr. Coffin's vacation, is now at Alvord acting as agent during the absence of Mrs. Hale, who has gone East on a visit.

Miss Mildred Gregory graduated from the short-hand department of the Stockton Business College last week. She has been employed to teach again near Independence where she taught last year. —Bodie Miner.

Who says money is scarce at Independence? Last Friday night nearly $2600 was wagered on the result of the coming presidential election in this State and the United States. Bryan money was home production but the McKinley money came from abroad.

Bishop Montgomery, of Los Angeles, delivered a lecture at the Pavilion last Sunday evening. It was a literary treat for those who were fortunate enough to be present, and was listened to with rapt attention from beginning to close. The Bishop is a logical, liberal and entertaining speaker.

U. S. District Attorney Jones has begun suit against John Chiatovich and R. D. McAfee for $10,000 each. It appears that these gentlemen were sureties on the official bond of E. B. Zabriskie, late Melter and Refiner of the Carson Mint, and suit is brought to recover money stolen by Jones and Heney, who were Zabriskie's assistants and for whose peculations his bondsmen are held responsible.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

A Los Angeles paper states that Thomas Taylor of Salt Lake is now at Los Angeles in behalf of the proposed Salt Lake and Los Angeles Railroad. He says that if the people of the latter city will guarantee rights of way, terminal facilities and a subscription of $50,000 the road will be built within eighteen months. Its construction would turn the trade interests, mining, etc., of the entire Southeastern part of Inyo county.

Big Pine Notes.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—In order to keep you and your readers posted in regard to the growth of the silver sentiment in this vicinity, I send you a report of the organization of the Free Silver Club, composed of the voters of all political parties.

On Saturday, Sept. 5th, the club was organized with 22 members, the pledge being to vote for no candidates except those solidly pledged to the support of the proposition of free coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1.

Saturday 12th inst., a meeting of the club was held at Williams' Hall, and it was ascertained that the membership had increased to seventy names. This last meeting was also very successful in point of attendance.

Hon. P. W. Forbes, Dist. Atty., addressed the meeting in a concise and logical manner upon the financial question. Able remarks were made by Messrs Birden and Spencer, all of which were enthusiastically received.

It is confidently expected that our club will poll ninety votes on election day, out of a possible 110.

On the 28th inst., the club will listen to an address upon the issues of the day, given by J. White Smith, Esq., of Bishop.

Aside from the free silver movement, the rights of humanity, etc., the citizens of Big Pine are awkening to the fact that there is a growing demand for other long neglected and much needed reforms.

This is shown by the enthusiasm and interest taken in our handsome M. E. Church building, which is rapidly nearing completion; in the organization of a Good Templar's Lodge with 35 charter members, and in the organization of a Young People's Epworth League.

From present indications the writer is firmly of the opinion that before many more years roll along, Big Pine will have become the metropolis of the county.

SILVERBUG.

The 16th

The Mexican citizens of Lone Pine celebrated the 16th of September, the Anniversary of Mexican Independence, as usual. The main feature of the day's entertainment was a ball game between the Lone Pine and Independence teams. The game was hotly contested and lasted for several hours, being finally won by Independence. Lack of space prevents publishing the score. Our reporter was not baseball expert, but he states that it must have been a splendid game as there were in the neighborhood of 80 tallies made. There were a few horse races and in the evening a ball. A large number went down from Independence and nearly everybody remained until the fun was all over. Visitors were treated with the utmost courtesy—indeed. Lone Pine is never wanting in that respect, and everybody enjoyed themselves to the utmost.

I. O. O. F. Banquet

Grand Master Warboys of the California jurisdiction of I. O. O. F., arrived at Independence last Monday evening and his coming was made the occasion of a social function Tuesday evening. A banquet was given at the Pavilion, to which a general invitation had been issued. The tables were beautifully decorated and places laid for 150 guests. During the progress of the supper the Harmony Orchestra discoursed sweet music and at its conclusion there was the usual toasts and responses, with recitations and songs The feature of the evening was Prof Gorman's recitation of Maud Muller. About 11 o'clock the tables were cleared away and dancing was indulged in for a couple of hours. This was the first occasion on which an officer of the Grand Lodge had ever visited Independence and his coming will undoubtedly have a good effect in strengthening the Order here.

The Knapp & Laws Store Closed.

The store of the Knapp & Laws Co., was closed on Thursday last by an attachment from a local creditor, and an assignment of all the property, accounts, etc., of the company, aside from that attached, was made for the benefit of the Nevada creditors. The cause of this difficulty is the general depression and the inability of the Knapp & Laws Company to collect from those owing them rapidly enough to meet the demands upon them. The closing of this establishment caused considerable comment throughout the county and expressions of regret are heard on all sides, as it is well-known that Mr. Knapp's leniency to his patrons is the main cause of his present difficulty.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

Fall in Lead Prices.

Lead is dropping in price to such an extent that the lead-producing mines in Utah and elsewhere seriously contemplate shutting down. With that metal at $2.50 there is little possible margin of profit. The matter is also one of consequence to mines producing high grade siliceous ores, which need lead as a flux in smelting. Never in the history of mining was lead so low as last week. What a difference between now and '64, when the writer remembers receiving $210 a ton for lead ore on the dump.—Scientific Press.]

From Aberdeen

Taboose school opened on Monday, the 15th, with 15 pupils in attendance.

Mr. F. Lovett and Mr. Phil. Rust, of Los Angeles, were in Aberdeen last Monday.

Coyotes are becoming too familiar and friendly. One visited the ranch of Mr. Calvert a few nights since and killed one of his horses.

Messrs. Callaway, Rogers and Montague are prospecting in the Sierra Nevadas.

AURORA.

Will Hold Court.

Judge Virden, of Mono county, is expected to arrive here next Sunday for the purpose of holding a term of Court, commencing Monday the 21st inst.

J. J. Stewart, of Lone Pine, will be a candidate for re-election as Supervisor from the 4th District.

Bishop Items.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Berger left for their old home in Sonora yesterday, traveling by the Bridgeport and Sonora road.

Robert O'Neil, Esq., will leave to-morrow for San Jose where he expects to remain for the winter.

Tom Webb was in town from Long Valley a couple of days during the week.

Jesse Tittendell, a little boy about eight years old, met with an accident last Wednesday. During the noon hour the child fell from the fence surrounding the school grounds and broke his arm above the wrist.

In spite of the press views of the town Bishop seems solid for free silver.

Mrs. I. H. Mulholland was in town a couple of days this week.

While sour milk is a fat producer in hogs it is claimed to have anti-fat capacities when indulged in by humans.

Grand Master J. W. Warboys was received and entertained in royal style by the I. O. O. F. Lodge Wednesday evening.

Miss May Parker of Independence is visiting here.

J. White Smith returned from Silver Peak Tuesday.

S. C. M.

Game and Fish Laws.

Sportsmen will do well to make a note of the following quotations from the Statutes of California, placing certain limitations on their right to kill or to have in possession as follows:

Valley quail, bob white, partridge, robin, wild duck, rail, may be killed, beginning October 15th and closing February 15th of the following year.

Mountain quail and grouse may be killed, beginning August 15th and closing February 15th following.

Doves may be killed, beginning July 1st and closing February 15th, next following.

Sales of any of the above allowed only from November 15th to January 15th next following.

Male deer may be killed, beginning July 15th and closing October 15th.

Female deer, spotted fawn, antelope, elk, mountain sheep, humming birds and all song birds, killing prohibited at all times.

Trout must not be taken except with hook and line, and from April 1st to November 1st of the same year.

Shotguns of larger caliber than 10-gauge are prohibited to be used or in possession in any field or marsh.

Sportsmen should understand that the above laws extend to all parts of the State, but that the privileges granted may be narrowed by action within the limits of such—may be narrowed, but not broadened.

One of the best trotting races of the season took place Monday between Butcher Kate, R. W. Scott's Bishop, J. S. Cain's Black Diamond and H. Boope's Sorrel Bess. They made excellent time each driver doing his best to win the $80 purse. Sorrel Bess won first heat, and Bishop second and third heats. Bishop is a three-year old and promises to make a fast trotter. This was his first match race and Scott may well feel proud of him.—Bodie Miner.

Attention is directed to the card of Thos. A. Keables, of Mono county, who announces himself as a candidate for the Assembly, and who pledges himself to support the cause of silver from start to finish.

R. S. Miner, Esq., has announced himself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge of Mono county, subject to the decision of the Democratic Convention.

Capt. John Carmichael, Inspector of Land Offices, arrived at Independence on Wednesday and will remain until Tuesday morning.

The hardened sinners of Independence failed to respond to the eloquence and pleadings of the Holiness Band.

POLITICAL ANNONCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

I HEREBY ANNOUNCE THAT I WILL BE a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, California, at the election to be held November 3rd, 1896; subject to the will of the people of Inyo County.

WALTER A. LAMAR.

Independence, Sept. 7, 1896.

Independent Silver Candidate for the Assembly.

Believing that the present is a time when principles are and should be paramount, and above all else, I hereby offer myself as a candidate to the people of Alpine, Inyo and Mono counties, irrespective of party, for the office of Assemblyman for the 60th District, at the approaching election in November, pledging myself unequivocally, if elected to forward and support in every way that I may have the opportunity so to do the cause of free silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, the restriction of corporation and trust power, and the upholding of the rights and just benefits due the wage-earner.

Respectfully,
THOS. A. KEABLES.

BITTEN BY A SNAKE.

That Is What the Victim of a Practical Joke Thought.

"A good many years ago," said an ex-congressman to a party of congressmen, "I was in Georgia. A party of us decided to go from Atlanta to Clarksville on horseback. Tim Murphy, an Irishman, was a lieutenant of the Atlanta police force. He wanted to go, too, and we consented. On our way to Clarksville, through the mountainous sections of the state, we killed two large rattlesnakes. Murphy was amazed and frightened. He wanted to know if snakes were plentiful, and we told him that they were. We told him that at Clarksville they had often been found in the rooms of guests at the hotel. Tim hated to turn back and so went on.

"We knew that at Clarkesville a saloon keeper had a stuffed bull snake, and we concocted a plan to make Tim wish he had never left Atlanta. We got to the old fashioned hotel all right. We were put in a big room, with four beds in it. We drank a good deal, and Tim was in excellent spirits. It was a warm night, and most of us undressed. Tim pulled off everything but his shirt. He lay down face foremost across the bed. Then I tied a string around the neck of the snake, put a fishhook at the other end of the line and cautiously hitched the hook to Tim's shirt.

"The next time he turned around he got a glimpse of the snake. 'Holy schmoke!' he yelled! 'Look!' And then he made a dash for the window. As he jumped out the window the fishhook pricked him in the back. He uttered an awful yell, said he had been bitten and went flying through the sandy streets of the town dressed in Kongo style. We followed and tried to catch him. At every step he swore he had been bitten, and that he would die. We overhauled him after the whole town had been aroused. We took him back to the hotel and filled him with whisky, telling him that was the only cure for a snake bite. The next morning he went to Atlanta and took a course under a physician for snake bite. For years after that Tim would brag about killing 20 snakes at one time and of having been bitten by one of them. He did not learn of the trick for five years, and then he threatened to take my life."—Washington Star.

The Aryan Cowboys.

The study of domestic cattle should be of especial interest to us because they have undoubtedly occupied a more important place in our own ancestral history than any other species of animal. The Aryan tribesmen from whom nearly all western civilization folk are descended were cowboys almost to a man. Like the Kaffirs and damaras of South Africa today, all their thoughts were about their herds. This is shown in a curious way by the study of the early development of our language. The Sanskrit word for a king meant originally "a chief herdsman." The word for an assembly, or the meeting place of a congress, was the same as that for a cowyard. A soldier was "one who fights about cows." It would seem as if they regarded nothing else as worth ruling over or talking about or fighting for. Professor Max Muller traces the word "daughter" to the ancient term for a milkmaid. In the good old times they plainly did not take any account of young ladies who were not accomplished performers in the cowpen.

The cow or ox was for long ages the chief standard of value. Everything, from a new coat to a new wife, was priced at so many cows. Many of our words which refer to money bear traces of this, such as "fee" and "pecuniary," which are directly derived from the old English and Latin words for cattle. Doubtless there were currency disputes when other materials began to be used for coinage, and difficulties arose about the adjustment of relative values. "Cow metallism" might well have been an important plank in some of the Aryan political platforms.—North American Review.

An Italian patent, including fees and taxes for one year, costs $100. It is granted for 15 years and must be worked within two.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

FOR PEOPLE THAT ARE SICK or "Just Don't Feel Well," DR. GUNN'S IMPROVED LIVER PILLS are the One Thing to use. Only One for a Dose. Sold by druggists at 25c. a box. Samples Free. Address the Dr. Bosanko Med. Co., Phila. Pa.

ONE AND TWO.

By WALTER BESANT.

Another thing came upon him—not suddenly, but gradually, so that he was not alarmed at it. He began to care no longer about the games of which he had formerly been so fond. Billiards, rackets, cards, all require, you see, a certain amount of reasoning, of quick intelligence and rapid action. This unfortunate young man had no rapidity of intelligence left. He was too stupid to play games. He became too stupid even to row.

He ceased to be a dreamer. All his dreams were gone. He ceased to make music at the piano. He ceased to sing. He could neither play nor sing—these things gave him no pleasure. He ceased, in short, to take interest in anything, cared for nothing and hoped for nothing.

In hall the two in one sat now with the reading set. Their talk was all of books and "subjects" and so forth. The Intellectual Half held his own with the rest—nay, he became a person to be considered. It was remarked, however, that any who met Challice out walking found him dull and stupid beyond belief. This was put down to preoccupation. The man was full of his work. He was meditating, they said. His brain was working all the while. He was making up for lost time.

In the evening the lazy half sat in an easy chair and took tobacco, while the other half worked. At 11 the industrious half disappeared; then the whole went to bed.

They seldom spoke except when Industry had more orders to give. It was no longer advice or suggestion, or a wish, or a prayer. It was an order. Indolence was a servant. "You took more wine than is good for me at dinner today," said Industry. "Restrict yourself to a pint of claret, and that of the lightest, for the future." Or: "You are not taking exercise enough. If you have no longer brain power enough even for the sliding seat, walk—walk fast—go out to the top of the Gogs and back again. I want all my energies." Once Indolence caught a cold. It was a month before the May examinations. The wrath and reproaches of Industry, compelled to give up a whole day to nursing that cold, were very hard to bear. Yet Indolence could not resist. He could not even remonstrate. He was now a mere slave.

When the examinations came, it was necessary to observe precautions of a severe kind. To begin with, Indolence had to get up at 6 and go for an hour's run for the better bracing of the nerves. He had to stay hidden indoors all day, while his ambitious twin sat in the hall flooring papers. He had to give up tobacco in order to keep the other half's head clear. "Courage," said Intellect. "A day or two more, and you shall plunge again into the sensuality of your pipe and your beer. Heavens! When I look at you and think of what I was becoming!"

Industry got a scholarship. Intellect got a university medal. Ambition received the congratulations of the tutor.

"How long," asked the Animal, "is this kind of thing going to continue?"

"How long? Do you suppose," replied the other half, "that I have given up my ambition? Remember what you said two years ago. You were younger then. You would sweep the board. You would row in the university boat. You would play in the eleven. You would be a leader in all, all! You would then take up with something—you knew not what—and you would step to the front. You remember?"

"A dream—a dream. I was younger then."

"No longer a dream. It is a settled purpose. Hear me. I am going to be a statesman. I shall play the highest game of all. I shall go into the house. I shall rise—slowly at first, but steadily."

"And I?"

"You are a log tied to my heel, but you shall be an obedient log. If you were not"——

Indolence shivered and crouched. "Am I then—all my life—to be your servant?"

"Your life? No, my life." The two glared at each other. "Silence, log! Let me work."

"I shall not be silent," cried Indolence, roused to momentary self assertion. "I have no enjoyment left in life. You have taken all—all"——

"You have left what you loved best of all—your sloth. Lie down and take your rest. Why, you do nothing all day. A stalled ox is not more lazy. You can eat and drink and take exercise and sleep. What more for such as you has life to give? You are now an animal. My half has absorbed all the intellectual part of you. Lie down, I say—lie down and let me work."

The Animal could not lie down. He was restless. He walked about the room. He was discontented. He was jealous. The other half he saw plainly was getting the better share of things. That half was admired and envied. By accident as he paced the room he looked in the glass, and he started, for his face had grown heavy. There was a bovine look about the cheeks. The eyes were dull, the mouth full. Then the other half rose and stood beside him. Together they looked at their own faces. "Ha!" cried Ambition, well satisfied at the contrast. "It works already. Mine is the face intended for me. Yours is the face into which this degenerate mold might sink; mine contains the soul, yours the animal. You have got what you wanted, sloth. Your dreams are gone from you. I have got them, though, and I am turning them into action. As time goes on your face will become more bovine, your eyes duller. What will be the end?" His brow darkened. "I don't know. We are like the Siamese twins."

"One of them took to drink," murmured the inferior half. "What if I were to follow his example?"

"You will not. You do not dare!" But his blanched face showed his terror at the very thought.

CHAPTER V.

The first step was achieved. The first class was gained. Challice of Pembroke was second classic. He might have been senior but for the unaccountable laziness of his first year. He was university scholar, medalist, prizeman. He was one of the best speakers at the union. He was known to be ambitious. He was not popular, however, because he was liable to strange fits of dullness. Those who met him wandering about the banks of the river found him apparently unable to understand things. At such times he looked heavy and dull. It was supposed that he was abstracted. Men respected his moods, but these things do not increase friendships. Challice the Animal and Challice the Intellect weighed each other down.

They left Cambridge; they went to London; they took lodgings. "You are now so different from me in appearance," said the Intellect, "that I think we may leave off the necessary precautions. Go about without troubling what I am and what I am doing. Go about and amuse yourself, but be careful."

The victim of sloth obeyed. He went about all day long in heavy, meaningless fashion. He looked at things in shops. He sat in museums and dropped off to sleep. He strolled round squares. At luncheon and dinner time he found out restaurants where he could feed—in reality, the only pleasure left to him was to eat, drink and sleep.

One day he was in Kensington gardens, sitting half asleep in the sun. People walked up and down the walk before him—beautiful women gayly dressed, sprightly women gayly talking—the world of wealth, fashion, extravagance and youth. He was no more than three and twenty himself. He ought to have been fired by the sight of all this beauty and all this happiness. Nobody in the world can look half so happy as a lovely girl finely dressed. But he sat there like a clod, dull and insensate.

Presently a voice which he remembered, "Papa, it is Will Challice!" He looked up heavily. "Why, Will!"—the girl stood before him—"don't you know me?"

It was Nell, the daughter of his tutor, now a comely maiden of one and twenty, who laughed and held out her hand to him. He rose, but not with alacrity. The shadow of a smile crossed his face. He took her hand.

"Challice!" his tutor clapped him on the shoulder. "I haven't seen you since you took your degree. Splendid, my boy!

He rose, but not with alacrity.

But it might have been better. I hear you are reading law. Good! With the house before you? Good again! Let me look at you. Humph!" He grunted a little disappointment. "You don't look quite so—quite so—what? Do you take exercise enough?"

"Plenty of exercise—plenty," replied the young scholar, who looked so curiously dull and heavy.

"Well, let us walk together. You are doing nothing for the moment."

They walked together, Nelly between them.

"Father," she said when they arrived at their lodgings in Albemarle street, "what has come over that poor man? He has gone stupid with his success. I could not get a word out of him. He kept staring at me without speaking."

Was he a lumpish log, or was he a man all nerves and electricity?

In the morning Will Challice partly soived the question, because he called and showed clearly that he was an insensible log and a lumpish log. He sat for an hour gazing at the girl as if he would devour her, but he said nothing.

In the evening Cousin Tom called, bringing Will Challice again, but how changed! Was such a change really due to evening dress? Keen of feature, bright of eye, full of animation. "Why, Will," said Nelly, "what is the matter with you sometimes? When you were here this morning, one could not get a word out of you. Your very face looked heavy."

He changed color. "I have times when I—I—lose myself—thinking—thinking of things, you know."

They passed a delightful evening. But when Will went away the girl became meditative, for although he had talked without stopping on every kind of subject there was no hungry look in his eye, such as she had perceived with natural satisfaction in the morning. Every maiden likes that look of hunger—outward sign and indication of respect to her charms.

They were up in town for a month. Every morning Will called and sat glum, but hungry eyed, gazing on the girl and saying nothing. Every evening he called again and talked scholarship and politics with her father, his face changed, his whole manner different, and without any look of hunger in his eyes.

One day, after a fortnight or so of this, Will the Animal stood up after breakfast and spoke.

"There has got to be a change."

"You are changing, in fact," replied the other, with a sneer.

"I am in love. I am going to marry a girl. Now hold your tongue," for the intellectual half bounded in his chair. "You have left me very little power of speech. Let me try to explain what I want to say." He spoke painfully and slowly. "Let me—try—I have lost, bit by bit, almost everything. I don't want to read—I can't play any more. I don't care about anything much. But this girl I do care about. I have always loved her, and you with your deuced intellect cannot kill that part of me. She loves me too. She loves me for myself, and not on account of you and your success. She is sorry for me. She has given me—I don't know how—the power of thinking a little. When I am married to her, she will give me more. Let us part absolutely. Take all my intellect and go. Nell will marry a stupid man, but he will get something from her—something, I am sure. I feel different already. I said something today which made her laugh. What are you glaring at me for?"

"I am not glaring. I am thinking. Go on."

"This has got to stop. Now find some way of stopping it, or—or"——

"What can you do?"

"I can drink," he said, with awful meaning. "I can ruin you. And I will unless you agree to part."

(To Be Continued.)

MEMORIES OF PATERNITY.

Emotions Which a Young Father Feels When He Trundles the Baby.

It is always a little amusing to see a young father fare forth with a baby—his baby—in his arms for the first time. It is no use for him to try to appear unconscious of his situation, for it is perfectly evident to everybody that it is his first appearance in public in the role of a father.

His awkwardness is manifest, but his pride is also in evidence, and the two form a combination of which no young father need to be ashamed. There are some men and some women who are sentimental enough to have their hearts quite touched by the very sight of a young couple overflowing with tenderness and pride and solicitude over their first born. Those to whom this not uncommon spectacle appeals are apt to be middle-aged or elderly men and women, whose own youth has long been only a memory. But if they have lived honestly and truly it is a pleasant memory, and the sight of a young couple and their first baby gives rise to some of the sweetest memories of their lives.

They recall the time when life was all hopes and all harmonies to them, and the coming of their first little one gave them new hopes and sweeter harmonies. The little one is a man now perhaps, with children of his own, but you can remember just how he looked in his swaddling clothes, and just how you felt when you first appeared in public with him in your arms. You don't talk much about it now, because you don't want to be thought "silly" or "sentimental," but if you are the man or the woman you ought to be you will have taught your children that God can give them no higher proof of his favor than to give them little ones of their own.—Detroit Free Press.

All But the Dollar.

A man who thanks God that he belongs in London and who doesn't believe in the existence of an honest Yankee, and has the grace to say so, lately wrote the following letter to a lady in New York. As to the fact that he is honest, we are left in no doubt, since he admits it himself. The letter is published in the New York Tribune.

London, January, 1896.

Lady—On New Year's day I was in New York, and at an overhead railway station on the Third Avenue and 18th street I found a pocketbook, which I think is your property. As I was going directly aboard the steamer for London, where I belong, thank God, I had not time to hunt you up.

Now here at home my Missus has a longer that comes from your country, he is a Yankee, and they do say he is an honest man (I do not believe myself that there is an honest Yankee), but the Missus says that he is a real gentleman well she is boss she ought to know, well this Yankee comes over here about 8 or 10 times a year with fine stock and he puts up with my Missus and as he pays his score I think we can trust him with the purse their was nothing in it of value ecept a piece of green paper, wich said the United States would pay on demand the sum of One Dollar wich I sold for four Shillings, but that was little enough for all my trouble, and as I am an honest man I do hope the Yankee will go and give you your pocketbook.

An X Ray Story.

The investigators whose names appear in the newspapers in connection with Roentgen ray experiments are a good deal bothered by applications from people who imagine they have bullets or other unpleasant foreign substance in various parts of their anatomy. The story goes that not long ago a certain local scientist received the following letter:

Dear Sir—I have had a bullet in my thorax for seven years. I am too busy to come to Cleveland, but hope you will be able to come down here and locate the bullet, as I am sure the case is worth your while. If you can't come yourself, send your apparatus, and I will get one of the doctors here to use it. Yours truly, ——.

Here is the local man's reply:

Dear Sir—Very sorry I cannot find time to visit you. Nor will I be able to send my apparatus. If you can't come to Cleveland yourself send me your thorax by express, and I will do the best I can with it. Yours truly, ——.

—Cleveland Post.

Anecdotes of Bulow.

Social rank did not count in his estimate of values. He broke up an audience of titled personages assembled to enjoy one of his rehearsals, by causing the bassoon players to perform their parts alone until the listeners all left in disgust. "Now," said he, cheerfully, when the last of his noble hearers had departed, "we'll go to work." He kicked the name-board of a certain piano off the stage because it degraded the artist into an advertisement. In the presence of an enthusiastic audience he once noticed two laurel wreaths on the piano. He picked them up, looked at them, and then kicked them under the instrument. He did this because he resented the idea that musicians should be treated differently from other men. He wished music to be a manly calling. He would not have it degraded into a matter of patronage. "Go, take that laurel wreath to Herr Franz Lachner (his predecessor in Munich), who is on the pension list," he exclaimed to an usher. "I am not superannuated.—Century.

Paper Pillows.

According to Good Housekeeping, the latest health fad is paper pillows. The paper is torn into tiny pieces and put into a pillow sack of light ticking or drilling. The pillows are said to be much better than feather ones, and certainly very cooling in hot weather. On account of the disagreeable odor of printer's ink, newspapers are not nice to use, but brown or white paper, old envelopes and letters are the best. The finer the paper is torn or cut the lighter it makes the pillow.

Miss Summit—Mr. Travers just sent me these lovely violets. He is so generous, and I know he couldn't afford it. The poor, dear boy, I don't see where he gets the money from. Dashaway (savagely)—I know where he got the money from in this case.—Harlemite.

In hot weather it is as much work as any man should do to carry an umbrella and take off his hat to women.

MAKING A MINE.

In Some Instances It Costs Nothing—In Others the Cost Is Millions.

There are no hard and fast rules in regard to making a mine from the time it passes into the prospector's hands until it becomes a dividend payer. Many mines are such, as the miners say, "from the grass roots," and turn out large quantities of ore from the beginning.

J. B. Haggin, the millionaire mine owner, took $3,000,000 from the Custer mine, in Lemhi county, Ida., before it became necessary to use a candle (giant powder). This mine was known as the Mineral mountain. A man came along one day, and after looking at it remarked, "Why, the hanging wall is gone." This was true. Nature had assisted the miner in this case; the mountain side had been eroded, leaving the mineral standing there. Mr. Haggin also spent about $3,000,000 in developing the Anaconda mine before it was on a paying basis.

Mines have been discovered containing fabulous wealth, although a prospector would starve to death in trying to work them. This was true in regard to the Homestake mine, in the Black Hills. The prospectors who made the discovery could do nothing with it, and it passed into the hands of Senator Hearst and other California capitalists. They concluded that, unless it was worked on a large scale, it could not be made profitable. An 80 stamp mill was ordered and shipped in from Cheyenne, at a cost of $135,000, as an experiment. The mine has paid in dividends $37,500 a month for 17 years.

It requires a large amount of money usually to put a mine on a dividend paying basis, and, as a rule, this the prospector cannot do, although prospectors have made fortunes with their properties.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

The leaders of a flock of migrating wild geese become tired sooner than others and are frequently relieved by their fellows.

THAT TERRIBLE SCOURGE.

Malarial disease is invariably supplemented by disturbance of the liver, the bowels, the stomach and the nerves. To the removal of both the cause and its effects, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is fully adequate. It "fills the bill" as no other remedy does, performing its work thoroughly. Its ingredients are pure and wholesome, and it admirably serves to build up a system broken by ill health and shorn of strength. Constipation, liver and kidney complaint and nervousness are conquered by it.

"Did yez say yer health is bad, Mr. Donovan?" "Yis. Ol've bin walkin' in my slape." "Och, beg ra, if oi cu'd only have done that same, Oi wou'dn't be off the force now."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

Cutworms and White Grubs.

The cutworm is commonly confused with the white grub, and is in many cases mistaken for the grub. The adult of the cutworm is a moth, and lays its eggs mostly in grass and other places. The larva or worm feeds upon grass and leaves of other plants—sometimes the roots—until full grown, when it enters the ground to transform, and in a few days or weeks the adult moth emerges. The moths are of various colors, and are quite common during the summer months. They are night flyers, and hide during the day in grass and other places. They measure about one to one and one-half inches across the wings, and are commonly called millers. The white grub, on the other hand, is the larva or worm hatched from eggs laid by the June or May beetles. The eggs are usually laid in grass, where they hatch in about a month, and the little grubs feed upon the rootlets of various plants for the first year. They burow down into the ground from 18 inches to two feet, where they remain over winter. During the second year the grub eats near the surface, and does great damage on account of its size and larger appetite. They spend the winter as before, and the third year they reach maturity. The grub passes its transformation in little cells in the earth, and the mature beetle emerges in the spring. The adult is a dark chestnut brown beetle, the head often black, and the breast sometimes covered with yellowish hairs. The body is about an inch long, and the beetles are rapacious feeders. They appear in May and June, buzzing about certain trees at night. It is not an uncommon thing just at dusk, in May or June, to see thousands of beetles swarming about trees. They feed upon the leaves, and often defoliate large numbers of trees. Summing up, then, the adult of the white grub is the May or June beetle, and that of the cutworm a delicate moth. Grubs usually feed upon roots, and remain below the surface, while cutworms feed upon leaves and other foliage, eating at night and hiding during the day under anything that will conceal them. When these insects are numerous they are difficult to combat over large areas. In gardens, cutworms may be destroyed by strewing bunches of green grass, clover, cabbage leaves, etc., between the rows and sprinkling with paris green in solution—a teaspoonful to a pail of water. If this is done before the crops are planted, or the seeds have come up, many of the young worms may be destroyed before they can do any harm. In a small way tomato, cabbage and other plants can be protected by encircling their stems close to the ground with bands of tin or tarred paper. Rotation of crops may often be advantageous with field crops.—American Agriculturist.

Cost of Marketing Vegetables.

The farmer who begins growing garden vegetables on a large scale quickly finds that it is not the growing that is most difficult and expensive, but the marketing. This is especially true if the farmer is at a distance from a good market, and is obliged to rely on city commission houses and shipment to them by rail. He will usually find that after the commissions have been deducted there is little profit left for himself. In most cases the farmer who wants to go into the business of market gardening will do best to begin on a small scale, providing at first for the customers whom he can make sure of near by, and marketing his product himself. In this way he will get a much better price than the commission man can afford. Dealing directly with the consumers, his goods will bring higher prices, and will be well worth them, too, as they will be much fresher than those the commission merchant can furnish. When this local trade is firmly established the farmer may better judge whether it is advisable to extend his business, knowing that the larger part of his products must be sold on commission, and at prices that pay very narrow profits.

Egg Tainting in Cellars.

Most farmers put the eggs down cellar in summer time, as being the coolest place they can find for them. This is all right if the cellar has been duly cleaned, whitewashed and ventilated, so as to keep its air pure. But there are conditions in which eggs in cellars will spoil quite as quickly as in a warmer room upstairs. The egg shell is porous. If there are odors of decaying vegetables or of tainted meat in the air, they will penetrate the egg. While the germ will not begin to develop a chick at the cellar temperature, the presence of tainted air in contact with the egg will cause it to lose its flavor almost at once, and soon become as bad as it is possible for an egg to be. In such cases the chick dies and its own decay makes the egg worse than it would otherwise be. Eggs for keeping ought never to be fertilized. The cocks should either be killed off or confined so they cannot get to the hens after midsummer. In this way much trouble will be saved. The hens will lay more eggs, and eggs thus produced infertile can be easily kept until winter and sold at winter prices.

New Varieties of Wheat.

The wheat blossom usually fertilizes itself, and for this reason new varieties are rarely originated, except by sports. But the crossing of different varieties may be done artificially by taking off the stamens from one ear, and carefully depositing on the blossom the pollen of a different variety. It is not best to try to cross widely different varieties, as these would be only mongrels. This seems to be the origin of some new varieties of wheat which are partly bald and partly bearded. Some have thought these were distinct varieties, but a farmer who saved seed of each separate, and sowed both, found that the bald and bearded heads appeared in both lots, though the majority of the grain was of the kind sown.

Support for Berry Bushes.

Wire is very commonly used as a support for raspberry and blackberry bushes, this being of necessity very stout and very firmly braced. But this does not suffice to keep the wire stiffly in place. Where wires are stretched along each side of a row already, they can be made much more efficient by tying them together with cross wires every ten feet or so. This pulls them together and keeps the bushes upright and in place. Where there is no support at present and support it to be given the bushes, the plan shown in the diagram can be followed to advantage. Light wooden strips of inch-square stuff are held up by stakes of the same material and rigidly attached to each other by cross wires. These cross wires are the most important part of the whole, for they are constantly pulling the bushes up into close quarters—the one thing for which supports are desired.

Sweet Corn Stalks.

It too often happens that when sweet corn in gardens is stripped of its ears the stalks are left to dry up and become woody, in which condition they are worth very little for feeding. There is much more sweet in the juices of sweet corn stalks than in those of ordinary corn, and they are well worth caring for. On most farms they can be fed at once to the cows, and if there are immature ears on the stalks they will be all the better feed for that. Where sweet corn is grown largely for canning or for market there is not apt to be any neglect of the stalks, as the value of these is necessary to make the crop pay. It is in private gardens, where only a little sweet corn is grown, that this waste usually occurs.

Farm Notes.

It is stated that in Minnesota the sunflower is raised for fuel, an acre furnishing a year's supply for a family, the heads, seeds and stalks all being burned.

Dogs seldom attack sheep if one member of the flock has a bell, as sheep-killing dogs are suspicious and dislike the noise or alarm. Breeders who have tried bells report favorably of their use.

The largest sheep owner in the world is said to be S. McCaughey, of the Coonong Station, at Jerideric, New South Wales. He has 3,000,000 acres of land and last season sheared 1,000,000 sheep.

One of the most useful appliances on a farm, and which costs but very little compared with the many uses to which it can be put, is the windmill. It grinds food, provides water for stock and can be used for irrigating small plots. They are now being adapted for purposes of irrigation on many large farms, two or more windmills being sufficient to fill a large reservoir and keep a constant supply of water.

INFLUENCE OF THE BICYCLE.

Other Industries Begin to Feel a Depression.

Statistics of the influence of the bicycle upon commerce show how tremendously it has depressed several industries, from the making of pianos and jewelry to the quarrying of granite paving blocks, and the trade in tobacco, but nobody has estimated the extra business it has created. That is of a volume so large that it more than offsets the lessening of other trading and manufacturing. It has shown that the yearly loss caused by the craze for wheeling amounts to $112,000,000. Those who keep livery or sale stables are injured to the extent of $20,000,000; those who sell carriages $15,000,000, and harness and saddle dealers $10,000,000. The bicycle is responsible for the falling off of $13,00,000 in piano sales, $7,000,000 in jewelry, and $4,000,000 in watches. The consumption of cigars has dropped by $7,000,000, confectionery $6,000,000, while tailors mourn a loss of $10,000,000, and the purveyors of dress goods and millinery a similar amount. Street railroads are estimated to have lost by the wheel last year $3,000,000; sellers of whisky and beer $2,000,000; excursions, etc., the same amount, and the theater $2,000,000.

What has the bicycle meanwhile done toward making new business? It is estimated that there are 4,000,000 wheel riders in the United States. They have invested no less than $300,000,000 in bicycles and $10,000,000 in clothes for riding. There are 250 bicycle makers, 10 tiremakers, and at least 600 companies that deal in the sundries, the total investments of which foot up $75,000,000. This does not include repair shops, racetracks and club houses.

This year there will be purchasers for a million new wheels if the present interest keeps up. Bicycle shops in New York are besieged with buyers, and every express, truck, furniture and dry goods delivery wagon is laden with wheels. Clothiers, tailors, jewelers, candy venders, druggists—all are taking advantage of the demand, and are selling bicycles. One firm on the boulevards finds the wheel more of a staple than the bedstead. Well, all these must be counted among those who make profits out of the leading sport of the day.

If there are a million wheels produced this year and twice as many tires, it will give employment to 75,000 bicycle workers and 3,000 tire employes. Over 500,000 people are employed in the factories which make "sundries," and there are over 25,000 retail dealers and people employed in repair shops.

To sum up, there are at present about 4,500,000 persons engaged solely in the bicycle business, and no less than $650,000,000 invested in the manufacture of wheels.

Thus, there are two sides to the story. Physicians declare that not within 200 years has there been any one thing which has so benefited mankind as the invention of the bicycle, and "that hundreds and thousands of men and women who formerly had no exercise, are now devoting half their time to healthy recreation, and not only strengthening and developing their own bodies, but are preparing the way for future generations, which will be born of healthy parents." The income of physicians is lessened to an unreckonable extent; but the money could well be put into other things than drugs and doctors' fees. It is already going into the pockets of the small shopkeepers; one is not sure that what is lost in candy sales is not made up in sales of chewing gum. Men who could scarcely pay their rent before have turned their little stores into places for the storage of bicycles. As the modern apartment house is but ill-fitted to accommodate the bicycles of a family caring for these machines has become a profitable occupation.

Young men and young women pursue the pleasant outdoor work of "representing" manufacturers on the cycle paths. They have simply to "talk up" the machine made by their employer. So, when all sources of income are considered, it may be plain that the sport is as nearly an unmixed blessing as any the world has known.—Providence Journal.

Newness of America.

The newness of American life was illustrated recently at Minneapolis, when 7,000 school children, in relays of a thousand, hauled the first house ever built in Minneapolis through the streets of the town to the site that had been arranged for it in Minnehaha Park. The house was built, says Harper's Weekly, forty-seven years ago, and not only has it survived, but its builder is living, too, as well as his wife, who came from New York to live in it. He is Col. John H. Stevens, a veteran of the Mexican war, who was born in 1820, went to Minnesota in 1849 for the good of his lungs, and, not finding a claim that suited him in the village of St. Paul, went up the river and staked out a farm at St. Anthony's Falls, on land that is now the center of a city which brags of its 200,000 inhabitants, and hopes to have a million more. Col. Stevens has been a leading man in Minneapolis ever since he started the town and apparently has not failed to gain such legitimate advantages, as ought to accrue to a pioneer who selects his farm with discretion and abides by his choice.—St. Louis Republic.

Working Off Old Stock.

"I'm going to tell my pa on you," said Johnny Smithers as the blacksmith pared some of the bone away from the horse's hoof.

"Why, what have I done?" asked the blacksmith.

"You ain't got shoes to fit Dobbin and your whittlin' off his feet to suit those you have got."—London Telegraph.

Men are becoming so numerous that after awhile they will be used for ballast in steamships.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

A Pathetic Ailment.

Mrs. Q. had a severe headache, and her complaints made Mr. Q. a trifle cross, and by and by he said something which made Mrs. Q. cry. Whereupon her little boy also burst into tears.

"Dear me!" said his father. "Now what may be the matter yith you?"

"I've got a headache—in mamma's head!" said the child.

A Doctor's Explanation.

Dr. J.'s little boy, four years old, had never seen a funeral procession, for they are of rare occurrence in the quiet side streets where the doctor lives. Lately, however, one of the doctor's patients died, and there was a burial from the street.

As the procession moved along the little boy came running to his father, and pointing to the hearse, asked:

"O, papa, what is that?"

"That, my child," said the doctor, with a deep sigh, "is an erroneous diagnosis!"

She Saved the Pie.

Bessie announced one day recently at luncheon: "We wouldn't have had any pudding to-day if it hadn't been for me." The rest of the family all looked up at her, considerably surprised, for Bessie is only five years old, and they knew she could not have made the dessert. "I saw it on the table," she went on, "and I might have let in the cat, you know. Then Whiskers might have jumped on a chair and eaten it, and then we wouldn't have had any pudding. But I didn't do it."—New York Times.

Waiting for the Bird.

A small boy who had a great dislike for school returned home for dinner a little earlier than usual.

"Tommy, you naughty boy, you have been playing truant," said his mother; "a little dicky bird came in at the window and told me so."

The next morning Tommy set out for school as usual. During the morning his mother heard a noise from the far end of the kitchen, and, looking round there, saw Tommy crouched under the table.

"Tommy, you rascal, what are you doing there?"

Seeing that he was discovered he crawled out, and, holding up a brick which he had by him, said:

"I was waitin' to croak that dicky bird."

Bantie.

Bantie was a tiny little black dot of a bantam hen, and Bertie was a tiny rosy-checked dot of a boy.

Bantie belonged to Bertie, and she was so sure of a few crumbs whenever he came to the door that she would leave Speckle and Brownie and all the rest of her companions, even to old Buff, the huge Cochin, whenever Bertie's little white head appeared at the door.

One day, the last of April, Bertie came into the house crying bitterly. "Bantie's gone," he sobbed, "an' won't never come back no more!"

We cheered him up by telling him that he would surely see her again, and sure enough, in about three weeks Bertie rushed into the house as fast as his two little feet would carry him, shouting, "Bantie's come, Bantie's come, an' brought ten little black banties with her!"

Fun for the Professor.

The late Prof. W. H. Harrison, who for many years was at the head of a popular boys' school in Amelia County, Virginia, was much loved and respected by his many pupils, and had a rare faculty for managing them. "He wasn't forever nagging us, but, as some of us learned by experience, he let the punishment fit the crime." So said one of his former pupils, now a prominent lawyer in Richmond; and then he related the following story:

The professor was accustomed to take a drive every sunny afternoon in a heavy, old-fashioned coach drawn by a large gray horse. One day, shortly after he had returned from his drive, half a dozen of the boys espied the coach standing in the driveway, where it had been left temporarily, and were seized with the idea that it would be great sport to secrete it.

Chuckling softly among themselves, they stole near to make sure that the colored driver was busted with the horses inside the stable. Then they took hold of the thrills, three on one side and three on the other, and drew the coach out of the grounds and down a long hill into a pine grove.

"Won't the 'Old Goat' be puzzled to know where his coach is?" said one fellow, with a laugh, in which the others joined.

"Old Goat'" was a term of affectionate familiarity which the boys applied to the professor behind his back, and which really savored nothing of disrespect.

The roguish youths indulged in jokes and merriment as they tugged the coach into a position out of which it would be difficult to remove it. This they had just accomplished when, to their consternation, Professor Harrison put his head out of the coach window, his eyes twinkling, and said, in his dignified, slow way:

"Well, boys, you've had the fun of hauling me down here, and now I must request you to haul me back again."

Smiles fled, faces grew long, and the boys stood aghast.

"All—right—sir," stammered one.

The professor settled back on the cushions, resumed the book which he had been quietly reading when the "fun" began, and the boys proceeded to drag the coach back to the grounds.

How they worked! The hill was never before half so long nor half so steep, but after almost an hour of puffing and perspiration the job was done.

Then Professor Harrison opened the coach door, and descending, said, with marked courtesy: "I thank you for my ride; I hope you have enjoyed it as much as I have."

"Yes, sir," answered one of the boys, who know not what else to say, and felt that some answer was called for.

There the matter ended, so far as the professor was concerned, for he never alluded to it again. The culprits on their part resolved never to mention it, but it was too good a story to keep.

The Truth About Mr. Frog.

If ever there is a happy creature it is Mr. Frog. A more comfortable looking fellow can hardly be found, as he sits on that log that lies partly in the water of that swamp. As you watch him you see him twinkle his bright eyes, as though the little fly he has just eaten was a most delicious one. But let us look into Mr. Frog's history and see how he grew into the pretty, black-spotted, white-breasted green hopper he is now, for you may be sure that he was not always so handsome.

At first you never would have known him, for before he could move at all he was a tiny black spot the size of a small pea and was surrounded by a clear, jelly-like substance to keep him from being injured by sharp stones or sticks in the water. For many days he lived thus, fastened with a cluster of other such to the stem of a plant that grew under the surface in the still part of a brook. This bunch of eggs was near the bank where the water was shallow, and so the sun warmed them, and by and by they had tails and were so strong that they broke through the white jelly and began to wiggle about.

For a week or two they were content to rest in the soft mud, where they lived peacefully and grew rapidly. But one day they went further away from their little pool into another one. Here were more brown lumps with tails on, and some were very sizable indeed. Our little frog was then called a pollywog or tadpole, and he probably felt proud to own two long and high-sounding names. He played with his brothers and sisters and with the other pollywogs, or hunted for his food in the mud, and enjoyed life as much as anything can that has plenty to eat, nothing to think about and lots of fun.

All this time our friend was growing, and it was not long before a curious thing happened. It was this—a pair of hind legs grew out of his body, and though he did not use them at first he knew he should later. Next a pair of legs could be seen in front, and now he could crawl as well as swim. The pollywog had gained these legs, but he was losing his tail—not that it was falling off, as many people believe, oh no! his tail was being absorbed into his body, that is, it was becoming a part of his body, and as he broadened the tail was shortened until only the stubby end was left. His head was smaller, and more as it is now. Altogether, he was improving wonderfully in looks. He did not care to be lazy any more, but jumped and frisked about in high glee.

Who would have thought that so many changes could possibly occur to so tiny a creature! He had traded his brown clothes for a pretty suit with black spots, and wore a yellowish white vest—in fact, he looked as he does now, but was smaller. When the end of his tail had been all absorbed he was no more a pollywog, and spent half his time on the land traveling from pool to pool, or exploring the field for a soft, marshy place. Here he loved dearly to sit in the moist grass, and dart out his tongue at flies, and various other insects.

After several weeks we find him a full-grown frog. He has learned the ways of the world, and knows how to keep out of danger's way. You shall see what he does when we poke at him with this stick. Ah, there he goes to the bottom of the pool! Look hard, but you will not see him, for he has hidden himself in the mud or under some stone—and so, Mr. Frog, farewell!—The Congregationalist.

Making Sailing Ships Go Faster.

The statement of an Italian sea captain that he had proved by experience that a ship goes faster when her sails are perforated with a number of holes than when they are quite sound, was at first looked upon as too ridiculous for consideration. Unbelievers, however, now find that the Italian has gone a long way toward proving his case. His theory is that the force of the wind cannot fairly take effect on an inflated sail, because of the cushion of immovable air that fills up the hollow. To prevent this cushion collecting he bored a number of holes in the sail, which let part of the wind blow right through it and allowed the remainder to strike against the canvas and exercise its full effect. Several trials have been made, and it looks as if this is another of those paradoxical truths which appear so impossible on the surface. The experiments were made in all weathers. In a light wind a boat with ordinary sails made four knots, while with the perforated sails she covered five and a quarter knots; in a fresh breeze she did seven knots with ordinary sails, and eight and three-quarters knots with the improved sails; in a strong wind she did eight knots and ten knots respectively. If this augmented speed were sustained throughout a long voyage it would increase the value of the ship one-fifth, as she would make the same trip in four weeks that she did before in five weeks.

Some men are so shallow that every time they scratch their heads they expose their brains.

The total amount paid out for all kinds of pensions in the United Kingdom for the year ending March, 1892, was £1,588,862. Then pensions for the civil list amounted to £2,101,687; for the army, £3,714,673; for the navy, £1,742,812, and for the survivors of former distinguished naval and military men, £29,720. The whole number of recipients of all classes is 162,040.

Important improvements in Roentgen photography are announced from Berlin. The most interesting is a simple method of photographing the stomach and intestines. It is only necessary for the patient to drink some harmless solution of mineral salt, such as lime water, which is as impenetrable as bone to X rays, and excellent results are obtained.

Belfort, the eastern gate of France, and Rambervillers, in the Vosges Mountains, have just received the cross of the Legion of Honor, which will be emblazoned on the town arms, in honor of the gallant resistance they made to the Germans twenty-five years ago. Altogether, nine towns in France now have the cross of the Legion of Honor on their coat of arms.

The mosaic work with which the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral is paved was made by the female convicts at Working prison. The quarries of the Isle of Portland, in Dorsetshire, supplied the materials for St. Paul's Cathedral, and for all the most splendid buildings in London. About 70,000 tons of Portland stone are now exported annually from these quarries.

A Bombay newspaper declares that the castor oil plant affords a means of protection against mosquitoes. In Egypt it is planted about houses to drive the insects away. In towns a better plan is to have the young plants in pots and bring them into the house for a day or two at a time, but the palma Christi is a sun-loving plant, and therefore must not be kept too long in the shade.

The heads of the naval and military departments in England were so impressed with the wholesomeness and superior nutriment of cocoa that they in 1845 judiciously directed that it should be served out twice or thrice a week to regiments of the line, and to the seamen on board of Her Majesty's ships, and this wise regulation evinced its salutary effects in the improved health and condition of the men.

Germany has made some bold experiments at railroad speed on the line between Berlin and Gorlitz. The best performance was sixty-five and three-quarters miles, which was twelve miles better than the highest speed of the fastest German train, the Berlin-Hamburg lightning express, which does 177½ in three and one-half hours. Ordinary German express trains make forty-three and one-half miles an hour.

As the result of the existence of a cattle trust in Belgium the humbler classes of the population there are forced to purchase horse flesh as a substitute for beef. The Antwerp correspondent of a London journal says that for some time past the importation of cattle into Belgium from the United States and Canada "has been prohibited owing to the detection, alleged or real, of a single case of pleuro-pneumonia."

From an artesian well 188 feet deep, recently bored at San Marcos, Texas, there were expelled more than a dozen specimens of a remarkable bactrachian, together with numerous crustaceans. From the "American Naturalist" it appears that the crustaceans comprise numerous shrimps (one new species palaeomonetes artrorum), a lesser number of isipods of a new genus (cirolanides) and a very few amphipods. All the species are white, blind and have unusually long, slender feet and antennae.

Jennie Woodward, a 5-year-old girl, living near Kingston, N. Y., has a big black cat which is her constant companion. The girl and cat were playing in the yard, when the cat began to watch a crevice in a stone wall. The child's curiosity was aroused. As she drew near to peer into the crevice a large rattlesnake darted out toward the child. The next instant the cat had sprung to the rescue, seized the snake and crushed its spine. The snake measured six feet and three inches.

So seriously has the city of London taken the custom of the buttonhole bouquets worn by stockbrokers that it has actually given the women who sell flowers recognition. The flower girls, as they are all gallantly called, are permitted by the regulations to set down their baskets and sell their flowers around the iron railings opposite the Royal Exchange. They are among the most respected stall holders in the city. They are uniformly polite, as they may well be, since they may be said to be on speaking terms with all the youth and gallantry of Threadneedle street and Throgmorton avenue, and they are very skilled in the making of boutonnieres.

The Armenian relief fund has beaten the record among the various efforts to relieve extraordinary distress. The amount forwarded to Constantinople already reaches $715,000. Of this $255,000 represents the relief fund proper, collected by the Duke of Westminster's committee from England and Ireland. America has sent direct to Constantinople $250,000. Scotland, whose interests in afflicted Armenia is very keen, has sent $50,000, and France has sent as much as Scotland. Germany, Switzerland and the British colonies have sent contributions, too, though Germany with its $15,000 is some distance behind France; while the Armenians themselves scattered throughout Europe have collected $80,000.

Is This Marriage Legal?

An odd case has come up in San Francisco with regard to the legality of a certain marriage. Two Californians, an uncle and a niece, wishing to marry, found that the State law forbade it within such relationship. Therefore, after consulting lawyers they went aboard a tug which carried them out to sea beyond the jurisdiction of the State, and there they were made man and wife. According to California law the legality of a marriage depends upon the law of the place where the marriage is contracted. It now remains to be determined whether any statute of the United States covers the case, since, if the vessel was of American register, the marriage took place within the jurisdiction of the United States.—Buffalo Courier.

LET THE PEOPLE DO THEIR OWN GOVERNING.

The platform adopted by the gold Democrats at Indianapolis has one merit over that dictated by the money cliques to the Republican party, and on which Mr. McKinley stands. The Republican Convention at St. Louis, ridden, as it was by the money-lending classes, declared for the maintenance of the existing gold standard, but refused to recommend the taking of those steps towards currency contraction, such as could alone make the maintenance of that standard possible under any conditions. Moreover, while upholding the gold standard, the Republicans at St. Louis held out the hope of international bimetallism; while lauding the gold standard they pledged themselves to restore bimetallism if that could be attained by international agreement. Thus the Republican platform is not only illogical, but it bears the stamp of insincerity, for while demanding the maintenance of the gold-standard, it contains no suggestion, much less recommendation of that currency contraction which our adherence to the gold standard must make necessary.

There is only one possible way that we can maintain the gold standard, and that is by offering our produce so cheap that our foreign creditors will prefer to take our wheat and cotton and other products in preference to gold. That we can export at the low level of prices that adherence to the gold standard will make necessary a volume of produce sufficient in value to meet the charges of our foreign indebtedness, aside from paying current indebtedness incurred for purchases of merchandise, may well be doubted, for just as prices fall the greater is the quantity of produce we must export to meet the fixed charges on our foreign indebtedness, but there can be no question that the only possible way of keeping gold at home under the gold standard is by still further depressing prices.

And to depress prices there is only one way. We must make money scarcer and dearer. That is, we must contract our currency until we so depress prices that our foreign creditors will be tempted to take the interest moneys we owe them in commodities rather than in gold. And this currency contraction we must accomplish for ourselves, and in our own way, or it will be done for us. In short, we must issue interest-bearing bonds in exchange for our greenbacks and treasury notes, thereby contracting our currency and depressing prices, or our currency will be automatically contracted by the export of gold, which must be followed, if we are to maintain gold payments, by the sale of bonds for gold to replenish a depleted gold reserve, as has been done during the past three years, the redemption of greenbacks and Treasury notes with such gold, and the piling of them up in the Treasury, thus arriving at virtually the same end as would be accomplished by directly issuing interest-bearing bonds with which to take up the greenbacks and Treasury notes.

We cannot maintain our existing monetary system. We have knocked out one of the props which supported it. We must replace this prop; that is, we must restore silver to its full place as money, side by side with gold, or we must so reduce the volume of our paper currency that its weight can be carried by the single prop of gold upon which it now rests. The effort to contract our currency to this volume must scatter ruin and disaster broadcast over our land, for currency contraction means lower prices, and a lower range of prices our producing classes cannot stand. The fall in prices has been so continuous since 1873 has driven thousands into bankruptcy and hundreds of thousands to the brink. A further fall in prices must push them over and precipitate general bankruptcy.

It is therefore that we believe it to be impossible to prevent the suspension of gold payments unless, indeed, we abandon our efforts to establish the gold standard; for the attempt to place ourselves on the contracted gold basis must precipitate a fall in prices such as we cannot stand. But a further depression in prices is what those who so laud gold monometallism must try in order to accomplish the establishment of the gold standard on a firm foundation. Consequently, currency contraction under the gold standard is a necessity.

This is the necessity the advocates of the gold standard are called upon to face. The Republicans at St. Louis refused to face it; the gold Democrats at Indianapolis took a bolder stand. Explicitly they did not it is true, speak out for currency contraction; indeed, they merely proposed that issues of bank notes be substituted for the paper currency—the greenbacks and Treasury notes issued on the credit of the national government. But, this done, contraction could be left to the banks.

So we see, as a first step to the establishment of a "sound monetary system" we are to substitute bank credit for the credit of the national government as a basis for our paper money.

Bank credit is then considered by these "sound money" advocates as a safer basis for paper money than the national credit—the banks betterable to look after the redemption of their notes in gold than the government; better able to take up and carry that duty of maintaining gold payments that has proven so onerous to the government. And why, let us here ask, is it that the banks are so willing to relieve the government of this burden—a burden that has proven so onerous, we are told, that the government could well afford to pay an interest-charge of $15,000,000 annually to free itself from it? Well, we are told, could the government afford to make an issue of $500,000,000 of bonds to take up the greenbacks and Treasury notes, and thus relieve itself at the cost of an interest-charge of at least $15,000,000 a year, of the necessity of providing gold for the redemption of these notes?

Then these "sound money" advocates tell us that, in the place of the greenbacks and Treasury notes of the national government, an issue of national bank notes should be provided for. So we are to saddle on the government an interest-charge of $15,000,000 annually and an interest-bearing debt of $500,000,000 in order that we may substitute bank credit for national credit as a basis for our currency. At this cost the government is to be relieved of the duty assumed by a series of gold ridden Secretaries of the Treasury to provide the exporters of gold with this precious metal at the cost of the tax-payer—a course that has done much to stimulate an artificial import of manufactured goods, to be sold in competition with the products of our own mills. In short, by undertaking to accumulate gold and furnish it for export free of cost, our government has cheapened the cost of goods bought abroad, fostered the sale of goods of foreign manufacture in competition with our own, and made easy the import of foreign manufactures by assuming the cost of gathering together the gold to be sent abroad in payment—a cost that ahould be borne by the importer, not by the general government.

This obligation of supplying gold for export without charge—an obligation which should never have been undertaken, and which any Secretary of the Treasury who had the courage to run the Treasury in the interest of the whole country, and not to the profit of Wall Street, would throw down—is then, we told, to be put on the shoulders of the banks, the government to issue $500,000,000 in bonds and pay an annual interest-charge of $15,000,000 to be relieved of this burden. And after the banks have assumed this burden, how are they going to carry it? Are they going to borrow gold at great cost to themselves in order to replenish their gold reserves, depleted by gold exports? Surely, no such thing can be expected.

But we are told the banks would control the movement of gold, so that there would be no undue drain on their gold resorves. And how would they do this? There is only one way. When a demand for gold for export arose and a drain on their reserves to meet this demand set in, they would have but one way to stop it. They would have to raise their rate of discount, make money tight, contract their issues of currency, with a view to inducing foreigners to loan us the gold that would otherwise be taken for export, tempted to do so by high interest rates and large returns on such loans and of so depressing prices that our foreign creditors would take our comaodities in place of our gold. Preventing gold exports by borrowing could be but a temporary makeshift, so currency contraction and price depression would be their only course. And such a course would mean bankruptcy to their customers, inability of those to whom they had loaned to pay their loans and consequent failure of the banks.

So the banks would find themselves between two evils, the suspension of gold payments or the closing of their doors. Over the choice they would not long hesitate. Suspension of gold payments would be to them no evil; they would not dread it, they would court it, for gold payments once suspended and the issue of paper money in their hands they would have it in their power to pay their depositors by the issue of their own debts, by a veritable issue of Clearing House certificates in the shape of bank notes, and this currency they could then expand and contract at will, and thus raise and depress prices to the impoverishment of the producing classes, but to the enrichment of those speculative cliques who controlled the banks, and as a consequence the issue of our money and the control of our monetary yardstick.

Give into the hands of speculative cliques the power to regulate our currency, to lengthen or shorten our monetary yardstick, as it suits their purposes to raise or depress prices—such in effect is the demand of those who insist that the government go out of the banking business. Let the people do their own banking; let us have an elastic bank currency in place of the non-interest-bearing greenbacks and Treasury notes now issued by the government is the demand of the gold Democrats as set forth in the Indianapolis platform. By, "let the people do their own banking," they mean let the speculative cliques have full control over the sovereign power to issue money; by, "let us have an elastic currency," they mean let us have an elastic currency that the speculative cliques can manipulate so as to raise and depress prices at will in order that the producers of wealth may be at their mercy and in time become their abject slaves.

To those who would centralize power in the banks, make the speculative cliques guardians over our measure of value and the virtual rulers of our people we would reply: Let the people do their own governing, let them guard over their own measure of value, let them see to it that the control over our currency never passes from their hands, let them see that our measure of value is never arbitrarily shortened and prices unduly raised by expansion on the one hand, or lengthened, and prices depressed by contraction of our currency on the other; let them, above all, and under no circumstances, delegate this power to interested parties, but let them guard over our measure of value as sacred, recognizing that to inflate the currency is to shorten the monetary yardstick, enhance prices and do injustice to the crediter, that to contract the currency is to lengthen the monetary yardstick, depress prices, rob the debtor and do infinite injustice to all producers of wealth.—The American.

POLITICAL ANNONCEMENTS

To the People of Inyo County.

I HEREBY ANNOUNCE THAT I WILL BE a candidate for the office of Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, California, at the election to be held November 3rd, 1896; subject to the will of the people of Inyo County.

BY STEAMER, TRAIN OR BOAT?

Which of these have you selected as a means of travel? No matter. Whichever it is, recollect that for sea-sickness, disorders of the stomach, liver and bowels, engendered by rough locommotion and bad food or water, and for malarial troubles, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the most useful specific you can take with you. It is invaluable also for rheumatism, kidney complaints and nervous trouble.

"Say, I've had an offer to go to work for a Chicago wholesale house. What would you do if you were in my shoes?" After a careful inspection—"I think I would black 'em."

Scrofula

Is a deep-seated blood disease which all the mineral mixtures in the world cannot cure. S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is a real blood remedy for blood diseases and has no equal.

Mrs. Y. T. Buck, of Delaney, Ark., had Scrofula for twenty-five years and most of the time was under the care of the doctors who could not relieve her. A specialist said he could cure her, but he filled her with arsenic and potash which almost ruined her constitution. She then took nearly every so-called blood medicine and drank them by the wholesale, but they did not reach her trouble. Some one advised her to try S.S.S. and she very soon found that she had a real blood remedy at last. She says: "After taking one dozen bottles of S.S.S. I am perfectly well, my skin is clear and healthy and I would not be in my former condition for two thousand dollars. Instead of drying up the poison in my system, like the potash and arsenic, S.S.S. drove the disease out through the skin, and I was permanently rid of it."

A Real Blood Remedy.

S.S.S. never fails to cure Scrofula, Eczema, Rheumatism Contagious Blood Poison, or any disorder of the blood. Do not rely upon a simple tonic to cure a deep-seated blood disease, but take a real blood remedy.

BRYAN'S HELPMEET.

SOMETHING OF THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE'S WIFE.

She Is His Assistant, Companion and Friend. How She Helped Him With His Speech In the House—Studied Law to Keep Him Company—A Loving Mother.

The wife of William Jennings Bryan is an absolutely new species of woman among those who have stood a chance of ruling in the executive mansion.

Briefly, she is a pale faced, intellectual slip of a woman. She has an immense amount of determination and silent aggressiveness, is rather studious and very reserved. She does not care for fashion or society and pays no attention whatever to either.

Attention was first drawn to Mrs. Bryan at the time Bryan made his famous tariff speech in the house. Inside of a few hours, in the midst of the adulation he was receiving, Bryan generously declared that his wife deserved a share in the praise.

This is the kind of woman Mrs. Bryan is: For weeks the Bryans had been preparing that speech. The Bryans is said because the husband and wife worked over the speech day and night together. Every preparation for it was made with determined coolness.

Mrs. Bryan afterward told me how they had worked over it, how sentence after sentence had been polished and repolished and cut until each was a gem of its kind. They had already discovered Arlington, the famous cemetery of the soldiers. There they went twice, and among the graves of the great worked over paragraphs that proved especially effective when delivered. Mrs. Bryan knew almost every word by heart.

A week before the big speech was made Bryan had delivered a eulogy on a dead colleague. Mrs. Bryan, then unknown even to her husband's colleagues, sat in the gallery and carefully noted the volume of tone required by Bryan to fill the hall. Anything more deliberate could hardly be conceived. By means of signals the husband on the floor and wife in the gallery communicated, and he increased or lowered his voice at her suggestion until she had satisfied herself that he had struck the most effective tone.

When the critical moment arrived, Mrs. Bryan was in the gallery. She has told me how anxious she was, yet sure that her husband would wake up the house as it hadn't been stirred for months. At first Bryan held a low voice. Mrs. Bryan nodded for fuller tones. Her eyes never left his face except to study the effect some sentence might have on the house. From time to time Bryan glanced for encouragement at the pale face of the woman in the gallery, and when it all was over there was one quick glance of intelligence. Both knew that their work had been well done, and the woman sank back in her seat almost overcome by the intensity of her satisfaction and relief.

It was a few days later that Mr. Bryan took me into the house gallery to meet his wife, who came over nearly every afternoon to meet him and walk home with him at the close of the session.

Mrs. Bryan told me how she and her husband had known each other as young people back in Illinois, where they belong, when her name was Mary Baird.

When they were married and went to Nebraska to live and Bryan studied law, she took up the same study with him.

Then Bryan found himself getting into politics, but Mrs. Byan kept on with her law studies, took her examinations and was admitted to practice. All this was done that she might work with and help her husband.

In this connection Mrs. Bryan said: "It amused me after I was graduated to see the women in our town. Of course it was then a little unusual for a woman to be admitted to practice. My friends called in numbers on me, and it was queer to see how they maneuvered to approach the subject. About half of them finally got it, but one and all seemed to think that I was a bigger curiosity than a mummy."

Mrs. Bryan can be sarcastic when sufficiently roused, and at any time will say droll, witty things with only a gleam of a smile in her dark eyes.

She is the mother of three children, and is very domestic in her inclinations. When it was discovered that she was a lawyer, a congressman who meant to be very agreeable inquired of her with what line of law she was most familiar.

Mrs. Bryan's quick answer was:

"Domestic relations, sir."

If the Bryans should come into the White House many people would recall and contrast the night of their first appearance there with Mrs. Bryan's prospect of standing at the head of the reception line.

It was just after Bryan's speech, when everybody wanted to see him and his lawyer wife. Mrs. Bryan appeared in a high necked, long sleeved black cashmere dress, not even fashionably cut or made. Bryan wore his usual Prince Albert broadcloth coat and possibly a white lawn tie. The pair stood about and looked lost while people told each other who the unostentatious, rather old fashioned looking couple were; yet neither was at all embarrassed. Both got more than a little amusement out of watching the crowds. They went out very seldom in Washington, and then only on official occasions. I never heard of Mrs. Bryan appearing in evening dress during their Washington life. I don't think she ever possessed a low cut gown, nor a dress with silk linings, and Bryan surely never has owned a dress suit. They never attended fashionable dinners and certainly gave none themselves.

The Bryans when in Washington lived in a small, quiet boarding house on Capitol Hill, three blocks from the capitol itself. There was a real estate office in a part of the ground floor. During their stay in Washington they had rooms on the second floor. Mrs. Bryan always wore the simplest gray, brown and black dresses, made in the plainest fashion. She wore no jewels, because they were living as economically as possible and had no money to waste in such frivolity. Then Mrs. Bryan's tastes do not run in that direction.

Mrs. Bryan's head is the most noticeable thing about her. It is very shapely, and the heavy, dark brown hair is always brushed smoothly back from a very high, full forehead. The hair is thick, soft and fine and simply coiled into a mass on top of the head. Mrs. Bryan isn't pretty nor handsome, but she has a strikingly intelligent and strong face. The eyes are dark and large and expressive. The nose is large, with good width between the eyes. The mouth and chin might almost have been cast in the same mold as Bryan's own, so striking is the resemblance in firmness and determination.

Mrs. Bryan would sacrifice and endure anything once she had made up her mind that a thing was right. She has ideals and will consider her husband's nomination as righteous and a step toward what the Bryans maintain is the correction of the wrongs of the masses of the people. She has a sweet and well trained voice in talking, and the men and women who penetrate her reserve appreciate her honesty of purpose and sincerity. She despises shams of every kind, and, above all, is natural and unaffected.

It would require more than the possibility of ruling in the White House to turn this woman's head. With all this, Mrs. Bryan is not at all assertive. Mrs. Bryan might elect to run White House affairs according to her own ideas and not after the manner of so called official society, but no one who came in contact with her could help respecting her, and in time admiring her character.

Bryan and all his friends admit the wife has held up the hands of her husband more than effectively, and Bryan himself takes no praise that does not include his wife.—Mrs. McGuirk in New York World.

SHE LOVES HORSES.

Mrs. Caton Crosses the Ocean as Caretaker of Trotting Stock.

Mrs. Mary Caton, whose husband conducts a large stock farm near Lansing, Mich., was one of the most interesting passengers on the Hamburg liner Phœnicia when it left the dock at Hoboken the other morning.

Her claim to this distinction is that she is the first woman who ever crossed the ocean in the capacity of caretaker to a stable of trotting horses.

The horses include Senate, a pacer, with a record of 2:16¼. He is the only one in the consignment which has not been already sold. He will be campaigned on the European circuit. Mrs. Caton hopes to sell quite a few pacers abroad after the foreigners have seen Senate's work.

Others in the string are the black mare Monette, 2:14¼ and a two mile race record of 4:44, by Monon; the baby mare Valley Queen, 2:15¼, by Sphinx, dam by Red Wilkes; the bay stallion Travernier, 2:26½, by Pilot Wilkes, dam by Almost, the brown stallion Trophy, by Faustine, dam by Robert McGregor; Maspero, 2:29¼, by Brown Wilkes, and two others without records. Mrs. Caton will be accompanied on the trip by her 15-year-old son and the head foreman of the farm. The party came east in a Burton stock car, Mrs. Caton and her two companions riding in the car with the horses. She is about medium height and thoroughly understands horses. She decided to undertake the journey because her husband is needed at the farm. Mrs. Caton has great faith in the string of animals.—New York Journal.

SOME OLD CIGARS.

They Were Made Before the War—An Odd Will.

The will of the late Thomas Bonifield, an aged and highly respected citizen of Danville, Ind., was opened the other day, and in distributing the household goods there was found a large box containing nearly 5,000 old fashioned, handmade cigars, the history of which is as follows: Mr. Bonifield formerly lived in Kentucky as a farmer, and his wife, as a means of assisting in making the living, began manufacturing cigars, the tobacco for which they raised themselves, and she succeeded in making a success of the undertaking.

This was before the war and before any revenue tax was put on tobacco, and when that went into effect her stock in trade amounted to the cigars just found, and never having taken out a license they were kept in a tightly closed box, and when the family came to Indiana the cigars were brought along. Mrs. Bonifield died some four years ago and always took a delight in telling of her skill in rolling cigars. Those heirs who received the cigars distributed them to the smokers of the town, who pronounced them first class, even though they had been made close to 35 years ago.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

CANNON AN ENDEAVORER.

The Illinois Congressman Poses as a Member of That Order.

Congressman Joe Cannon, chairman of the appropriations committee, arrived in Washington the other night from his home in Danville, Ills. "I am a member of the Christian Endeavor," he said to the clerk as he registered at the Normandie, "and if you are giving special rates to Christians count me in."

"Where is your badge?" asked the clerk.

"My face is my badge," the congressman responded.

"I had some business in Washington," said Congressman Cannon, "and I thought, inasmuch as there was to be a Christian Endeavor convention here this week, I could come now and kill two birds with one stone. The young people seem not only to have taken possession of the capital, but of the roads leading to it. On the train I was asked several times what delegation I belonged to. When I got off the train in Washington tonight, a young man rushed up, grasped my hand and pinned a badge on my coat. For a man who has been in congress 20 years I consider it a great compliment to still look like a Christian."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Bishop Williams Ill.

The Right Rev. John Williams, bishop of Connecticut, is ill with sciatica at his home in Middletown and has been compelled to cancel all his engagements. He is the oldest Anglican bishop in the world in time of consecration and the presiding bishop of the house of bishops of the United States. Bishop Williams recently received an invitation to be present in person or by representative at the thirteen hundredth anniversary next year of the English church and of the baptism of the English king by St. Augustine.

Railway to a Volcano.

The survey of the volcano, Popocatepetl, Mexico, for the purpose of determining the best location for an aerial cable railway to the summit has just been completed. This new railway will be a great attraction to tourists, who will now be able to make the ascent to the summit, 18,000 feet above the sea, and also descend to the crater, where the process of extracting sulphur is being carried out.

ONE AND TWO.

By WALTER BESANT.

The intellectual half was looking at him with a strangely softened face. There was neither scorn nor hatred in that face. "Dimidium Animæ," he said. "Half of my soul, I have something to say as well. Confess, however, first of all, that I was right. Had it not been for this step—the most severe measure possible, I admit—nothing would have been achieved, eh?"

"Perhaps. You would work, you see."

"Yes. Well, I have made a discovery. It is that I have been too thorough. I don't quite understand how, logically and naturally, anything else was possible. I wanted, heavens knows, all the intellect there was. You were, therefore, bound to become the Animal pure and simple. Well, you see we are not really two, but one. Can't we hit upon an agreement?"

"What agreement?"

"Some agreement, some modus vivendi. I shall get, it is true, some of the animal, you will get some of the intellectual, but we shall be united again, and after all"— He looked very kindly upon himself and held out his hand. So they stood with clasped hands looking at each other.

"I found it out through Nell," the intellectual half went on. "You went to see her every morning; I went every evening. You were always brimful of love for her; I, who knew this, was not moved in the slightest degree by her. Oh! I know that she is the best girl that the world at this moment has to show. I am fully persuaded of that, yet she has ceased to move me. I think of her intellect, which is certainly much lower than my own, and I cannot even admire her. In other words, I cannot be moved by any woman. This terrifies me."

"Why?"

"It threatens my future. Don't you see? He who cannot be moved by woman is no longer man. But man can only be moved by brother man. If I cannot move men, my career is at an end. What they call magnetism belongs to the animal within us. When that is gone, I now perceive, when the animal is killed, the rest of the man has no longer any charm, any attraction, any persuasion, any power of leading, teaching, compelling or guiding. His success, whatever he does, is all glitter—evanescent glitter. He may sit down and hold his tongue, for he can do no more good."

"I only half understand."

"Intellect, in short, my lower half, is of no use without human passion. That is what it means. We have gone too far. Let us end it."

"How? You despise the man who is only animal."

"No, no! The animal is part of man. I understand now. I have done wrong, Brother Half, to separate myself so much from you. Only you carried it too far. You would not work—you would not even give me a decent show. Suppose—I say suppose—we were united once more. Could I count on being allowed to work?"

"Yes," said the Animal, "I have had a lesson too. You shall work," he hesitated and shuddered, "in reason, of course—say all the morning, and if you go into the house all the evening."

"I would not be hard upon you. I would let you have a reasonable amount of indolence and rest. My success will be less rapid on your account, but it will be more solid. Do you think that if we were to be lost again in each other I should once more feel for that girl as"——

"Why," said the Animal, "you would be—me, and what I feel for her is, I assure you, overwhelming."

That evening Will Challice sat at the open window in the dark, Nelly's hand in his. "My dear," he murmured, "tell me, do you love me more because I have realized some of our old dreams?"

"Will, how can I tell you? I love you—not your success. If you had not done so well, it would have made no difference. Your success is only an accidental part of you." Oh, the metaphysician! "You are not your success. Yet of course I don't love you for your fine degree, you conceited boy, and yet it is for yourself."

He kissed her forehead. "The old dreamtime was pleasant, wasn't it?—when we chose to be archbishop of Canterbury one day and lord chancellor the next? To be leader of the house of commons is the present ambition. It is a most splendid thing"—the dreamer's eyes looked up into space with the old light in them—"a most splendid thing—to lead the house—to sway the house. But I don't know," he sighed. "It will take an awful lot of work, and the Cambridge business did take it out of one most tremendously. I didn't believe, Nell, that I had such an amount of work in me."

He kissed her forehead.

"You have been so gloomy lately, Will. Was that fatigue?"

"Ambition on the brain, Nell," he replied, lightly—as lightly as of old—success had not destroyed the old gayety of heart. "I've consulted a learned physician, Dr. Sydenham Celsus Galen, Wimpole street. He says that an engagement with the right girl—he is extremely particular on that point, so that I do hope, Nell, we have made no mistake—is a sovereign remedy for all mopey, glum, dumpsy, moody, broody, gloomy, sulky, ill conditioned vapors. It is, he confessed, the only medicine in his pharmacopœia. All his clients have to follow that prescription. You will very soon find that those glum, dumpsy moods have all quite vanished. You will charm them away. Oh! I live again—I breathe—I think—I don't work so infernally hard—I am once more human—because I love and because"— The girl's head rested upon his arm, and he kissed her forehead.

THE END.

Two Links In a Chain.

An English writer, the author of "A Winter Jaunt In Norway," in describing a visit to Bjornstjerne Bjornson, mentions two incidents which are worth putting together for the encouragement especially of those who have to do with the training of young minds. They are excellent illustrations of the truth that a child or a man may appear to be dull of intellect when in fact he needs only the right touch to make him a thinker.

Bjornson, it appears, was not supposed when a boy to have any remarkable talent, nor was he particularly studious. At 15 years of age, however, a sudden change came over him. Some one persuaded him to read Wergeland's poem, "The English Pilot." The boy was fascinated. A new world was open to him. He longed to become a poet himself, to move men by his writings, to make his mark in the world.

This is incident No. 1. The second has to do with Bjornson's own influence upon a chance hearer.

The English lady who records it, while traveling far up in the country, stopped at a little farm and was amazed to find a well stored bookcase. She mentioned in particular works by Ibsen, Bjornson and Brandes.

"You are fond of reading, I see," she said to the farmer.

"Well, I wasn't formerly," he answered, "but you see I heard Herr Bjornson lecture on heredity down at Konigsberg, and I got a bit interested and bought two of his books, and I enjoyed them so much I've bought more, and now I read a good deal in the long winter evenings, and I like it."

So one thing leads to another. And so a tiny seed, dropped almost by chance, may result in a harvest.—Youth's Companion.

What He Wanted Most.

A lady who was shopping noticed a very small boy who was employed as "cash" in the store, and being interested in him began to ask him questions:

"Wouldn't you like to live with me and have everything my little boy has?" she inquired.

"What does your little boy have?" asked the child, fixing his large, serious eyes upon her face.

"Oh, he has books and tops and a pony," and she enumerated a lot of things.

"Has he any papa?" asked the child.

"Oh, yes, he has a dear, kind papa, who gives him all these things."

"Then I would like to be your little boy," said the child gravely, "for my papa is dead, and I would rather have him than any of the other things."

The lady who had been merely talking with the child for amusement had hard work to keep back her tears at this naive confession.—Detroit Free Press.

Grace Darling's Monument.

It is reported that the Grace Darling monument in Bamborough, England, is in a deplorable state. Vandals have broken off the railing surrounding the tomb and made use of it for chipping pieces from the recumbent figure of the maiden. The right arm has been destroyed in this manner, and half the blade of the oar, which lies beside the figure, has been broken off.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

BEAR AND CAT BATTLE

ENCOUNTER IN THE JUNGLES OF COLORADO.

Experience of a Young Lieutenant While Grubbing for Opals—His Musings Are Suddenly Ended by an Indian in His War Bonnet.

Contest of the Beasts.

Wherever the sun could force his rays between the clefts of the mountain or through the heavy foliage of the forest which skirted the base of the hills he carried conviction to the mind of all who suffered from the heat that the dog days were at hand. Alternately cool in the delightful shade of the trees, with the murmur of the rushing mountain brook to lull one to drowsiness, and hot with the fierce heat as the sun cut his way through, the day was one of oppression mixed with just enough qualification to make the southern trend of the mountains of Colorado the ideal outing spot of the American continent. It would be pleasant under almost any condition, but for the little party encamped in the lower regions of the San Juan country there was little of pleasure. There was too much of duty and possible danger to render anyone oblivious of his business in the world and to aid him in the full enjoyment of the scene.

Away back in the years when the Ute was a troublesome quantity and old Colorow was threatening to exterminate every white man who entered the sacred confines of the reservation a small party of cavalry wearing the uniform and trappings of the regular army went into camp at the foot of the mountains and prepared to head off any outbreak from that direction. The squad—for it was little more—was the advance guard of a force sent out to check an incipient raid. It consisted of parts of two troops of bronzed warriors who had seen considerable service in the Apache country south of the grand canyon. The captain of one troop was in command and he had with him several officers of his own and the other troop. Horses and men were weary with a long ride during the heat of the day over the almost insurmountable passes of the mountains.

"INJUN KILL," SAID THE BRAVE.

As the party approached the spot where the trail crossed the brook a young officer who had been sent forward to select a good place for the camp reported: "Good place here, sir. Plenty of forage and water for the cattle and shade for the men."

"All right, Hunter," was the reply, as Captain Morris swung his horse to the rear. "Halt! Dismount. Gentlemen, we will go into camp here. Hunter, establish the guard lines and see that no man leaves the camp. We are near the reservation and the fellow who strays is liable to get hurt. Pass the word, gentlemen."

Camp Quickly Pitched.

So saying, the captain dismounted, tossed his bridle rein to his orderly and, placing his back against a tree, lazily superintended the job of pitching camp from this coign of vantage. With the celerity of long years of discipline and service, the wilderness became a habitable abode for the detachment in an incredible short time. The corrals were roped off, the horses watered and placed under the charge of a couple of men to graze and the white wall tents of the officers and the walled Sibleys of the men placed in regular form. As is customary in that benighted region of fierce heat and sudden cold, the march came to an end in the early afternoon, while the sun even in the mountains was several hours high. Scouts were sent forward and everything done to prevent the unnoticed approach of white or red man. Supper was cooked and dispatched with the speed and appetite which is engendered in the Alps of America and the camp settled down to the routine of camp duty.

Among the officers was a young man recently joined, who had a taste for mineralogy and metallurgy. He smoked his pipe in quiet for a time and then, having no duty to bother him, strolled toward the guard quarters to chat with Hunter. He cast more than one approving glance at a huge precipice which overhung the gorge where the camp was pitched. Like a mighty cathedral those rocks rose from the green bushes which studded the landscape at their base. Piled up in the confusion of nature they broke into terraces, with here and there a break which let in the light of the setting sun as if some infinite architect had carved windows. Away near the summit the rocks broke and separated into a number of peaks, which seemed like innumerable spires, while at the very apex was a white, smooth peak, on the surface of which seemingly was placed a dark cross. Surrounded as it was with the other magnificent mountains, with the angry brook rushing between and over the trail, the picture was one of grandeur and beauty not to be found surpassed by any land under the heaven's canopy.

Discovers an Opal.

Young Howard walks slowly and musingly toward where Hunter was busily completing his details for the night. He nodded at times and the men respectfully watched the "dreamer," as he was called when he was not in hearing distance. Suddenly he stopped and kicked at a rock at his feet. He turned it over with his boot a couple of times and then stooped to examine it more closely. Then he picked it up and finished his walk without haste or apparent emotion.

"Well, Howard, what did you find? a moonstone?" called Hunter, chaffingly.

"Not exactly," drawled Howard. "It's better than that, unless you have the superstition of your Irish ancestry. It's a fine opal. I imagine a man could pick up some good specimens of turquoise around here if he gave his mind to it. I am half inclined to go out to that cliff and see what I can dig out of it," and he gazed thoughtfully in the direction indicated.

"Stand fast, my boy. You heard the old man say that no one was to pass the lines. It's dangerous, and you take my advice and stay inside."

"This is before the hours of challenge, isn't it?" said Howard.

"We have no such think in the enemies' country," was the blunt reply. "I think it would be well not to go. I don't lay any orders on you, but if you go I would let the old man know whither and would take a rifle."

"Of course. Join me? But then you have that beastly guard duty. Well, so long." So saying, Mr. Howard turned back and sought the commander's tent and preferred his request to go to the cliff to explore for stones. While the two officers were talking of the matter they were joined by Hunter, who made his report and was about to return to quarters, when the captain called after him.

"See any signs of Indians?"

"No, sir, I fancy they are not in our immediate vicinity, but the scouts are well to the front, and if they see anything they are ordered to report at once."

"Right. Well, Mr. Howard, I will not object, but keep this side of the scout lines and don't get out of sight of the camp. If you need anything fire your rifle and we will come to you."

The young man turned and rapidly strode to his tent near by, took down his rifle and swung it over his back, and, then, seizing a small geologist's kit, started out to see what he could find. He was soon deep in the underbrush, which lined the trail and extended some distance on the face of the cliff. He plunged into it and made directly for the cliff, intending to ascend it if possible and take in some of the views from higher altitudes. He had to struggle to get through and changed his course more than once before he struck a spot which promised well for the ascent. He stopped for a moment and wiped the sweat from his forehead before commencing what promised to be a hard climb.

HE CROUCHED CLOSE TO THE CLIFF.

He scanned the flat surface of that cliff for some time before he discovered any foothold. But finally he saw what seemed to be a winding stair cut in the rocks and crossing the cliff from east to west. He commenced the ascent and made very satisfactory progress until he reached a shelf on the rocks nearly fifty feet from the base of the cliff. He rested a moment and looked about for some means of continuing the ascent, but without avail. He sat down on the shelf and ruminated for a time. Just as he was about to descend he observed a fine stone peeping out of its bed in the rock. He instantly got out hammer and chisel and began to dig that stone out. He worked hard and had the jewel loose when he noticed small pieces of stone and quantities of dust were descending on his head.

He was not much of a woodman, but he knew that some cause must have produced that dusty rain. He paused in his work and cast an upward glance of mingled apprehension and reproach and was astonished to see the tawny hide and glittering eyes of a huge catamount crouched above him on another shelf not more than twenty-five feet from where he sat. He was no coward, yet he had never held a private interview with a catamount and experienced no desire to come to close quarters. It was evident the cat was preparing to leap and Howard did some hard thinking. Finally he crouched close to the cliff and signaled the cat to come. The cat did so.

With a snarl and showing of its fearful teeth that cat launched itself downward like a yellow cloud. It missed the shelf because it was too narrow to afford much of a chance in such a leap, but its claws clutched the edge and the animal was in the act of making a desperate and probably successful effort to scramble up to where the young lieutenant was flattened against the cliff. Howard redeemed himself in this juncture by giving the cat a swift kick in the whiskers. This dislodged the angry beast, and, with a howl of rage, it partly twisted itself about and sprang wildly out into space. It cleared the intervening rocks and fell like a wet blanket on the roof of a huge cinnamon bear, which had been sleeping the hot hours away in a clump of bushes at the base of the cliff.

Then the fun commenced. That cinnamon let go his right and that cat was sent sprawling twenty feet. The cat was a fighter and resented the insult by declaring war on the spot. He not only declared, but he prepared to mix with the bear. He sprang at bruin's throat, but the bear ducked skillfully and clawed a handful of wool from the cat's back. The cat made another rush and succeeded this time in fastening his fangs in the bear's shoulders. The bear immediately took a chancery hold and began his famous representation of now to squeeze a fellow to death.

The cat was game, nearly as large as the bear and full of fight, and with a desperate effort he tore himself loose and also made several ragged holes in the bear's fur and hide with the claws with which his hind feet were endowed. Again they came together and Howard, who had been standing in a trance watching the fierce combat, regained his senses long enough to take aim at the battling brutes with his good rifle. He stepped near the edge of the cliff and was about to turn loose with his gun when the sharp report of a rifle above him caused him to lose his balance and he tumbled headlong to join bear and cat.

"Injun" on the Scene.

For a time he thought he had been shot, but as he felt none the worse after the tumble, having dropped into some heavily foliaged bushes, he jumped to his feet and opened fire on the fighters. As he did so the cat sprang into the air and fell with widely sprawling legs at quite a distance, and then lay still after clawing up all the bushes near it, while the bear spun around and around as if chasing its own tail. Howard knelt and sent in another shot, as there was an echo from up the cliff. This time the bear slowly straightened and with several bullets in his body yielded up the ghost. Howard started to examine the quarries when he was astounded to see an Indian in a mongrel costume of cavalry trousers, leather shirt and war bonnet of eagle feathers rapidly rush down the cliff and claim everything in sight.

"Injun kill," said the brave, with a sweep of his arm.

"Injun did nothing of the sort," was the retort as Howard pushed a lot of cartridges into the magazine of his rifle. "Soldier kill and soldier will just boss the job, if it's all the same to you, my buck."

The "injun" showed a desire to mix war medicine, and it is doubtful what the result would have been but for the timely arrival of Captain Morris and a squad of troopers on the run. The captain took in the situation at a glance and ordered the Indian arrested for shooting off of the reservation, loaded the bear and cat on the men and lead the way back to camp. He also called in the scouts and gave them a good rawhiding. As a conclusion to his monologue he remarked: "If it had not been for the recklessness of this young fellow I would not have known that there was a Ute in Colorado, excepting by consulting the war maps and geography. Get away with you and see if you can redeem yourselves. Gentlemen, hereafter orders not to leave camp apply to officers as well as men."

Good Advice, Though.

At a certain high school it is the custom (says the Chicago Tribune) to discuss briefly the morning's news before taking up the regular work of the day. One morning, not long ago, paper in hand, the teacher ascended to her desk. Before her were the bright young faces of those intrusted to her care. She spread the paper upon the desk, and glanced over the first page. "First of all," she said, "I see this heading: 'Pool-Room Raided.'" She raised her head, and a note of deep feeling came into her voice. "Boys," she continued, "never touch a cue." There was not a dry eye in the house.

It costs more to keep a bicycle in repair than it does to keep an old girl looking young.

Many men make money in the good old-fashioned way, and then lose it in experimenting.

A Summer Milk Cooler.

For cooling milk, the plan illustrated below has been in successful use. The essential are a well of good size and cool water. Three cans are all that are needed in my creamery, each one holding a milking, which allows thirty-six hours for each setting. The cans should have covers to keep out dirt and insects, but not be air-tight, and can be made to hold a larger quantity where more cows are kept, but should be about three times the height of the diameter, with the space between the curb floor and the case roller to allow the can to pass freely through. One point to be kept in mind is to see that the cans are not set too deep in rainy weather, as the water may rise and overturn the milk. Snaps are used on the ends of the rope to attach the can, as seen in Fig. 1. The cover of the case is so made that when closed it slants back to shed rain. The front piece, Fig. 2, is detachable and sets in so that when closed it can be locked with a padlock. All who have seen it think highly of it, as it is a creamery without the use of ice, which is expensive to have and a great deal of work to use. Setting of milk in wells is so common that this device ought to be generally used by dairymen with from one to four cows.—M. J. Mallett in Farm and Home.

FIG 2.

Skilled Labor vs. Muscle on the Farm.

The scarcity of good hands for the farm in many parts of the country has been the subject of much comment, but no way has been devised to supply the demand at a fair rate of wages, despite the fact that the cities and towns are filled with able-bodied men who are anxious for some means of earning a livelihood.

The truth is that these men, willing as many of them undoubtedly are, do not make good farm hands. Three or four decades ago, when muscle was one of the great requirements for farm work, any man with a broad back and brawny arms could be utilized on the farm to good advantage, but now it takes more skilled labor to run a farm, and men who have not learned the trade are next to useless. We want more farmers these days and fewer roustabouts.

We never see the groups, the hundreds of idling men and boys on the street corners, without thinking, "Oh, the pity of it!" The most of them are bright enough and quick enough to learn, and would make good farm laborers if they could once be caught and retained and wooed away from the city savagery and shiftlessness.

We need a school of agriculture—a practical institution for just such fellows as these—boys that would not want to be professors and editors, lecturers and the like, but who would be willing to apply the knowledge acquired in gaining a livelihood for themselves on the farm.—Colman's Rural World.

Storing Apples in Boxes.

Square boxes with open tops and separated by cleats nailed across the corners so as to allow air to circulate over them are better than barrels to store apples in. We saw some recently in the fruit cellar of a horticultural friend, says the Cultivator. The apples are put into these boxes in the orchard, loaded into wagons, and are drawn to the cellar, where they are piled one above the other, nearly to the ceiling. The boxes are made to hold a full bushel each, and can be easily handled without disturbing the fruit. There is great injury to fruit even from the most careful handling. When the bloom is off, it can never be exactly what it was before.

The square boxes take less room than the same quantity of apples would in barrels, and are much better than if put in bins, where the natural heating of the apples piled one upon the other induces rot, which once started quickly spreads. The boxes are made of solid boards, and are, therefore, heavier as well as more costly than the boxes used in harvesting potatoes.

Shoulder Galls.

At this season of the year, when the farmers' horses are at hard work, their shoulders are very liable to gall. A man who works his team notoriously hard in the spring never galls them. Calling at his stable to learn the reason I had no occasion to ask a question. The team had just returned from the field, and the farmer was engaged at one horse and his hired man at the other sponging their shoulders with water. This is done every time they come into the stable after hard work, and freedom from shoulder abrasions and consequent comfort of the animals is the natural result. When horses return from hard work it may be noticed that they try to rub their shoulders against the stall to allay irritation. A humane man will not withhold the soothing influence of the application of a little water.—Farm and Fireside.

The Dairy.

The cow, to make good milk, needs good blood.

Good feeding is the foundation of all profitable dairying.

A stunted calf means an inferior cow or steer.

It is less trouble to wean the calf at the start and feed it than to allow it to suck and wean it at the end.

Generally the more docile the calf the better milker will be the cow.

The dairy farm should grow continually richer, and it will do so very readily if proper management is given.

In making butter for the best market it is essential to secure uniformity in color, in texture, in salting and in packing, leaving no salt in the butter.

If the cow is not free from disease care of the utensils will not prevent the germs of disease from entering through the milk.

It is by no means a question of thoroughbreds, as all fairly good cows will make good cream, from which good butter can be made, when the care and conditions are right.

An overfed cow will not digest all of her food and in this way her milk and the butter made from it will be injured. To secure the best results good digestion and assimilation are very essential.

The cow inherits the habit of producing well at the pail or she inherits the habit of producing fat on her ribs and back. In the dairy the former is what is wanted.

The Apiary.

Bees, small fruit and poultry make a good combination.

Golden rod gives a rich, thick honey of a golden color.

The queen bee is the only perfectly developed female in the hive.

A young queen is more liable to produce a working progeny, and an old one drones.

It is best to construct the size of the hive to suit the size of the colony. This can be done by the use of division boards.

An examination of the hive should be made and all unnecessary brood comb be removed, as an oversupply of worthless drones is very objectionable.

Nut Culture.

Nut culture promises to be a recognized industry in this country within a few years. Many groves of chestnuts have been started, and along the Pacific coast, filbert culture is being considered. In the last three months of 1895, France alone sent us $295,890.85 worth of nuts, of which $84,529.70 went for walnuts. Spain sent $47,439.28 worth of nuts, mostly filberts and almonds. Italy sent $93,017.79 worth—about $5,000 worth of almonds and the rest nearly equally divided between filberts and chestnuts. These figures cover only one-quarter of the year, and it is evident that there is an opening here for the American nut grower to add to his revenue.

Odds and Ends.

If it is not convenient to fill flannel bags for the sick room with sand, bran will answer the purpose very well and will retain the heat a long time.

Wormwood boiled in vinegar and applied as hot as can be borne on a sprain or bruise, is an invaluable remedy. The affected member should afterward be rolled in flannel to retain the heat.

Before commencing to seed raisins, after the stems are removed, cover the fruit with very hot water and let it stand a few moments. Drain the water off and the seeds may then be removed quite easily.

Grapes are excellent for leanness, therefore may be indulged in freely, and in the winter small doses of cod liver oil, commencing with a teaspoonful immediately after a meal, will often assist materially in producing flesh.

When unfortunate enough to spill hot grease upon the top of a clean, white kitchen table, quickly pour cold water upon it and that will cool it at once. This prevents the wood from absorbing the grease, which then can be easily removed.

To remove an odor from a barrel, half fill it with cold water. Heat half a dozen stones the size of the palm of the hand until they are red hot and throw them into the water, and let the water remain in the barrel until cold; then rinse the barrel with clean, cold water.

Throughout all the warmer months one eats more sour vegetables and more fruit. As these are bad for the teeth, while generally excellent for the stomach, extra care should be taken in much brushing, and care that the lime of the teeth is not eaten into by the acid. After every meal is not too often to brush the teeth, and it should be conscientiously done while this sort of food is on the table.

TURNED TO STONE IN A DAY.

A Curious Tale of Sudden Death and Transformation.

A story that reads like a chapter from "The Arabian Nights," but which is so well authenticated as to admit of no doubt as to its credibility, comes from Cleo Springs, Ok.

Cleo Springs is one of the most beautiful spots in the Oklahoma country, and the spas from which it takes its name are possessed of peculiar medicinal properties. Last Sunday Miss Frances Perkins, formerly of St. John's, in Stafford County, Kan., with a party of friends, was out walking in one of the picturesque groves near the little village, and the attention of the group was attracted by some egg-shaped rocks which they found along the path. They were about the size and shape of a loaf of rye bread, but hollow in the center. One of the party broke one of these peculiar rocks and found that the cavity contained about a pint of clear water, while the interior of the rock was lined with beautiful crystals. The water in the first rock broken was spilled. The idea that the water might be endowed with some virtue took possession of Miss Perkins and she announced her intention of drinking the liquid. She held another of the egg-shaped rocks over a bowl and broke it, thus saving all the water. This she poured into a glass and laughingly said: "Here is the water that came not from heaven or from earth," and quaffed it. Fifteen minutes later she was dead. The draught she toasted had been her death potion.

The sequel is the strangest part of the story. The body was taken to her home by her sorrowing young friends and in due time the burial garments were made ready. Her sister went into the death chamber to dress her and as she did so her finger ring came in contact with the body, causing a sound as if it touched marble. It was even so. The body of Miss Perkins had turned to stone. When this was discovered it was decided to bury the body near the house, where it would be safer from grave robbers.

Miss Perkins was one of the brightest young women in the settlement and she was very popular. Her untimely death has caused great sorrow. Judge Edward Merchant, of Stafford County, who is visiting relatives in this city, is authority for the strange story.

Old Gold Workings, Matabeleland.

Matabeleland is studded with old workings, and from the tests that have been applied the ancients would appear to have been marvelously good prospectors. An immense quantity of gold must have been extracted from the country. In their seeking for the precious metal the Arabians did no more than dig deep trenches, and it is exceptional to find they sunk anywhere to more than thirty or forty feet, though in some cases this depth was exceeded. The one, consisting of quartz reef, was rudely treated by roasting. They worked by slave labor, which is proverbially dear, and they must have found enough to recompense them for the upkeep of their mining camps; while of driving from shafts with the necessary ventilation they seem to have had no notion, nor were they able to cope with the general mining difficulty of flooding. Where their primitive practice succeeded so well, as the facts of widespread and careful workings bear witness, it is unlikely that with modern appliances and facilities their successors in title will altogether fail. Of all the reefs that have been found, some are sure to be payable in the end. Whether this or that venture will ultimately succeed it is early days to prophesy, but some, judged by the assays and trial tests, start with an excellent prospect.—Fortnightly Review.

Fought with Fresh Eggs.

Mrs. Riley, who keeps a boarding house at 419 Geary street, and Margaret St. Clair, one of her lodgers, engaged yesterday in a novel fight. It is asserted that Miss St. Clair purchased a bag of fresh eggs and requested Mrs. Riley to allow her to cook some of them on her stove. Mrs. Riley objected. Then, it is stated, Miss St. Clair got into motion. One after another of the choice eggs were thrown at the landlady's head. The young woman was a good shot, and by the time the twelfth egg had been smashed among the frizzes of Mrs. Riley's front-piece that lady was in a deplorable condition. She was mad, too—very mad—and she doubled up her fists and struck her lodger a blow in the eye. Miss St. Clair is something of a pugilist herself. She sent in a right swing, and a cry of pain from Mrs. Riley announced that it had landed. Then there was some close in-fighting. For a time things were pretty lively. The two women were finally separated by some of the lodgers. Later Mrs. Riley had Miss St. Clair arrested on the charge of battering her with eggs.—Los Angeles Herald.

Guarding Royalty's Gold Plate.

About 10,000 pieces of gold plate came up to town from Windsor for the State concert. It was brought by special train under a guard of soldiers, and was hedged round at every step with as elaborate a system of receipts as the heirloom jewels of the empress of Austria. There is about $10,000,000 worth of plate in the care of the gold pantry department.—London Leader.

THE "FIFTY-CENT DOLLAR" AND THE REASON THEREFOR.

With silver at sixty-seven cents an ounce the difference between the value of 371¼ grains of silver as bullion and the same weight of silver coined into a dollar is 48.2 cents. In other words, the silver in our standard dollar is worth as bullion but 51 8 cents—a fraction less than fifty-two cents. Here, then, is a difference in the value of the silver dollar and the same weight of silver bullion of forty-eight cents, a difference that arises out of the fiat of law. That this enhancement of the value of the silver dollar over silver bullion is conferred in some way by the government is questioned by none, but there is a surprisingly wide variance of opinion as to just what this fiat is.

The view that this fiat of law consists in an obligation of the government to redeem its silver dollars in gold on demand is widespread, and this belief, though resting upon absolutely no foundation of fact, is clung to tenaciously by many, by gold monometallists and bimetallists alike. As a matter of fact, the government is under no obligation to redeem its silver dollars in gold, and it has never been its practice to make any provision for such redemption.

So it is not through providing for the redemption of silver dollars in gold that the government makes good the difference between the bullion and coin value of the silver dollar. This difference is made good in a very different way. It is made good, not by treating the silver dollar as a mere token and representative of gold, but by treating it as money. Made available by law for the payment of debts, it shares, in spite of unwise discrimination, the burdens of money with gold, and it is because it is fitted to share these burdens that it is the equal of gold. As serviceable as gold to those in need of money with which to pay for purchases or to settle any ordinary debt the monetary demand falls on the silver dollar equally with gold, and it is the monetary demand that falls on the silver dollar but not on silver bullion that gives silver as coin a greater value than silver as bullion and makes good the difference between the bullion value and coin value of the silver dollar.

The silver dollar is available for use as money, while silver bullion is not. In brief, silver bullion, by the closing of our mints to free coinage, has been demonetized, but the silver dollar, save for the exception clause as to its legal tender quality that makes it possible for individuals to demonetize it by private contract, is monetized as of old. And being monetized it is sought after by those with debts to pay. As gold goes no farther in paying debts dollar for dollar than our silver dollar, those with debts to pay have no preference for gold over silver. Either gold or silver is equally serviceable to them and naturally in tendering payments for debts they will tender that money which they can most readily obtain.

If gold commands a premium, be it ever so slight, debtors will not tender gold in payment of their debts. If they have gold but no other money at hand they will not tender gold, but they will take it to some broker where they can sell it so as to put the premium into their own pockets instead of the pockets of their creditors. And on the other hand, if they have not money in hand of any kind but are dependent on the sale of property, as most debtors are, to realize the needed money, they will not receive gold from those to whom they sell their property but that money which can be had most readily, for even should it happen that the purchasers of their goods had gold in hand such purchasers would not use it in payment, but would sell it for other money that commanded no premium but that would go just as far in paying for their purchases, for by so doing they would make a profit of the premium.

For instance, suppose gold commanded a premium of one-half of one per cent., or, in other words, that one hundred silver dollars and a fifty-cent piece besides could be had in exchange for $100 in gold coin, it is clear that no one having this gold and aware of this premium would pay it away at its face value, but would, if obliged to part with it, take it around and sell it to the bullion broker offering the premium so as to pocket the fifty-cent piece that was offered as a premium for every $100 of gold. Thus the debtor with a debt to pay and knowing full well that one hundred silver dollars would go just as far as $100 in gold would make no effort to get gold to tender in payment, or if he had gold he would sell it for silver so as to make the fifty cents. The result, of course, would be that those having gold and payments to make would strive to dispose of their gold in exchange for silver. Consequently everyone who possesses gold but could not afford to hoard it and keep it in idleness would not pass it away at its face value, but would strive to sell it so as to make a profit of the premium, while no one would pay this premium who had not some especial use to which to put gold and for which use silver would not serve.

So just so long as gold commanded a premium there would be pressure to sell it and this would tend to wipe out the premium. Moreover while the premium remained, practically no monetary demand would fall on gold, for it is to the advantage of everyone with payments to make to pay in the cheapest dollar. Consequently the monetary demand for silver would be increased just as the monetary demand for gold fell off, and so the constant tendency of the silver dollar would be to rise and the gold to fall until the difference in the value of the two coins was bridged over and the premium on gold disappeared.

Thus we see that it is the law of self interest that impels debtors to pay in that dollar which is cheapest that holds the silver dollar at par with gold. In short, it is the fiat of law that monetizes the silver dollar which makes it the equal of gold.

If this law was extended to silver bullion by opening our mints to the free coinage of silver, then silver bullion would become available as money and the monetary demand would fall upon silver bullion as it now falls upon gold bullion. Consequently silver bullion would become the equal of silver coin, for the law of self interest thst impels the use of the cheaper money of full debt paying power to the exclusion of the dearer would force silver bullion to rise to a par with silver coin and force silver coin and bullion to a par with gold. Until this parity was restored gold would remain out of circulation and the monetary demand would fall on silver with double force. Consequently silver would rise and gold fall and thus the parity between the two metals restored and maintained just as the parity between our silver dollar and gold is now maintained,—in other words by the monetary demand falling on the cheapest dollar.

Our silver dollar is a "fifty-cent dollar" only in the sense that its bullion value is but little more than half of its face value. As bullion it is indeed worth but 52 cents, but as a coin it is the equal of gold. On a silver dollar falls a monetary demand that cannot be felt by silver bullion so long as our mints are closed to the free coinage of silver, and consequently the silver dollar has a greater value than the silver bullion of which it is composed. Not that the silver dollar is in any way redeemable in gold; but simply because the demand for the silver dollar is much greater than the demand for silver bullion. If the mints were open to the free coinage of silver, this could not be; for then the monetary demand would spread over silver equally with silver coin. The result would be that silver coined and silver uncoined would have one and the same value.

So, under free coinage, we would coin no "fifty-cent dollar;" we would coin no dollar that would be worth more as coin than as bullion; for the 371½ grains of pure silver of which the silver dollar is made would everywhere have the value of the silver dollar, whether coined or not.

Several of the lakes in Lassen county, notably Eagle and Honey lakes, have gradually increased in depth and size until much country on their banks has been overflowed. The road which formerly passed around the shores of Eagle lake is now covered with water to a depth of twelve feet, and the new road which was built in its stead will soon also be covered, should the present increase continue. At Honey lake the same condition exists, and several farms have been submerged. In Grasshopper valley the large ranch on which Ex-Surveyor General Shanklin and the Hornlein Bros. spent many thousands of dollars in erecting reservoirs for storage for irrigation purposes has, by this same freak of nature, become almost a swamp, some 10,000 acres of it being under water.

The Dixon Tribune thus sets forth the difference between the "agriculturist" and the farmer: "A farmer gets up at crack of day, feeds his stock and eats his breakfast at sun up. After his frugal meal he hitches up his team to the plow and taking the hard handles in his horny hands he calls 'gee haw' to his team and plows the long and weary day. The agriculturalist gets up at 8 o'clock in the morning, after an easy breakfast, picks his teeth, pulls on his gloves, orders his horse and buggy and drives to town."

---

Says the Ventura Independent: "The indications are that the Winter of 1896-97 will be an unusually wet one. The Summer storms in the mountains have been very severe. Rain has fallen and quite heavily over the whole Pacific Coast. The great wet Winters of 1862, 1867 and 1884 were preceded by heavy Summer storms in the mountains, and all the old-timers throughout the State are prophecying a hard and wet Winter. Our farmers would do well to take warning and prepare for an early and severe Winter."

BORN.

At Fort Independence, Sept. 30, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Gill—a daughter.

A. W. Eibeshutz is away on a business trip to San Francisco.

The Pool and Bar Privileges have been awarded to J. C. Irwin for the coming Fair.

Mrs. J. J. Morton, of Keeler, is visiting her mother, Mrs. J. N. Rose, of this place.

Cash premiums and Diplomas will be given for meritel displays in all departments of the Fair.

Every person should take an interest in making the display at the Pavilion as creditable as possible.

Judge Virden, after presiding over our Superior Court for the past two weeks, left for his home at Bridgeport, Mono county, Thursday morning.

If our gold miners set to work as many of them are doing now, on their own hook, by means of arrastras, even in many of the old silver districts they will find it easier to get out one ounce of gold than sixteen of silver.

Sheriff Given started below Thursday morning having in charge Vincent Estrada and Lee Duck, the Mexican and Chinaman found guilty of selling whisky to Indians, and sentenced to serve three and five years, respectively, in the State Prison at Folsom.

In another column will be found the announcement of John Anton, as a candidate for the office of Supervisor for the 4th District. Mr. Anton is an old resident of Lone Pine, and is well qualified to fill the office to which he aspires. Being an old resident, he well knows the wants of the people of the District, and if elected, will make a good, conscientious Supervisor.

There has been some inquiry about the nearest route from this valley to Randsburg, by wagon. Go to Darwin, thence to Panamint Junction; cross the Argus range through Shepherd's Canyon, strike the old Modock road on west side of Panamint valley and turn south. Get supply of water in the canyon, the road through which is steep but was little damaged by the season's storm.

The Return and the account of sales and the Annual Account of the Guardian of the person and estate of the Vagt minors came on regularly to be heard in the Superior Court on Thursday, the 24th day of September, 1896. Mr. H. Glade, the Guardian appeared, and after a full examination of all the matters, the Court confirmed the sales made under the order of the Court, and as the Annual Account was found entirely satisfactory and correct the same was settled and allowed as rendered.

Last evening a four-horse team attached to a hay wagon became frightened in some manner in front of Wood's store, on Edwards street, and started to run. They turned around the corner of Mairs' stable, throwing the driver, Wm. Dean, off, and he, hanging on to the reins, was dragged about fifty yards, the wagon being left wrecked in the alley way. The team continued in its mad career, running completely around the block, bringing up againgst Irwin's hitching post. Two of the horses continued to run down Market street, and turning at Davis' shoe shop ran afoul of a cart, overturning it, springing the axle and breaking it generally before they were caught.

Attempt to Escape.

Vincent Estrada, alias Vaquerita, recently convicted of furnishing whisky to Indians and sentenced to serve three years in the State Prison, made an unsuccessful break for liberty Wednesday morning. Deputy Sheriff Willis allowed him to go out to empty a bucket of slop, accompanying him, however. As soon as he had emptied the bucket he made for the fence, getting over it, started to run, with the Deputy a close second. After running about fifty yards he was overhauled and taken back to jail, but not without a struggle, as the Deputy lost a good, serviceable front tooth in the encounter.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

In the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California.

WEDNESDAY, Sept. 30, 1896, 3 o'clock p. m.

Present—Hon. W. H. Virden, Acting Judge, Sheriff and Clerk.

The Grand Jury for the year 1896 having returned into Court and announced that they were ready to report, roll of jurors were called, all present.

Whereupon the following report was handed in:

INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL. September 30th, 1896.

To the Hon. W. H. Virden, Acting Judge of the Superior Court of Inyo Co., Cal.

The Grand Jury impaneled by you for the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 29th day of September, 1896, respectfully submit the following report:

We have examined into two (2) criminal cases presented before us, but have found no indictment.

We have examined the County buildings and find all in good order.

We would suggest that the Hon. Board of Supervisors have a large fire-proof window put in the south wall of the Recorder's vault, as a means of better light and ventilation, and we believe, additional security to the records contained in said vault. We also suggest that the window in the Treasurer's vault be repaired.

We have examined the books of the different County Officers, as far as our limited time would permit, and find them neat and correct.

We have carefully considered sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the Act known as the new "County Government Bill," and from our observations and such information as we have been able to gather, believe that the requirements of said sections have been fully complied with by the various officers.

We have carefully examined the County Hospital and buildings pertaining thereto, and find them kept in a cleanly and orderly manner. At the present time there are five patients, who express themselves as well cared for and perfectly satisfied.

R. LOVE, Foreman.

Jury discharged.

Southeastern Mining Interests.

The silver and lead mining interests of Cerro Gordo, Darwin and Modock are practically at a standstill; all ore teams have been hauled off, shipments suspended and business generally at a lower ebb than for many years past. Further out, however, in the gold districts, there is considerable stir, indicating much future activity all around those directions. Geo. Lewis has a working bond on the Wilson & Wibbelt property, near Mountain Springs Canyon, with W. R. Johnson in charge for the owners. At Thompson's Canyon, near Modock in the same (Argus) range, Fred Wallace and Geo. McAffrey are building arrastras, the success of which, in view of their well-developed gold mine, can hardly be doubted. At Snow Canyon considerable ore is being extracted. It is conceded that the trial run of the Argus G. M. Co's. new mill was quite satisfactory, and Manager Garlick is expected there to put in a cyanide plant. Paul Pfefferle is banging away at his Free Coinage (gold) mine. At the old Panamint Junction Frank Cathray is running an arrastra on good, free gold ore from a small mine called the Queen, located in a hill a little south and detached from the Coso range. Across Panamint Valley, in the Telescope mountains, the miners centering about Pleasant Canyon have organized a new mining district under the name of South Park, with Mr. King as Recorder. It comprises about the southern half of the old Panamint District, from which it is segregated. About twenty-five men are prospecting, including parties known as the George Montgomery and the Frank Cole outfits. The late run of the Golden West mill, on ore from the Anthony mines, is reported to have resulted in a clean-up of about $7,000. A small force now working the principal mine, the Mineral Ranch, has out from fifty to sixty tons of fine ore. King & Norris, the owners, are prosecuting work on their mine at Secret Spring—by a long ways one of the most extensive finds of free, from $5 to $50 gold ore ever made in this county. In Tuba Canyon, between Wild Rose and Narboe Canyons, Jack Curran and Tim Henneby are working on their late gold discovery—from all accounts an important one. On the east side of the range the Death Valley M. Co. are working three or four men, the manager having at present gone to Los Angeles. The Salt Lake company owning the Confidence mine and mill on the east side of Death Valley in the Amargosa mountains have not resumed operations, neither has it paid a dollar of numerous debts. The old Slate Range is being again prospected, with work going on at three places, mostly by parties from Goler and Randsburg.

Democratic Assembly Nomination.

A regular meeting of the Democratic County Central Committee was held at Independence, on the 29th ult., for the purpose of nominating a candidate for the Assembly. The following named members were present: E. Robinson, Chairman, G. P. Bourland, J. A. McKenzie, W. H. Wells, W. L. Hunter and Irv. H. Mulholland, Secretary. On motion of W. L. Hunter, seconded by W. H. Wells, Leander Case of Bishop was unanimously nominated for the position, and G. P. Bourland was appointed a committee of one to confer with the Populists and endeavor to secure the endorsement of Mr. Case. It is almost certain that the Populists will not hesitate to do this, as the Democrats endorsed their nominee two years ago. The Democrats of Mono were notified by telegraph of the action taken here and there is no doubt but that Mr. Case will be made the unanimous candidate for the District.

Railroad Rates for the District Fair.

The Carson & Colorado Railway Company announce the following special rates of fares and freights during the annual Eighteenth District Fair;

The ticket rates will be as follows: From Keeler, $1 50; Lone Pine, 75 cents; Bishop, $2 00; Benton, $3 50; Candelaria and Belleville, $6 00; Sodaville, $7; Hawthorne, $8. Tickets on sale at Keeler and Lone Pine on Saturday and Tuesday, October 3d and 5th, void after Monday, October 12th; and on sale at stations north of Independence on Monday, October 5th, void after Tuesday, October 13th.

On shipments for exhibition the company will put in force the rates and conditions quoted for the Fair held at Independence in 1892. Consignees or exhibitors must surrender to the company's agent the expense bill covering charges to the Fair accompanied with a certificate of the Secretary of the Association stating that the property has been on exhibition, and has not changed hands, when the agent will refund the charges for transportation to the Fair. Live stock shipped under company's contract which has paid charges to the Fair will be returned free to the original shipping point, but the first charges will not be returned. Sulkies, etc., will be billed free both way, and men in charge allowed one-half first-class fare each way.

From Aberdeen

J. W. Callaway has been serving as a juror for the last week.

J. Belser, who has been at Aberdeen station, has returned to Independence.

Mr. Will Hines, who has been working at Big Pine for some time past, is at home for a short stay.

Mr. D. M. Rogers was on the sick list last Sunday, but we are glad to see he is able to be about again.

Many dogs are considered a sign of poverty. If this sign holds good, Aberdeen must be poor indeed, the population in dogs exceeds that of human beings. There ought to be a dog fair in connection with the agricultural fair. The baby town would certainly carry off the honors.

AURORA.

The letters addressed to the following persons remain uncalled for at Thebe postoffice: Mark Donald, T. Custer and Thomas B. Scovil.

IF PESTERED DAY AND NIGHT

With nervousness, take Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which invigorates and tranquilizes the nervous system. The basis of recovery is a reform in errors of digestion. The epigastric nerve and brain are united in the closest bond of sympathy, so that dyspeptic symptoms in the gastric region are always accompanied by hurtful reflex nervous action. Both are remedied by the Bitters, which also cures malaria, biliousness, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Tiburzi, the notorious Sicilian bandit, enjoyed the distinction of having been sentenced to death thirty-seven times.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

THE DEACON'S DISAPPEARANCE

By WILLIAM LEIGHTON.

Many years ago, when I first came to Edinburgh and was attending the university, I became acquainted with the family of Mr. Duncan Macgillivray, who lived in Borthwick's Close. He occupied the dignified position in those days of a deacon, his craft being that of the hammermen, and therefore may be supposed to have been pretty well to do in the world, a fact of some importance to me, who was steeped in the blessings of a £10 bursary, supplemented by an occasional bag of meal and a junket of salt beef, not the very best kind of food for the muses, then worshiped by me. So it was that I had a great love for Mrs Macgillivray's tea table, and by consequence a respect for the mistress herself.

One afternoon, when I resorted to my old haunt, expecting to find the hearth gods all in good humor, as usual, I was surprised to meet Mrs. Macgillivray in the lobby, with a face whereofrom the accustomed smile was totally banished and its place occupied by pale fear.

"What has happened?" inquired I as I took her trembling hand.

"Oh, have you not heard?" replied she.

"Nothing," added I, with increased apprehension.

"I have neither seen nor heard o' the deacon since yesterday morning after breakfast," was the announcement.

"A mere case of absence," said I, with an effort at cheerfulness. "It is not a case of missing."

"Ye may gie it ony name ye please," said she, "but the like has never happened since the day o' our marriage, and ye know that the deacon was aye punctual, aye to a very minute."

I was forced to admit that that was true, yet I could see no great reason for fear, and proceeding with her to the parlor I took a seat alongside of her with a view to get some further information. I saw that as a friend of the family I had something to do, and my first effort was to procure all the information she could give me, preparatory to my undertaking a search for so important a personage as the deacon of the hammermen of Edinburgh.

There was, however, wonderfully little to be got. She could tell me of no reason for his absence. There was no journey he had intended to undertake. He had no habits of intemperance which might have laid him up in a tavern nor any loose inclinations that could have wiled him into any of the dens of the dissolute. Neither, so far as she could say, had he any money upon him to tempt the robber and the murderer. Then inquiries had already been made in almost every quarter where he was known to frequent, so that if I had started upon the instant I might have found it difficult to know in what direction to turn myself. Our conversation was getting exhausted, as every suggestion fell away, leaving only an addition to the prevailing gloom, when I started, more by chance than good guidance, the question whether the deacon had any enemies.

I was surprised to meet Mrs. Macgillivray in the lobby.

To this I got an answer which surprised me, for of all the men in the world the deacon might have been supposed to possess an immunity from the incursions of revenge.

"I had forgotten," said she as she seemed to revert to some idea which startled her. "Yes, there is one man I fear. Strange I never thought of it till ye put the question; yes, his own brother, o' the same blood, born of the same mother—Angus Macgillivray, flesher in the Fleshmarket Close. That man has been the very curse o' our family. He was a sweetheart o' mine before I got acquainted with the deacon, but I never liked him so that I could have married him, or rather I aye feared him for his passions, let alone his trade o' killing lambs. He never forgave our marriage, and I'm no sure if he didna hate me as much as he did his brother. He never came to see us, though the deacon often invited him, prayed him to let bygones be bygones, nor even after he married a wife o' his ain did he forget and forgive, just as if he felt dissatisfied that he had na got some revenge, and then, to make things waur, the deacon got rich as he got poor, a change that never could be forgiven. So things went on for years, nae reconciliation, but as their ways lay different and they seldom met there were few opportunities for quarrels. Now a' thae things come up upon me, and mair, for it is only six months syne that Angus, having met the deacon in a tavern, got into wrath and made threats which forced the deacon to swear a lawborrows against him."

These words, uttered in the peculiar tone of grief and fear, made an impression upon me which I tried to conceal, and it was aggravated by that involuntary action of the nerves which doctors call "working up," an effect consequent upon a process of reasoning where all the ideas are led by the feelings. I sat for some time without speaking, for I felt that it would have made matters worse to admit what I thought, and an effort to cheer does not do much good unless it is backed by some indisputable fact of a favorable kind. I did not even know what to suggest in aid of further inquiry, but I endeavored to ascertain whether any one had called at Angus' flesh booth, to know whether he was at home, and having got something like a negative from her I resolved within my own mind to find out what I could in this direction.

I accordingly left her with some words calculated to assure her, and bending my steps to the flesh market I met several friends of the well known deacon, all of whom had heard of his unaccountable disappearance without being able to suggest any mode of accounting for him. On arriving at the market I made at once for Angus Macgillivray's booth. He was not there, and a boy who served the customers answered to my inquiry that he had not seen his master since the morning of the previous day. I got from the boy the place of his master's residence, and though in the chance of finding him there I might have hesitated as to the propriety of a direct call, what I resolved was to see his wife in his (by me) supposed absence.

Angus, I found, lived at the corner of the turn which the Cowgate makes into the Grassmarket, and thither I bent my steps. Nor was it many minutes before I was in the presence of Mrs. Angus Macgillivray, but what was my wonderment to find this woman in very much the same condition as that in which I found the wife of the deacon. Her husband had left the house the previous day after breakfast without saying a word that he was to be otherwise engaged than at his stall, and as it was his invariable habit to tell her when he was to go to the country (which he often did) for cattle she could not account for his absence in any way.

So far there was a difference between the conditions of the sisters-in-law that Mrs. Angus Macgillivray did not entertain any apprehension that any violence had overtaken her husband, yet it was clear enough, even from the suspicious eye she cast upon me while making the inquiries, that she was not free from the fear of some untoward accident. She even questioned me as to my motive for calling, as if she thought I had something to tell and was afraid to tell it, and I had some difficulty in satisfying her that my object was not in any way connected with the circumstances of his disappearance. At all hazards, it was my especial care to avoid any reference to the deacon, and especially his absence, for as she doubtless knew that the enmity was all on one side—that of her husband—she might have drawn, with very different feelings, the same conclusion at which her sister-in-law had arrived.

Having left this woman also in a very unhappy condition, I stepped to the bailies' office and inquired there whether any search had been made by any of the officers or constables, but here again I was met by the remark that a two days' absence did not form even a ground for such a fear of any occurrence either disastrous or fatal as would authorize any search by the authorities of the city. I had my reason for a different conclusion, but I was necessarily restrained from telling my story by a fear of throwing suspicion upon a man vindictive enough to take revenge upon me.

On going toward Borthwick's Close, with the intention of again seeing the deaconess—for so these great dignitaries were sometimes called at that time when corporations were a species of dominions or powers—I met Andrew Girvan, her brother, a currier, who lived in Niddry's Wynd. A sensible man, not prone to fancies, he took a very different view.

"I have been everywhere I could think of," said he, "but I can find no trace."

"Everywhere but the house of his brother," said I, fixing my eyes on him.

"The house of his brother!" rejoined he. "What on earth would take me there, the place of all others he would avoid?"

"Very true, but what would you think were you to find that Angus is also missing, having left his house about the same time?" said I, with a view to sound him, and thereby test my own suspicions.

"Think!" replied he. "Why, was not I present at Glennie's tavern that night when the villain drew his knife against his own brother, and I hurried the deacon away, and was it not I who recommended the lawborrows? Think! Why, if I were to find it true that Angus Macgillivray was away, I would conclude at the instant that he had repaid the lawborrows by a secret stab."

"Yes, but there are difficulties," said I, with that straining for evidence of a conviction which is so natural to us. "Where could such a stab have been given in broad day, and it must have been in the forenoon, seeing the deacon did not come home to dinner? Then any secret den or out of the way place is scarcely to be thought of, insomuch as the deacon could not have been wiled there by one who he feared."

"Nothing in all that," replied he, "for we all know that the deacon's business led him down dark closes and out of the way places, where there are dens for all customers, dead or alive. And besides he was so simple and generous a man that if Angus had met him and proffered the open hand of reconciliation, he might have led him anywhere."

"Well," said I, getting more confident, "I may tell you, as his brother-in-law, that I have ascertained from Angus' wife herself that he, too, has been missing for the same time."

"Then by all that is good," cried he as his eye flashed from the suddenness of the impression upon the ear of these words, "the mystery is all but cleared up. The villain has murdered his own brother and run to the country."

Nor was I much astonished at this ejaculation, for the original suspicion had gradually been becoming a conviction with me, and my mind was almost eager to have any remaining doubts removed.

"But," said I, "what is to be done?"

"Go to the city authorities," replied he on the instant, "and get them to issue a warrant for the apprehension of Angus Macgillivray."

"I have been at the bailies' office," said I, "and found that the officers there do not consider the affair as sufficiently alarming to induce even an official search."

"Because," replied he, "they don't know the facts," adding satirically, "It is generally believed that those who are blind don't see."

"But even if they were put in possession of the facts, no warrant would be issued without a signed information, and would you take that responsibility?" was my question.

"No," replied he, "but you might, because you have made the proper inquiry and found Angus fled."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A dispatch from Panama, Colombia, says the steamer Barclay Golden is there, subject to orders from Antonio Ezeta. For some time past Ezeta has been in communication with President Barrios of Guatemala, who, it is also stated, has remitted him a large sum of money. The captain and crew insist, however, that the Golden has been purchased by a big New York firm. Barrios, it is believed, would aid Ezeta in an expedition.

CUISINE SECRETS.

TRICKS OF THE COOKS AND THE MARKETMEN OF PARIS.

Counterfeit Bubbles on Bouillon, Artificial Ham Bones, Stamped Cocks' Combs and Varnished Turkey Legs Are Some of the Parisian Deceptions.

We often hear people who have paid 25 minute visits to Paris talk of the beauties of Parisian cuisine. Here are a few of them. Just as the Parisians, like the cockney coffeehouse keepers, have found out how to make coffee without coffee, so have also the Parisian restaurateurs found out how to make bouillon, or beef tea, without beef. At the gargotes, the lowest class of Paris restaurants, a species of very ingenious fraud has now been common for over half a century and maybe more. It consists in passing off warm water, colored and flavored with burned onions and caramel and into which some little grease bubbles have been injected, as soup. It is true that bones which have been twice stewed, first by the larger restaurants and secondly by the inferior class of traiteurs and cast away as done with, are stewed in this water for the third time, in order that it may be impregnated, if possible, with some particle of animal substance; but, as this operation fails to impart to it those little greasy bubbles which the French term "eyes," and for which the shrewd frequenters of these establishments invariably look in order to satisfy themselves that the broth they drink has been actually made from meat, a clever cook got over the difficulty by blowing a spoonful of fish oil, which, falling into the caldron or soup tureen, formed the eyes so dear to epicures.

Parisians of a certain class are inordinate eaters of ham—in fact, almost as many hams are eaten in Paris as could be furnished by all the pigs killed throughout the whole of France, even allowing for both shoulder and leg being cured in accordance with French practice. The demand used—and may be now—to be supplied in this wise. The dealers in cooked hams bought up the old ham bones at a couple of sous a piece and ingeniously inserted them into pieces of picked pork, which they trimmed into shape and coated with grated crusts. In this way many bones did duty hundreds of times over, lasting, in fact, for years. They would leave the dealers in the morning and frequently return to them the same night, to quit them again the following day. Nevertheless the supply could hardly keep pace with the demand. Only fancy the inconvenience of having to wait for your ham until your neighbor's servant took back the ham bone which the charcutier relied upon receiving yesterday! It was to obviate such a state of things that an ingenious individual conceived the idea of manufacturing ham bones wholesale, and ere long he drove a thriving trade at 10 sous a dozen, since which time the stock of hams has augmented and the delicacy has become less difficult of attainment. Much in the same way another ingenious individual, knowing the immense consumption of cocks' combs in Paris for ragouts, ecquilles of cocks' combs and vol-au-vents and seeing the high prices the said cocks' combs commanded owing to the limited supply, set to work to minister to the demand and duly established himself as a manufacturer of cocks' combs. So extensive was the trade done by him that he found it necessary to set up a small steam engine. He was a great enthusiast and was accustomed to pride himself upon the artificial cocks' combs which emanated from his atelier being greatly superior to the natural article.

This is the way our artist went to work. As the same method is largely worked at this day in London as well as in Paris—ay, and in New York and New Orleans—we purposely use the present tense for a time. He takes the palate of a bullock, cow, calf, sheep or goat—either will do, though he prefers the first. After having blanched it in boiling water he macerates it and detaches the flesh of the palatic vault without in the slightest degree deranging it and then places it under a stamping machine, which punches cut cocks' combs more perfect in shape than those produced by nature, yet sufficiently resembling them to deceive the connoisseurs. Still, there is a way of detecting the artificial production—the cocks' combs of clumsy nature have papillæ on both sides, whereas those of art have them only on one. Counterfeit cocks' combs are sold as low as 4 sous the dozen in Paris to poulterers, keepers of restaurants, pastry cooks, etc., and at 6 sous to cooks in private families.

Apropos of our subject, this man, in his intercourse with poulterers, got to learn that when they did not sell their turkeys off at once they were obliged to lower the price about one-fifth every subsequent day or submit to a loss, although the turkey might present the same appearance of freshness that it did when first killed. And yet no cook could be deceived, and this solely because the bird's legs, which were black and shiny on the day of its death, assumed a more and more grayish tone as time went on. This was quite sufficient for our man of genius. The shrewd manufacturer of cocks' combs hastened home and set to work to compound a varnish which should defy the attacks of time and render turkeys' legs ever fresh and youthful. In a couple of days he returned triumphant to the market and furnished the best proof of his success by deceiving the dealers themselves. Trials were next made upon the public, and turkeys with varnished legs were offered to the cunningest cooks, who, deceived by appearances, made their purchases without demanding the customary abatement, and the conservation of the brilliant luster of turkeys' legs became from that time forward a regular trade, which certainly says little for the honesty of the poulterers, less for the judgment of the cooks, and least of all for the assumed delicacy of taste of the Parisian gourmets.—London Globe.

A Taking Title.

"Your play is good enough," said the veteran manager after he had read it through, "but it needs a better title than 'Sticketh Closer Than a Brother.' With such a name as that it won't draw."

"How would 'The Mustard Plaster' do?" suggested the struggling artist anxiously.—London Tit-Bits.

They Disagreed.

Langley—Don't you think Jack treats things altogether too seriously?

Seaber—Not much! He took that $5 bill I was kind enough to loan him last month and has treated it as a joke ever since.—Detroit Free Press.

"YANKEE DOODLE."

The National Lyric Was Composed in 1755.

The origin of "Yankee Doodle" is by no means so clear as American antiquaries desire. The statement that the air was composed by Dr. Thackburg in 1755, when the colonial troops united with the British regulars near Albany, preparatory to the attack on the French forts of Niagara and Frontenac, and that it was produced in derision of the old-fashioned equipments of the provincial soldiers as contrasted with the neat and orderly appointments of the regulars, was published some years ago in a musical magazine, printed in Boston. The account there given as to the origin of the song is this:

During the attacks upon the French outposts, in 1775, in America, says an exchange, Gov. Shirley and Gen. Johnson led the force directed against the enemy lying at Niagara and Frontenac. In the early part of June, while these troops were stationed on the banks of the Hudson, near Albany, the descendants of the "Pilgrim Fathers" flocked in from the Eastern provinces. Never was seen such a motley regiment as took up its position on the left wing of the British army. The band played music as antiquated and outre as their uniforms; officers and privates had adopted regimentals, each man after his own fashion; one wore a flowing wig, while his neighbor rejoiced in hair cropped close to the head; this one had a coat with wonderful long skirts, his fellow marched without his upper garments; various as the colors of the rainbow were the clothes worn by the gallant band. It so happened that there was a certain Dr. Thackburg, musician and surgeon, and one evening after mess he produced a tune, which he earnestly commended, as a well-known piece of military music, to the officers of the militia. The joke succeeded and "Yankee Doodle" was hailed by acclamation "their own march." This account is somewhere apocryphal, as there is no song; the tune in the United States is a march. There are no words to it of a national character. The only words ever affixed to the air in this country is the following doggerel:

Yankee Doodle came to town
Upon a little pony;
He stuck a feather in his hat
And called it Macaroni.

It has been asserted by English writers that the air and words of these lines are as old as Cromwell's time. The only alteration is in making Yankee Doodle of what was Nankee Doodle.

From High Authority.

The London Lancet, probably the foremost medical journal printed in the English language, is authority for the following: "A few years ago, when diphtheria was raging in England, a gentleman accompanied the celebrated Dr. Field on his rounds to witness the so-called 'wonderful cures' which he performed, while the patients of others were dropping on all sides. All he took with him was powder of sulphur and a quill, and with these he cured every patient without exception—that is, he put a teaspoonful of flower of brimstone into a wine-glass of water, and stirred it with his finger instead of a spoon, as sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water, and, on the sulphur becoming well mixed, he gave it as a gargle, and in ten minutes the patient was out of danger, as brimstone kills every species of fungus in man, beast, and plant in a few minutes. Instead of spitting out the gargle, he recommended the swallowing of it, and, in extreme cases, in which he had been called just in the nick of time, when the fungus was too nearly closing to allow the gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat, and after the fungus had shrunk to allow of it, then the gargling. He never lost a patient from diphtheria. Or, if the patient cannot gargle, take a live coal, put it on a shovel, and sprinkle a spoonful or two of the brimstone at a time upon it, let the sufferer inhale it, holding the head over it, and the fungus will die."

Meaning of Dictionaries.

It seems that the courts decline to abide by the high-handed way in which the dictionaries settle the spelling and meaning of a word. If a court is good for anything, it certainly is in sitting in judgment on questions and determining what is what, even in words. One recent decision establishes that when a man is hanged by a mob it is an accident. To this a critic takes exceptions, yet if he had ever served on a jury that was trying to find out anything about a mob he must have been convinced that it was an accident of the most accidental nature. A child whose parents are living has been declared to be an "orphan," and a man whose life insurance was taken out before he was married was judicially declared to have "effected it as a husband." The most surprising and delightful of these lawful definitions of words is the fact that our highest court has declared that an unmarried woman is a "single man." This is without any reference to whether she wears bloomers or not. Now that a single woman is declared a "man" in the eyes of the law, the bachelor girl has nothing else to sigh for.—New Orleans Picayune.

The Children's Delight.

The "all day sucker" is not an individual, but a piece of candy that costs one cent, and, as its name implies, gives joy to the sucker for twenty-four hours. In some instances, where the suction is not too tense, an "all-dayer" has been known to last a week, and this on the affidavit of the buyer. The composition of this bit of confection is a profound mystery, but it is surmised that small pebbles are infused with glucose and then dyed all colors of the rainbow, which, of course, add to the rapture of the consumer.—Boston Herald.

Charles and Mary Lamb.

A picture of Charles and Mary Lamb has been placed in the National Portrait Gallery of London, with the following stupid inscription: "The eminent wit and essayist, with his sister, who suffered from periodical fits of insanity, during one of which she killed her mother. Lamb devoted most of his life to the care of his sister."

When it is said that a woman shows evidence of having seen better days, it means that she knows cut glass when she sees it, and can play the piano.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

WHEN WE WERE GIRLS.

"Do you mind the widow Martin's quilt-
in'?
Her daughter Sue was a flighty thing;
Always laughin' an' flirtin' an' jiltin',
An' wearin' this'n an' t'other's ring.
She's dead this twenty year, poor creeter.
She had soft blue eyes an' a head o'
curls.
Seems like the maids an' flowers were sweeter
When we were girls.

"How it snowed that day, though 'twas just November!
Was the quilt 'Log Cabin' or 'Irish
Chain?'
I have forgot. But I well remember
The widow's nephew from down in Maine.
When we shook the cat, he set her yellin',
An' bounced her out in about three whirls,
They had many ways o' fortune tellin'
When we were girls.

"Don't you remember the spellin' battle—
'Twas summer then, and the weather fine—
When Polly Jenks spelt 'c-a-t-l, cattle,'
An' Temp'rance Trimble 'v-i-g-n, vine?'
But what did it matter, word or letter?
They had cheeks like roses, teeth like pearls,
Men were the same—no worse, no better—
When we were girls.

"'Twas the master himself that Polly
married.
Why, Jane, what ails ye? What makes ye sigh?
You could not wed while the grandsire
tarried;
So youth an' roses an' love went by.
They tell me Polly is fine and haughty
In boughten roses an' boughten pearls.
An' the master, just the same that taught ye
When we were girls.

"Oh, the winter time, full o' rides an'
dances;
The summer days, when we sang an'
spun;
The meetin'-house, an' the stolen glances
Across the aisle when the prayer was done!
Fifty year since we two were twenty;
But it all comes back as the smoke
upcurls—
The joy an' hope an' love an' plenty
When we were girls.
—Harper's Bazar.

RAID ON THE STILL.

"Just thought I would stop by a minute, Miranda, if to say nothing more than I hoped you were all well," said Mrs. Jonathan Jackson to her friend Mrs. Samuel Pearl.

"Take a seat, Elizabeth, and make yourself at home. It's precious little conversation, though, one can have, with one's neighbor about what's going on in the mountains, with the men folks talking nothing all the time except them revenue sharks." And Mrs. Pearl looked uneasily through the window of the little sitting-room that commanded a general view of the mountain road that skirted past her home like the trail of a serpent and was lost in the gloom of the cedar trees that, mingling with the dense underbrush, caught the eye on all sides.

"How's Alice?" asked Mrs. Pearl rather abruptly.

"Fair as can be expected, Elizabeth. The girl don't seem to be the same creature since Ike went away, though the Lord knows I thought a great deal of the boy; more so than I ever let on to Jonathan. But Jonathan was down on the lad, and what's a weak woman going to do against a strong man's opposisighed?" And Mrs. Jonathan Jackson sighed.

"Been five years now, Miranda, since Ike went away. I always wondered why he left here, but folks can't be personal, you know, and ask questions that don't concern them," Mrs. Pearl said inquisitively, drawing her chair a few inches nearer to Mrs. Jonathan Jackson.

"Well, Elizabeth, knowing you don't talk about other people's business"—and here Mrs. Jackson looked suspiciously at her guest—"I don't mind telling you of the affair. Ike Holland, you see, Jonathan took out of an orphan asylum when the boy was about 2 years old, and brought him home to raise. Jonathan had been on a visit to Nashville and thought nothing would be better than to bring the lad here. 'Twas a little before Alice was born, and the boy, it seems, became attached to the girl from her birth. But Jonathan was proud and he used to tell Ike how he came to be in the family, and that he owed him a great deal. You know how Ike grew up to manhood, and how it was said that in these parts there wasn't one who could stand up and fight the revenue officers like Ike?

"There's many a distillery which the lad saved by warning the owners, and Jonathan himself is under obligation to the boy on that score. But the day came when I saw that Ike thought a great deal of my girl, and that she wasn't at all displeased with his attentions. But Jonathan was blind—never seemed to see that the two were forever in each other's company. One day Ike, man-like, tells Jonathan he wished to marry the girl. But Jonathan became furious, and told him he wasn't anything but a miserable outcast—an object of charity. He went further—he struck the lad a terrible blow. That was his answer. Ike did not strike back. I heard him mutter something 'for Alice's sake.' But the lad raised his hand and swore that he would even up things with Jonathan if it took until judgment day. Then he went away, and no one has ever heard of him since."

Mrs. Jackson sighed softly to herself. Mrs. Pearl's eyes were wide open with surprise, and she wondered how the true story of Ike's disappearance had remained a secret so long.

"Getting dark, Miranda, and I guess I had better be going up the road," and Mrs. Pearl bade her friend good-by.

The November sun was gradually disappearing behind the mountains and the long shadows of the fading sunlight cast spectral figures here and there among the trees.

Mrs. Jackson then lighted the oil lamp and made ready for the evening supper. Presently the sound of a conveyance was heard in the roadway, and Jonathan Jackson and his daughter Alice alighted. They had been down to the village, a ride of twenty miles over the mountain roads, to provide themselves with some necessary supplies.

"What's the news in the village, Jonathan?" inquired his wife.

"Nothing much; some reports about the revenue officers, though I didn't take much stock in the stories." And Jonathan relapsed into a moody silence.

The rest of the meal was eaten in quiet, and after the dishes were cleared away Jonathan sat comfortably by the fire and smoked his pipe, as the November evenings were becoming chilly and unpleasant.

After an hour had passed there was the sound of a horseman approaching near to the house, and a moment later someone knocked at the door.

"Does Jonathan Jackson live here?" inquired the newcomer.

"My name is Jonathan Jackson," answered the master of the house. "What is your business?" And Jonathan looked at the stranger with suspicion.

"I am making a journey over the mountains and would like to stay here to-night at least."

For a moment Jonathan looked surprised. Then he bade the stranger enter, while he went outside and put up his horse.

In the light of the room the stranger appeared to be a man of some 30 years of age. He possessed a dark beard of luxuriant growth, which concealed what would have been considered a handsome face were it bereft of its hirsute appendage. The guest took his seat near the fire and kept his peace. In a few minutes Jonathan returned and joined the family circle.

"It appears to me, stranger, I saw you to-day in the village," Jonathan ventured.

"Possibly; I was there," the guest answered.

"On business?"

"On business."

Then Jonathan was silent for a moment. He was apparently ill at ease.

"I suppose you have heard that it is pretty dangerous traveling in these parts?" again ventured Jonathan.

"Is it?" said the stranger. And Jonathan became more dissatisfied with his way of eliciting information.

"Stranger, it appears to me that it might be better that you give your name and business in traveling over these mountains," Jonathan spoke bluntly.

The stranger's eyes flashed like coals of fire, and then he answered calmly:

"My name is Arthur Smith. My business was that of a moonshiner or keeper of an illicit distillery—that is, until I was driven out of North Carolina."

"Why, why tell me this?" Jonathan asked surprised.

"Because I believe I am speaking with a brother moonshiner. Probably you may be able to refer me to someone in these parts who may need my services."

"We will have to see about it," said the master of the house, without committing himself, and in a few minutes Smith was shown to his room, as the night was getting late.

The next morning Jonathan went out early and returned soon after with some of his neighbor's friends. Smith was up on Jonathan's return, and the men all held a short conference together, which seemed to prove satisfactory all around. The result was that the stranger, Arthur Smith, had joined the band of illicit distillers carrying on their calling in the mountains. For the present Smith put up at the house of Jonathan, and in the evening, before darkness approached, went up to the latter's still, located in an old mill on the bank of a rushing torrent some distance up the mountain, which in days gone by had been used to grind their corn, which they purchased from the farmers on the lowlands below.

Reports had reached the mountaineers that strangers had been seen in the village at the foot of the mountains, and the secret stills were rarely in operation of late. Smith, the stranger, owing to the late turn in affairs, had plenty of spare time on his hands and would wander off alone up the mountain road and turn off into the dense undergrowth to be gone hours at a time. He was a particularly reticent man, never ventured a question and answered those put to him in the most laconic way imaginable. Once in a while, when the others were not looking, his gaze would be riveted on Alice, and Mrs. Jackson would shrewdly smile to herself and declare inaudibly that the girl had made a conquest.

One evening as darkness was coming on Alice returned from the house of Mrs. Pearl, where she had made a short visit, and coming suddenly around a bend in the road she observed two men in earnest conversation. One was Arthur Smith, the other a stranger. Only for a moment did the two men seem to converse, and soon the newcomer had disappeared. When Smith reached Jonathan's house it was but shortly after Alice arrived.

Lately the mountain stills had been operated more frequently than for some time. The reports of the revenue officers infesting the mountains had become less frequent and the stills were being operated with a greater degree of security.

"We had better be getting up the mountain, lad," Jonathan said one evening in December. Supper had been prepared earlier than usual, for Jonathan's still was to be worked in the growing dusk.

"I'll follow you in half an hour. Feel rather badly to-day, but believe I'll be all right in a short while," Smith answered indifferently.

"Very well, Smith; I'll expect you." And Jonathan departed.

Probabaly some twenty minutes had elapsed when Smith left the house and leisurely made his way toward the secret still. Alice watched the stranger closely, and when Smith had disappeared she threw a shawl over her head—there was an unpleasant chilliness in the mountain air—and followed in his wake.

The old mill which concealed the still was some three-quarters of a mile from Jonathan's house, and as Alice proceeded on her way she occasionally caught a glimpse of the forms of strange men in the dense undergrowth, going evidently in the same direction with herself. Once a strange man glanced at her suspiciously, but did not molest her. He was armed with a shotgun, and took her probably for some one who was returning from a visit to a neighboring mountaineer's home.

Soon the girl reached the old mill. In the evening twilight the dying sun was fast disapeparing behind the mountains, leaving a faint glare in its wake, which lit up the scene with a soft golden light. Smith, the stranger, was standing motionless in front of the mill, peering anxiously now and then into the dense undergrowth on both sides of the stream, which in past days had furnished the motive power for the now useless wheel. Alice Jackson watched Smith intently for a moment, and then approached him and laid her hand gently on his shoulder.

Ike, why do you hound my father like this?" spoke the girl, softly.

Smith gazed at his questioner in a startled way for a moment, and then with an effort recovered his usual air of stolid indifference.

"You know me, Alice. I had hoped time had wrought such a change in my nature and looks that none would recognize me. You probably know why I am here."

"You are a revenue officer, and your presence here at this moment is to signal your men, who are here on all sides, to trap my father and the few men who are in the still."

"I see you know all. When I left your father's house, as I did like a beggar and an outcast, I swore to ruin him. If I signal now to my men in the woods in a few minutes I will have the evidence necessary to send him to the penitentiary. And yet, if you had only taken my part, all might have been different." And Ike Holland's voice grew soft and sad.

"How could I take your part, Ike, except by going with you—and you never asked me to do that?" spoke the girl, feelingly.

"And would you, had I done so?"

Ike did not need an answer to his question. In a moment he realized that he, the hunter of Jonathan Jackson, was still beloved by his daughter. In the growing darkness of the evening the two strolled back to Jonathan's house, and the men in the woods, who awaited their leader's signal, wondered what changes had taken place in Ike Holland's plans. Jonathan also was disappointed in not seeing Smith at the still, and after that night he never saw him there again.

* * * * * * * * *

"I hear that Alice has eloped with that young man who was stopping here," said the irrepressible Mrs. Pearl, a few days after the events last narrated. "Some says as he was nobody other than Ike Holland, though I never did put much confidence in idle gossip."

Mrs. Pearl had heard of the late turn in affairs, and had paid Mrs. Jackson a neighborly call to verify sundry rumors which interested her very much.

"Yes, Ike and Alice were married in Nashville two days ago," answered Jonathan's wife.

"And what does Jonathan say?" ruthlessly questioned Mrs. Pearl.

"What can he say?" And Mrs. Jackson's eyes snapped resentment at the question. "He's got sensible at last, and says he never would have given Ike Holland credit for such courage. Anyway, now that he has got a son-in-law a revenue officer he declares he is going to quit keeping a still and live an honest life. Maybe one of these days I may persuade Jonathan to run down to Nashville with me, but not just yet."—Washington Post.

Demand for Mother of Pearl.

Considering the vast values in gem pearls obtained from the eastern fisheries, it is surprising to find that the plain, unromantic mother of pearl secured is of even greater worth. Previous to the discovery of the extensive Australian fishing grounds in 1865, the supply of mother of pearl was diminishing, while the demand was increasing. The large shelled species already mentioned are there found in fine quality. The shells are the size of large soup plates, weigh a pound each, and are worth about $1 a pair. An expert diver, in diving dress, will collect 300 or 400 pairs in a day. About 100 gem pearls are found in every ton of these shells.

Beautiful art work in carved and inlaid mother of pearl has long been produced in China and Japan. Some idea of the extent of its European use in the arts and manufactures may be had from the fact that 800,000 people are engaged in working mother of pearl in Austria, and half that number in France, while the value of the annual import into England is nearly $1,500,000. In the Philippine Islands windows are made of mother of pearl, and James Anthony Froude, in his volume of voyaging in Oceana, describes frightful Maori idols with slips of mother of pearl glittering in their eye sockets; while in Cashmere it is the custom to inlay the inscriptions in tombstones with the same exquisite substance. To cap the climax of curious uses of the lustrous nacre, it is said that large quantities of seed pearls are imported into China to be calcined into medicines for the Celestials.—Popular Science Monthly.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is the highest taxpayer in the city of Philadelphia. The taxes for that company's property in that city for 1896 are $261,925.43. This represents a valuation of about $20,000,000 on the real estate in that city owned by the company.

An Enterprise, Ore., saloon-keeper, for the revocation of whose license a petition had been circulated, published a card addressed to "his friends who had been so kind as to sign the petition," asking them to please settle their whisky bills before he closed his place.

Eleven Canadians have been inspecting lands along the Mississippi River, near Memphis, Tenn., with a view to locating there for farming, and the railroad authorities say that several parties from the North and Northwest have made arrangements to settle in the Southern lands in the fall.

A Hillsboro, Ore., man owes more to his bicycle than he ever thought he would. He missed the train that was to take him to be married and was sore put to it, when he bethought him of his wheel, which he mounted, and scorched to such effect that he arrived just in time to cheer the drooping spirits of a wilting bride.

A Portland, Ore., man has been exhibiting some rabbits of a peculiar breed. Their ears are described as more than a foot long and covered with unusually long hair. He got them to turn loose for breeding in the thick Nehalem forests and thinks there is no danger of their becoming pests, as English rabbits sometimes do.

A Memphis man is advocating an amendment to the Tennessee Constitution striking out the requirement that public officers shall give bonds, on the ground that as the public elects its officers it should lose if they prove faithless, and that making the people the losers will cause them to be more careful in the selection of candidates.

"Ca Ira" is the regimental march of the Prince of Wales' West Yorkshire regiment, the old Fourteenth foot. The tradition is that the regiment met the French at the beginning of the revolution, when the colonel ordered the drummers to strike up "Ca Ira," saying, "We will beat them to their own tune," which they did.

A prehistoric city, which apparently had a population of over 200,000, was discovered recently in Mexico by J. R. Reiley, an American archaeologist. This ancient city is situated in a narrow valley between two high ranges of mountains. Nearly all the buildings are of brown stone, and are in a state of almost perfect preservation.

Justice A. W. Hall, of Akron, Ohio, heard by telephone the pleas of five young men arrested at Massillon for disorderly conduct at Turkeyfoot Lake the other day, and by telephone fined each $1 and costs. The boys did not want to go to Akron, and told the constable they were willing to plead guilty. This novel mode of holding court was the result.

A New York man fell overboard the other day, and was with difficulty rescued. Then he discovered that his hat was yet in the water. On his rescuers refusing to get it he jumped into the river himself for it, and was nearly drowned before he was pulled out the second time. The extra labor made his rescuers angry, and they had him arrested, and the magistrate fined him $10.

A new sweetmeat imported from France consists of white currants preserved in liquid honey. The honey and currants should both be of the best quality, and the currants only slightly cooked. Someone who has both currants and honey in abundance may like to experiment with this sweet, which is said to have a delicious flavor, produced by the blending of the very sweet and very sour elements.

Professor William R. Brooks, director of Smith observatory of Geneva, N. Y., while observing the moon the other night with the large telescope made a most interesting and unique discovery. A dark, round object was seen to pass rather slowly across the moon in a horizontal direction. Prof. Brooks believes that it was the passage of a dark meteor between the earth and the moon far beyond the earth's atmosphere, so that it remained nonluminous. The observation is new in astronomical records.

A movement has had its inception to take legal steps to prevent by means of an injunction the pumping of water from the lakes surrounding Laporte, Ind. The bodies of water which have made Laporte famous as a watering place are the sole source of the city's water supply, and are gradually being drained. Persons interested in the movement believe that the city can be compelled to sink wells. It is stated that if legal action is taken it will be the first litigation of the kind ever brought in the State courts.

The coroner went out from Butte, Mont., to look after the body of a man who had been reported dead by the roadside four miles away, and while he was making inquiries of the people in the neighborhood as to the whereabouts of the corpse the man who had been reported defunct came out of a roadhouse and wanted to thrash him. Bystanders wouldn't let him. The man had been lying in a drunken sleep in the roadway, and because a wrecked buggy was near by some persons concluded that there had been a fatal accident and sent word to the coroner.

There were 507,420,562 passengers carried on the railways of the United States during the year covered by the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission just issued. That equals about seven railroad rides for every man, woman and child in the whole country. And out of this vast number only 170 were killed and 2,375 injured. The number of men employed on the railroads was 785,034, and of these 1,811 were killed and 25,695 injured. From these statistics it would appear that railroad riding is one of the safest things a man can do, while railroading as a business is a hazardous occupation.

A wily Sicilian priest has just got the better of an innocent brigand. Canonico Antonio Campagno, who is a rich landowned at Puzzi, was taking a walk in the main street of the town one Sunday evening when five men seized him, took him to a village in the mountains, and demanded $8,000 as ransom. They kept the canon in a hay loft and treated him well, providing him with a bed and plenty of food and wine. He agreed to write a letter to his family, asking them to pay the money to his captors. When he had written it he went out to hand it to the man guarding him. Looking down he saw only one man, and that one asleep with a gun by his side. He picked up the gun, shot the bandit through the head, and succeeded in escaping. The owner of the hay loft was arrested, but the bandits had not waited for the police.

An agent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals of Fairview, N. J., got into an amusing predicament the other day, although he did not see the fun of it. He ordered a farmer who was trying to drive up a hill with a heavy load and 300-pound Bertha Olstrom in the wagon to lighten the load. The farmer agreed, and, in helping Bertha to alight, the zealous agent took a box from the wagon for her to step on. She did, and went through it, squashing twenty-four dozen eggs. The farmer threatens to sue the S. P. C. A. man for the price of the eggs, and Mrs. Olstrom thinks she has grounds for an action for damages for injury to her knee.

A miner returned from Cook's Inlet, Alaska, says that things are in a bad way in the new coast El Dorado. When he left the 2,000 prospectors were then getting away from Cook's Inlet as fast as they could. "I should not be surprised if some of those left seize some of the vessels there and help themselves to get away. There are about a dozen vessels there, large and small, mostly from the sound. Each day while we were there squads of miners numbering from a dozen to fifty men each were to be seen going up and down the creeks. All of them brought back the same story—they found nothing. As a rule the prospectors came back to camp feeling that they had seen enough of the Cook Inlet country. Three out of five of the prospectors there had no money when they landed. Many sold their provisions to get money to come back on."

Misunderstood.

"Yes, sir," said Dukanee, who had just returned from a fishing trip, "I caught a trout which weighed a little over six pounds."

"That was a whopper," replied Gaswell.

"Yes, indeed, the fish was a whopper, I tell you—but er, you alluded to the fish, I suppose?"

"No; to the story."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Costliest Perfume.

The most expensive perfume in the market at the present time is the essential oil of rose petals, or attar of roses, which costs $600 per pound. The essential oil of jasmine is quoted at $540 per pound; ambergris, $450 per pound; musk, $420 per pound.

The Best.

"Which is your umbrella, sah?" asked the doorkeeper of the club as Tenspot was about to leave.

"The best one you have left," replied Tenspot.—Detroit Free Press.

Vegetable Forcing House.

A good plan for securing a maximum of warmth at the least possible expenditure of internal heat is shown below. Such a house is, moreover, cheaply built wherever loose stones are abundant, whether the stones be irregularly faced, or simply rounded cobblestones. A cut is made into the bank and the wall laid up in cement, or cement and lime. The rear and end walls should have a tile drain laid just outside of their base, coming out upon the surface at the front. The rear wall should rise a little above the ground, which should be graded a trifle higher in the middle at the rear than at the ends to turn aside the surface water. The tile drain will take care of all water that soaks down through the ground. The wall in front is extended a little beyond either end of the building to retain a full bank of earth against the end walls. The interior arrangement will of course be similar to any single-roofed forcing house. —Farm and Home.

BANK FORCING HOUSE.

Right and Wrong Way of Feeding.

The summer feeding of pigs is an important matter under present conditions. Doubtless pasture is the most healthful and profitable basis for the feeding, but as time is an element to be considered, it is advisable to feed grain with it to push on the growth as fast as possible. There is everything in good clover pasture needed for the sustenance of the pigs, but we want something more than this, for the most growth made in the least time is the indispensable requirement for profit; but whole grain is not a desirable food. A considerable portion of it is swallowed without mastication, and is volded whole. When waste milk is to be had, it will pay more value as food for pigs on pasture than used in any other way, and with this some mixed finely ground meal corn and buckwheat will produce more growth of a perfectly healthful character than any other kind of grain food.

Hens in the Orchard.

Many farmers and orchardists would like to have hens in the orchard for the good their presence would do to the trees, were it not that the fowls must be kept confined because of the damage they would do the adjacent garden and flower beds. The sketch shows a way to keep one or more flocks of hens in an orchard. A light, low house, made of half-inch matched stuff, has a wire run attached to the end, as shown in the illustration. The house has no floor. The eggs are gathered by opening the hinged board in the end. Low trucks are attached to the corners so that the whole can be moved occasionally to a new location. It can thus be moved up and down beside the rows of trees, stopping for a day or two under each tree, scratching, fertilizing the ground and destroying insects. The fowls all do well under such conditions, and their presence will be of great value to the orchard. The lower sill of the sides of the house should continue out and form the base of the sides of the run.

MOVABLE POULTRY HOUSE.

Some Essentials to Success.

Farming is not a business where the failure of one adds to the success of another; on the contrary, the success of each individual is largely dependent upon the prosperity of all. The product from poorly farmed farms is of an inferior quality, for which it is difficult to find buyers. The best is cheap enough, and anything of an inferior quality is not only a drug on the market but interferes with the sale of better goods. When buyers are looking for farm produce, they go where they know they can get the best. The better the quality of the goods produced, the more buyers you will have for your product, and the competition upon the part of buyers will enable you to get good prices within easy distance of your own doors. Every help which tends in an economical manner to improve the quality of our productions should be eagerly sought. A well conducted institute, receiving support from the farming community in which it is held, will furnish more practical information from the practical experience of others, and which practical farmers can make use of, than perhaps any other method yet adopted. It is unfortunate that farmers as a class take so little interest in them. Education is just as essential for the farmer as for the lawyer, doctor or business man. Good farming does not consist wholly of manual labor; it requires the exercise of good intellectual powers. There is also a vast difference between scientific and theoretical farming. The theorist is in luck when he can pay the interest on his mortgage. But practical farming, backed by good judgment, pays well when prices are fair, and always will.

Use Good Seed.

Many farmers make the mistake of arguing this way: "I have some good grain that will bring a good price on the market; I will sell that. I have some poor shriveled grain that grew down on low ground. I will keep that for seed." This is a great mistake. It is a very true principle in both animal and vegetable growth that "Like begets like," and if we sow poor seed we may expect a poor crop. In selecting our seed we should strive to select it from a field that has been uniform in both quality and quantity; then it should be thoroughly cleaned. Many of us used to think, when we were boys, that our fathers kept us busier than was really pleasant in cleaning grain. But this is a matter difficult to overdo. Clean, good seed is the one important thing.

A Pretty Lawn Table.

Stumps of old trees that have outlived their usefulness and been relegated to the wood pile are not uncommonly seen upon lawns, and many attempts are made to turn them to artistic and useful account. The simplicity of the plan illustrated in Farm and Home commends itself. The stump is first sawed to a flat surface and then fitted with a top of thick boards of the desired dimensions. Four rustic supports or brackets are placed underneath at the four corners. These should be as much as possible in their natural state, with any little crookedness or knots allowed to show, as they add much to the pretty effect on the whole. The edges, too, of the top board may be given a rustic tone by tacking to them strips of wood with the bark on them. When the little table is finished and "set" with its dishes and pots of plants, the owner of it is quite sure to stand a little way off and admire it audibly.

Poultry Notes.

Scrub chickens are out of date. They don't pay.

Persons who do not take a natural pleasure in fancy poultry are not likely to succeed with them.

The possibility of profit in raising turkeys comes from their ability to pick up a good part of their living.

Rubbing the heads and thighs of fowls with a rag dipped in oil is an excellent thing to keep off vermin.

From five geese can be picked a pound of feathers every six weeks. These will sell for 40 cents or more.

When the cockerels begin to pull the pullets about and worry them, the sexes should at once be separated.

When incubator chicks are put with a hen, always be sure that she has no lice. A little lard and sulphur applied under the wings and about the head will get away with any louse in two or three days.

Any attempt through the use of stimulants or any unnatural methods to increase the number or fertility of the egg, always brings disastrous results to the breeder, whether fancier or market man.

Horticultural Hints.

Cultivate a home-town market.

There is a form of blight working upon apple, cherry and quince trees, which is quite destructive.

Are the young trees in the orchard starting in the right position—leaning a little to the southwest?

The cultivation of the growing crops should be the principal occupation of the horticulturist in mid-summer.

Do you assort and grade your produce as well as you know how? You may be losing money because you don't do so.

If weeds have been kept down in the early part of the summer, it is usually sufficient to go over garden and flower beds once a week after the first of August.

BRYAN'S ELECTION THE COUNTRY'S SALVATION.

We must build prosperity from the bottom upwards. If we strive to build it from the top downwards we must fail. Yet it is just this that Mr. McKinley and those who, with him, demand the imposition of higher tariff duties while adhering to the gold standard would strive to effect. We cannot effect a revival of prosperity by encouraging the production of that for which there is no demand. Our manufacturers suffer from a diminished demand for their products. Before prosperity can be restored to them we must build up this demand. We must start at the bottom. The demand for manufactured goods has been undermined by the impoverishment of our farmers. Consequently no permanent revival of manufacturing can come until we restore prosperity to our farmers.

To encourage the production of manufactured goods while doing naught to build up the market for such goods, is the height of folly, for the increased production of goods when there is no increased demand must lead to the accumulation of such goods saleable only at a sacrifice and of necessity entail loss on the producer. So that the first step that we must take to restore prosperity to our manufacturers must be to restore to them that which they have lost, a market for their goods. This lost market is due, not to foreign competition, but to the impoverishment of our farming classes.

Anything that will enable our foreign competitors to sell for a smaller price must force our producers to sell proportionately cheaper, and on the other hand anything that will raise the cost at which our competitors can afford to part with their products will make an enlarged demand for our own. Our principal competitors pay the cost of production of cotton and wheat either in silver or paper currency that is much depreciated as compared to gold, and which does not vary in any degree with fluctuations in the gold price of silver. Indeed they look upon all changes in the relative values of silver and gold as changes in the premium on gold, and such changes in no way affect the cost of production as measured in their silver or paper currencies. But such changes in the premiums on gold do much affect the gold price at which they can afford to sell their products in gold using countries. If the premium rises they can sell for less gold, for just as the premium rises it takes less gold to purchase the amount of silver or paper requisite to cover the cost of production. And on the other hand if the premium falls, then they must get a higher gold price in order to realize the same price they now ask in silver or paper.

So just as the gold price of silver has fallen, we have been obliged to mark down the price of all our products sold in the markets of gold using countries and in competition with the products of silver using peoples. And paying the cost of production in gold we have not been able to reduce such cost in any like degree with the fall in prices. Consequently we have been at a great disadvantage and our producers have been impoverished. To meet interest charges, the planter has had to part with more pounds of cotton, the farmer with more bushels of wheat just as prices have fallen, so farmer and planter have been left with fewer bushels of wheat and fewer pounds of cotton with which to pay their help and recompense themselves for their labor. Of necessity they have been obliged to economize, and have been forced to restrict their purchases of manufactured goods which has led to curtailed demand and lower prices for such gooes, the closing down of mills and factories, the throwing of wage earners out of work, and general industrial stagnation.

As the prosperity of the manufacturer is built on the prosperity of the farmer, no revival of manufacturing can come until we take from our competitors the bounty on exports to gold using countries which they now enjoy in the shape of a premium on gold and which has enabled them to beat down the gold price of wheat and cotton to the great injury of our producers but without loss to themselves.

By taking away the premium on gold as measured by silver, which acts as a bounty on exports from those countries in which gold now commands a premium, and which our competitors now enjoy, we can secure to our farmers and planters better prices and thus inaugurate a new era of industrial activity and general prosperity. On no other foundation than the prosperity of our agricultural classes can a revival of manufacturing safely rest, for unless a market for manufactured products is first found, any effort to extend production must end in failure.

In only one way can we restore that prosperity to our agricultural classes without which any general revival of business enterprise or of manufacturing activity must be out of the question, and that is by removing the premium on gold as measured by silver which has so handicapped our farmers and planters, and by placing them again on an equal plane with their competitors in competition for the European markets. This can be done in only one way and that is by restoring Bimetallism. Until this step is taken, this step can alone bring prosperity to our agricultural classes, all attempts to restore prosperity to our people must prove futile.

McKinley is steadfastly opposed to taking it, at least until such time as those who wax rich on our impoverishment may give their consent. Bryan pledges himself to take it. Therefore in Bryan's election stands the salvation of our people from a continuance of the disastrous fall in prices that is inseparable from the gold standard, that is reducing our people to poverty and that must end if unchecked in the virtual enslavement of our producing to an aristocracy of wealth.

ELECTION PROCLAMATION.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that a General Election will be held throughout the State of California on

TUESDAY, the third day of November, A. D. 1896,

When the following officers will be elected, namely:

Nine Electors of President and Vice President of the United States.

Also, seven Representatives to the Congress of the United States: being one Representative from each Congressional District.

Also, one State Senator from each of the following Senatorial Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-first, Thirty-third, Thirty fifth, Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth.

Also, one Member of the Assembly from each Assembly District in this State.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County.

Also, three Judges of the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento.

Also, two Judges of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alameda, Humboldt, San Diego, San Joaquin, Santa Clara and Sonoma.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Contra Costa, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Inyo, Kern, Lake, Lassen, Mariposa, Marin, Merced, Mendocino, Monterey, Modoc, Mono, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Placer, Plumas, San Bernardino, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Stanislaus, Yuba and Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Tuolumne, Ventura, and Yolo.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Fresno, for the unexpired term of S. A. Holmes, deceased, ending January, 1897; vice Stanton L. Carter appointed.

Also, at said election, Amendments to the Constitution of the State, submitted by the Legislature at its last regular session, numbered and designated as hereinafter specified, will be voted upon by the electors of said state, namely,

Amendment Number One.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 33.)

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 1. All property in the State not exempt under the laws of the United States, or this Constitution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property" as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, ducs, franchises, and all other matter and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership; provided, that property used for free public libraries and free public museums, growing crops, mortgages, trust deeds, property used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this State, or to any county or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation. The Legislature may provide for a reduction from credits of debts due bona fide residents of this state.

Sec 2. Section four of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Sec 3. Section five of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Amendment Number Two.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 8.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot or by such other method as may be prescribed by law; provided that secrecy in voting be preserved.

Amdndment Number Three

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 19.)

ARTICLE XII.

Section 3. The liability of stockholders of corporations or joint stock associations shall be limited by the face value of the shares of the subscribed capital stock or shares of such corporation or association, and whenever any shares have been fully paid up, the holder of such shares shall not be further liable to such corporation or association, or the creditors thereof, on that account. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association, whose capital stock is not fully paid up, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder or shareholder, as the amount unpaid upon the stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole amount unpaid upon the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association. The Directors or Trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association, during the term of office of such Director or Trustee.

Amendment Number Four.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 25.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws, but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.

Amendment Number Five.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 13.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of article eleven of this Constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution and by the laws of this State, as follows:

1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of Police Courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the Judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of said Judges and of their clerks and attaches.

2. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Education shall be elected or appointed, and the number which shall constitute any one of such Boards.

3. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Police Commissioners shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards and of the municipal police force.

4. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of all Boards of Election shall be elected or appointed, and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards, and of their clerks and attaches; and for all expenses incident to the holding of any election.

Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section eight of said article eleven, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies.

Amendment Number Six.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 11.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 1. Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under and by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims to vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, no native of China, no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, and no person hereafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, and no person who shall not be able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his or her name shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector in this state; provided that the provisions of this amendment relative to an educational qualification shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be sixty years of age and upward at the time this amendment shall take effect.

Each amendment shall be voted upon separately from the others, by ballot, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the third day of November, 1896.

The said amendments are respectively designated:

Amendment Number One,
Amendment Number Two,
Amendment Number Three,
Amendment Number Four,
Amendment Number Five,
Amendment Number Six.

Each ballot used at such election must contain printed thereon the words:

|---|---|
| Amendment Number One, being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 33, (exempting mortgages and trust deeds from taxation). For the Amendment? | YES / NO. |
| Amendment Number Two, being Senate Amendment No. 8 (authorizing elections by ballot, or such other secret method as may be permitted by law). For the Amendment? | YES. / NO |
| Amendment Number Three, being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 19 (limiting the liability of stockholders of corporations). For the Amendment? | YES. / NO |
| Amendment Number Four (being Senate Constitutional Amendment No 25 (relating to the operation of general laws in organized or incorporated cities and towns) For the Amendment? | YES / NO |
| Amendment Number Five, being Senate Constitutional Amendment No 13 (enlarging the provisions which may be made by Freeholders' Charters, relating to Police Courts, Police Commissioners, Boards of Education and Elections, and providing for the election of county officers in consolidated cities and counties). For the Amendment? | YES. / NO. |
| Amendment Number six, being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 11 (extending the right to vote to females). For the Amendment? | YES / NO. |

And I do hereby offer a reward of One Hundred Dollars for the arrest and conviction of any and every person violating any of the provisions of Title VI, Part I, of the Penal Code; such reward to be paid until the total amount hereafter expended for the purpose reaches the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed, at the City of Sacramento, this 25th day of September, 1896.

JAMES H. BUDD,
Governor.

[SEAL.]
Attest: L. H. BROWN,

BORN.

DOINGS AT THE FAIR.

The Tenth Annual Fair opened on Wednesday with quite an attendance. Considering the fact that we have no State appropriation the Directors have succeeded admirably in their arrangements. A very good display of fruits, vegetables, fancy articles, etc., is tastefully arranged in the Pavilion and an interesting entertainment was arranged for every evening in the week.

The first of a series of ball games was played on Wednesday forenoon between Laws and Independence and resulted in a victory for the latter team. The game was close and exciting until the fifth inning, when Law went all to pieces. Following is the score, Independence 30, Laws 14.

In the afternoon the races opened with a two-year-old trot. Which was won by Ben Benton. Nutwood taking the second heat. R. W. Scott, his owner, piloted the winner, J. M. Horton driving Nutwood.

Following this race a mile scramble for Indian ponies, Nine animals of all kinds and conditions lined up for the word and after considerable prodding Blackrock won. McKinley, a sickly looking sorrel critter, "shooed" them all in a state of utter collapse.

On Thursday morning Independence and Big Pine played ball, and the former won in hollow style. The Natives were "not in it." This settled the fact that Independence won first money. Our boys played good ball. They all had confidence and it is impossible to "rattle" them. Their battery, Julian Eibeshutz and Mairs, are a hard combination to down. The following is the score, Independence 33, Big Pine 13.

The first race Thursday afternoon was the 3-minute class and was contested by McKay's "Mc" and Scott's "Bishop." Mc was very unsteady and Scott landed Bishop an easy winner in straight heats.

For the quarter race three horses lined up. Quoins, ridden by Hunter, Annie C. by Counts and Salvator by Tapman. The horses got off to an excellent start and for the first hundred yards Quoins and Annie C ran head and head. From there on Quoins drove away and won easily by several lengths. Time, 24 seconds.

There was a very interesting program rendered at the Pavilion last evening. It was Children's night, and the youngsters acquitted themselves most creditably. The Independence ball team were called up and rendered a song and chorus, and met with an ovation. Mrs. T. A. Keables and Miss Mary Mulholland sang a duet, which was warmly applauded.

The Big Pine and Laws baseball teams are playing for second money as we go to press.

The list of awards will be published next Sunday.

Death of Assemblyman Coleman

MARKLEVILLE, Oct 6, 1896.

To the Independent:

Hon. Cyrus Coleman died at Markleeville on Sunday. Heart failure.

N. D. ARNOT.

The foregoing announcement is startling as it is regretful. Hon. Cyrus Coleman has long been a prominent Californian, especially identified with the history of the central mountain counties. He served with honor to himself and constituents in three legislatures, the last session from this Assembly District, and were our rotation system different would in all probability become Speaker of the House. Certainly our neighboring county of Alpine has lost its greatest friend, and all Inyo and Mono join in most sincere condolence.

Murphy, Charley Collins and Jake Miller were the only entries in the class for "handsomest men." The judges have not yet decided, but it looks as though Jake would carry off the honors.

Board adjourned till 1 o'clock, p. m.

Mr. Ed Brown, of Sodaville, has been taking in the Fair.

N. T. Piper, of Oasis, is among the Fair Directors in attendance this week.

Miss Grace Collins, of Warm Springs, is visiting Miss Mary Mulholland.

Hon. T. B. Rickey arrived from Carson on Wednesday and is taking in the Fair.

L. Case, Esq., regular Democratic nominee for Assemblyman, will address the people to-night, at the Court House.

Ladies wishing anything in the Millinery Line, please call at the old Inyo Independent building. Latest style hats cheap for cash.

MRS. A. R. BROWN.

Dr. and Mrs. T. A. Keables of Bodie arrived at Independence Wednesday evening. Dr. Keables is the regular Democratic nominee for the Assembly and is making a canvass of this section.

The Laws baseball team desire to express their thanks for the kind and courteous treatment received at the hands of the Independence boys, and are in hopes of having a return game with them in the near future.

Among our visitors from Bishop we noticed N. J. Cooley and wife, W. H. Wells and wife, J. M. Horton, R. W. Scott, P. A. Chalfant, Frank Shaw, A. C. Freeman, A. L. Kilpatrick, John Black, A. Clark, Wm. Birchim, Miss Frankie Shaw, Miss Mamie Clark and numerous others.

Wm. H. Miller of Lone Pine has announced himself an independent candidate for Supervisor from the Fourth District. He has never before been willing to accept any office, but has all the qualifications of making a No. 1 Supervisor, being one of the most enterprising business men in the county, thoroughly identified with Southern Inyo and knows its needs.

A WONDERFUL PHENOMENON.

The man who should pass through life without experiencing a twinge of indigestion, might be fitly regarded as a wonderful phenomenon. We doubt if such a privileged mortal has ever existed. If so, we have never seen him. But thousands are known to be daily relieved of dyspepsia by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the popular remedy for that truly national complaint, as well as for fever and ague, debility, constipation, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

Beware Of Mercury!

Mr. Henry Roth, of 1848 South 9th Street, St. Louis, was given the usual mercurial treatment for contagious blood poison. He was twice pronounced cured, but the disease returned each time, he was seized with rheumatic pains, and red lumps and sores covered his body. "I was in a horrible fix" he says, "and the more treatment I received, the worse I seemed to get. A New York specialist said he could cure me, but his treatment did me no good whatever. I was stiff and full of pains, my left arm was useless so that I was unable to do even the lightest work. This was my condition when I began to take S. S. S., and a few bottles convinced me that I was being benefitted. I continued the medicine, and one dozen bottles cured me sound and well. My system was under the effects of mercury, and I would soon have been a complete wreck but for S. S. S."

S. S. S., (guaranteed purely vegetable) is the only cure for real blood diseases. The mercurial treatment of the doctors always does more harm than good. Beware of mercury! Books on the disease and its treatment mailed free to any address by Swift Specific Co., Atlanta, Ga.

THE DEACON'S DISAPPEARANCE

By WILLIAM LEIGHTON.

"I would not like to take that responsibility either," rejoined I. "Besides the time is not far enough gone for any very serious apprehension. We must wait another day. There is an old saying something to the effect that 'if you want to keep your friends, don't prolong your visit beyond three days, and if you want to be thought not dead, don't be unaccountably absent from home beyond three nights.'"

To this Mr. Girvan agreed, and both of us saw the propriety of visiting the deaconess, who was hour by hour losing hope. We found her in the same position in which I had left her. I noticed that as we entered she turned a wistful eye upon us, with an expression that seemed to speak and say, "Is he not with you?" and there followed that blank look in which the orb seems dead.

There was silence everywhere, as if Angerona had there set up her temple, and the votaries were mute. The children, ignorant of the cause of change in their mother, had been put to bed. The servant whom we saw as we passed the kitchen sat at the fireside hanging her head, as if she mourned the death of a kind master, and no neighbors dared to intrude where they could carry no comfort—a species of kindness this in the people of Scotland which results from a delicacy they get small credit for from those who judge from a rude speech and homely if not coarse manners.

We sat down quietly and gravely, a clear enough indication to her that we brought no hopeful intelligence, nor had we sat many minutes when we came to understand what was the direction of the current of her thoughts. They had been all running toward the conclusion that Angus Macgillivray was in some way connected with the mysterious affair.

"Have ye inquired," she asked as she cast her eye over us, "if Angus has been at hame syn yesterday? I could wad my marriage ring he's awa, and nae suner than he should be. Will ye no answer?" she continued in a wailing tone. "Is he in Edinburgh? When was he seen? Can nacbody tell?"

I looked to Girvan, for I could not answer without falsehood, and he understood me.

"I have made no inquiry, Margaret," said he, "nor did I think it necessary to go there—the suspicion seems so unnatural. Besides are you not taking on too heavily? This is only the second day."

"The second day!" she burst forth. "And Deacon Macgillivray hasna seen his wife or his bairns nor sent a letter or a message to tell whaur he is. The second day!" she continued in the same wailing strain. "When was it that he was half an hour behind his dinner? And this has taken place in Edinburgh, which is just a lang street, whaur everybody kens everything about everybody."

"Many a longer absence has had a happy explanation," replied her brother. "We have only as yet one fact, and it will just look as you view it. You know peats will build the side of a house as well as make a fire that will burn you."

"But there's nae use buttering peats," cried she impatiently. "I tell you Deacon Macgillivray is dead, and Angus is the man who has made me a widow and my bairns fatherless."

And then came a fit of hysterical sobbing, which we had no means of alleviating. While I looked at her, and of course pitied her, I could not help thinking how completely her suspicion was confirmed by the information I had got, and which I dared not communicate to her. There was enough of sorrow for the hour. And as we saw we could be of no further service that night we left her to that kind of consolation which the heart seeks for itself, and sometimes the more readily and successfully that it is left to itself and to him who is master of the heart and the issues thereof.

Next forenoon I repaired to Girvan's, as arranged between us, in order that together we might make a more thorough search to the effect at least of ascertaining whether the missing man had been seen, and when and where, during the forenoon of his disappearance. On going along I found that the affair had spread, insomuch indeed that the question, "What has become of Deacon Macgillivray?" belonged now to the public. There was only one solitary grain of news. It appeared that a person of the name of Peter McGlashan, a laborer, who resided in the Cowgate, and whom we saw and interrogated, had been the involuntary cause of some of the theories, but all that could be extracted from him amounted to this, that he had seen Deacon Macgillivray that forenoon hurrying up the High street, and that, having occasion to return, he had met, about 10 minutes later, Angus Macgillivray coming up the bow, the top of which he doubled as if he were going down the High street. One or two others spoke to having seen the brothers respectively on the same route.

It was with minds very ill prepared for a meeting with the deaconess that we betook ourselves about 8 o'clock in the evening to Borthwick's Close. We found the same house of gloom, with the shadows increased in the darkness of these hours, and all appearances betokening utter hopelessness. The hours passed without any better reckoning than the increasing silence in the street and the gathering gloom of the unsnuffed candle till it might be about 11, when a slight knock was heard at the door.

Mrs. Macgillivray started, and we were not less surprised—nay, I have no doubt that all of us had some notion that the visitor might be no other than the deacon himself. The door was opened by the servant; we listened to the step on the passage—tramp—tramp—so like one well known that Girvan ejaculated with a kind of spasm, "It's the deacon!" The words were electric. We started up, and even Mrs. Macgillivray sat upright gazing at the door. It opened, and before us stood one of the town officers with the red neck on his blue coat.

"Here is a bit of paper," said he, "which was brought up to the office about an hour ago."

And Girvan, taking it out of his hand, fixed his eyes upon it as if he were charmed, yet he did not seem to comprehend what he was reading, for although I asked him what it contained he could not utter a word. Mrs. Macgillivray's eye was fixed upon him, and I myself sat with open mouth wondering what ailed the man.

"Can ye no read?" said the officer.

"Read," added I impatiently.

And the same words trembled on the lips of the deaconess.

Out it came at length, and the effect was certainly proportioned to the cause. I took the paper out of his hand and read for myself the following words, disposed in lines in this manner:

I took the paper out of his hand.

"Deacon Macgillivray,
Borthwick's Close, Edinburgh,
Killed on the 19th."

The paper was much crumpled, as if it had met with rough usage, and, what added to the effect of the direful words, it was besmeared with blood to such an extent that some of the letters were scarcely legible. I would willingly have kept it from the eyes of the deaconess, but she held out her hand tremblingly to get possession of it, and it was too late to attempt concealment. She read it at a glance, and, as if it had been on fire, threw it from her, unable to utter a word. "Stay a little," said Girvan as he rose and took his hat. "I will be back in 10 minutes." He hurriedly left the room. And I, taking up the paper, began to question the officer as to the person who left it at the bailies' office. I ascertained that his name was Hugh McPherson, a cobbler who resided in the Cowgate, and that his account of the manner of obtaining it was that he found it among straw on the street right opposite the coach office in the High street, from which the coach to Galashiels started twice a week. It was further stated by McPherson that his opinion was that the paper had fallen from the coach, along with the straw among which it was found. Before I had time to form any opinion as to the real purport and meaning of this sibylline scrap Girvan came again hurriedly into the room, breathing hard, as if he had been running—an effect no doubt due more to his excitement than to his bodily exertion. Laying down his hat, he resumed his seat, and putting his hand into his pocket he drew out another paper something like an account.

"Look at that," said he as he handed it to me.

Glancing over it, I found it to be an account for skins, due by Girvan to Angus Macgillivray, duly discharged.

"What of this?" said I, uttterly at a loss to know the meaning of it all.

"Examine the handwriting of the two papers," said he.

I did so and immediately ejaculated, "Why, that blood stained scrap is written by Angus Macgillivray."

"No doubt of it," said Girvan. "I knew it the moment I saw it, but I wanted to make sure work."

"And sure enough it is," replied I, "but what conclusion do you draw from it?"

"I am afraid to mention it," was the reply.

"But I'm no," cried the deaconess in a wild way. "It is just as I thought," she continued as she moved her arms as if to enable her to utter the words, "Angus Macgillivray has murdered my husband."

"But why should he publish the act in his own handwriting?" I rejoined.

"Because the awful man glories in his revenge," she cried again hysterically.

"That hardly squares with human nature," said Girvan. To this I assented, adding that "Angus was not so mad as not only to write his own condemnation, but give the officers of the law a direction to go in pursuit of him."

With all these qualifications, it was impossible to get rid of the direct effect of the words of the paper clearly enough indicating that the deacon had been killed by some one, whether Angus or not. The officer himself seemed to have no doubt, and, as for Mrs. Macgillivray, her former conclusion was only rendered more certain, and the calmness into which she quickly relapsed appeared to be the consequence of resignation to the will of God.

Meanwhile the officer had intimated that the paper was to be preserved and taken up to the office in the morning, with any explanation that could be given of it. He then went away, and late as the hour was we resolved upon seeking out McPherson to ascertain from his own mouth the true circumstances connected with the finding of the extraordinary paper. We accordingly went to the Cowgate, and having found the man, who was on the eve of going to bed, proceeded with our examination. He adhered strictly to what he had stated in the bailies' office, nor had he any more to communicate, but we derived thus much from our visit that we became satisfied the man was honest and was not accessory to any trick or deception whereby some one might have been supposed to have taken advantage of the public fermentation to infuse a new interest into what was already sufficiently engrossing. Girvan took the paper home with him, and we parted with the hope of getting some more light next day.

(To Be Continued.)

He Enjoyed It.

Old Johnson was very much given to "tippling," not wisely but too well, and would spend all his spare time at his favorite pub, says Spare Moments.

His house was so situated that it was necessary for him to go through the churchyard to reach it. One night, being a bit fuller than usual, he managed to fall into a newly made grave. He fell without hurting himself, and being tired went off to sleep. When he awoke the next morning, he couldn't make out where he got to, but after a struggle managed to reach the top of the grave and look around.

A broad grin spread over his face as he muttered to himself:

"Dear, dear, it's resurrection day, and I'm up first."

A FORGETFUL TRAMP.

He Has a Deep Sorrow, but He Cannot Remember What It Is All About.

He tossed a gold eagle to the evidently astonished tramp.

"As liberal as in the old Bagdad days, I see," said the wanderer. "Many thanks, sir. Ah, how I used to enjoy reading your adventures! They are among the very few things I can remember."

"You're very kind, I'm sure," said Sindbad. "Do you have trouble with your memory?"

"I should say I did," replied the tramp. "Why, I can remember hardly anything—that's why I'm tramping. I can't attend to any sort of business on account of that memory of mine—or, rather, on account of its absence. I used to be an expert bookkeeper, but I forgot the significance of figures, and made the most absurd mistakes. This seriously annoyed my employers, and the result was that I couldn't hold a position more than twenty-four hours. Why, I've even forgotten my name; I call myself James P. Brown; but I'm sure that's nothing like my real name."

"Now this is very gratifying," said Sindbad, in an aside to Tom; "he has forgotten even his own name, yet he remembers mine and my adventures." Then he asked: "When and how did you lose your memory, sir?"

"Why, I've forgotten even that," replied Mr. Brown; "but I think it was when I had a bad cold some years ago. Still, I'm not sure but that somebody hypnotized me. Really, I don't know how it happened."

"You seem a man of intelligence," said the great explorer.

"Oh, I am!" the tramp hastened to assure him. "I know a great deal, and if I only could remember it, you'd find me a very entertaining companion—provided my sorrow did not make me disinclined to converse; it might."

"Eh? You're what?" queried Sindbad.

"My sorrow. Oh, I forgot to mention to you that I have a deep sorrow, which is constantly preying upon me, and will eventually end my career."

"Dear! dear!" exclaimed Sindbad, with an expression of genuine concern. "Why, this is very sad! I don't like to be obtrusive, but if you don't mind telling what your sorrow is——"

"My dear Mr. Sindbad," interrupted Mr. Brown, "nothing would give me greater pleasure—melancholy pleasure, you understand—than to confide all to you, but the truth of the matter is I have completely forgotten what my sorrow is. I've had it for years, and I know it's something very painful, but to save my life I can't remember what it is, nor have I been able to for—I forget how many years."

"But how is it possible," asked Sindbad, naturally puzzled, "for you to be worrying yourself into the grave over a sorrow which you have forgotten all about?"

"Why, don't you see?" cried the tramp, "that's just the point; it's the suspense that's killing me. If I knew exactly what it is that worries me I shouldn't worry nearly so much. It is the dreadful uncertainty of the thing. Perhaps I have killed some one, and am tortured by remorse; or, maybe, I have lost an immense fortune in rash speculation; or—or—but why theorize on the subject? The fact remains that I have a rooted sorrow and that I can't remember anything about it. Now, I put it to you, isn't that enough to drive a man half frantic?"

"Yours is certainly a peculiar case," replied Sindbad, thoughtfully. "I don't think I have ever heard of one exactly like it."

"Oh, I'm sure you never have," said Mr. Brown. "If I ever have I've completely forgotten about it." And he sighed heavily.—St. Nicholas.

Mice and Rats in Japan.

There are small "deer" on the island that arouse no poetry or gracious sentiments. The mice, those pests of Japanese tea houses, raced through the doll houses at will by dark, the ornamental traceries and designs pierced in the pretty wood panels above the screens giving them free range of every room. They ran over my face, scratched my pillow, nibbled my fingers, and kept me awake night after night with their rustling and gnawing. On the third night of mouse carnival I called the servants and had lights brought. The landlord heard the sounds and bustled across the court to see what the matter was.

"I think there is a mouse in this house," I said.

"Oh, certainly, certainly, honorable lady," he said, bowing low and proudly; "yes, indeed; I have many, plenty of rats at the Momiji."

And he could not at all understand why we should make such a trouble about so natural a thing, and object to these sure evidences of abundant prosperity, these companions of Daikoku, the god of plenty.—Century.

Europeans in the Senate.

Knute Nelson of Minnesota enjoys the somewhat singular distinction of being the only member of the United States Senate born on the European continent—Europe outside of the British Isles. He is a native of Norway, and the most conspicuous representative in office of the Scandinavian population of the great Northwest. It is a fact, not generally known, that there are four Englishmen in the present United States Senate, or, more properly, four natives of England—Pasco of Florida, Mantle of Montana, Wetmore of Rhode Island and Jones of Nevada. There are two Canadians—McMillan of Michigan and Gallinger of New Hampshire. There is one Irishman—William J. Sewell of New Jersey. There are nine Ohio men.

Escaped From Chili.

THE DANGEROUS ADVENTURE OF DETECTIVE W. M. LUGG.

Compelled to Cross the Mountains on Muleback—Taken Sick During the Journey.

From the Examiner, San Francisco, Cal.

Four years ago, at the time of the trouble between the United States and Chili, as a result of the killing of the sailors of the U. S. S. Baltimore, in the streets of a Chilian city, many Americans were obliged to leave the country for safety. Among them was W. M. Lugg, the private detective and collector, whose office is in the Crocker Building, San Francisco, Cal.

When Mr. Lugg left Chili he went across the mountains into Argentine, traveling on muleback.

Mr. Lugg says that the trip is a delightful one in point of beauitful scenery and perfect weather, but many people dislike to undertake it on account of the unhealthful stagnant water which they are compelled to drink along the way. Many persons have been stricken down with disease from having drank of it, and in a number of cases the attacks have proven fatal. The native Chilians drink the water without injury to their systems but it has a bad effect upon those who are not used to it.

"I fell a victim to the injurious qualities of the water," said Mr. Lugg. "It affected my kidneys to an alarming degree. When I got over into Argentine I thought the trouble would gradually leave me, but instead of that it grew more aggravated and I suffered terribly from pains in the region of my kidneys. I was en route to Chicago and I determined to reach my destination before the complaint should grow so serious as to confine me to my bed. Upon reaching Chicago I at once consulted a physician, who told me my kidneys had been affected by drinking polluted water. He treated me for some time for that complaint, but I grew steadily worse and new ailments were added to my already serious condition. I began to have neuralgic pains in my head, my spine was affected with shooting pains and I had no control over the urinary organs. It was next to impossible for me to get any sleep. I lay awake many a night suffering the most intense pains, and the physician unable to relieve them.

"But relief came at last. One day one of my friends came to my room and handed me a box of Williams' Pink Pills. Of course I laughd at him for daring to think that any patent medicine could aid me when my physician had failed. I took the pills, however, to oblige my friend more than for any faith I had in them, and I was treated to the most joyous surpise of my life when I realized that I was being relieved of my pains. First the peculiar pains along my spine ceased, and then my neuralgic trouble began to grow less and finally left me entirely. It took a good while to improve the condition of my kidneys, but after I had taken a number of boxes of the pills I knew that they had done their work successfully, for then I had regained control of the urinary organs and the action of my kidneys was strong and steady.

"When I thought I was out of all danger I quit taking the pills. The relief they had afforded was permanent, however, and I have never since felt a recurrence of the complaints. I hardly know how to praise Williams' Pink Pills as they should be praised. They certainly are a wonderful preparation. I have recommended them to a number of my friends who were suffering from kidney complaints, and they have all been benefited by their use."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

$100 REWARD, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials. Address, F. J. ## HOW TO AID DIGESTIVE ORGANS

THE principle that the finer a food is divided and subdivided in its preparation the easier, quicker and better it is digested is seldom borne in mind by either the cook or the eater. All of us are supposed to think of the ancient adage of "eating slowly and chewing well," but very few carry this rule into practice. Still fewer think of applying the principle of comminution in the kitchen.

Thus, for example, a boiled onion is usually served whole, and on account of its slippery character is apt to reach the stomach in a large fragment. If it is cut up finely before the boiling or stewing it is converted at most into pulp, which digests in one-third or even one-fourth the time of the other way.

Grated cheese upon toast, macaroni and other dishes presents no difficulty to the digestive process. When served in pieces, as New York dairy cheese almost invariably is, it is rather difficult of digestion, and in its favorite form, the Welsh rarebit, it is very indigestible to a large proportion of the community. Another principle which is too often disregarded and which cannot be too highly praised is that long and slow cooking at a low temperature is far better than that in quick oven with great heat. This is the basis of the success in many steamers, cookers, heaters, Dutch ovens, Aladdin ovens and other contrivances in the market. Oatmeal, wheaten grits, cracked barley and crushed rye, when slowly prepared for twenty-four hours, are converted into a paste or jelly, which can be used by a person with the weakest stomach. If, as is generally the case, they are boiled vigorously for half an hour, the cells are imperfectly broken down, and the resulting food is often injurious to delicate digestions.

She Carries a Big Record.

Probably no lady cyclist can equal the long distance record of Miss Ida Greeley Ale, who has covered 15,000 miles awheel. Miss Ale is a school teacher, of Trenton, N. J. She is also secretary and treasurer of the local club and has recently been made local consul for the L. A. W., and she now has the distinction of being the first woman consul of New Jersey.

Miss Ale is devoted to sports of all legitimate kinds and advocates them warmly with tongue and pen. She has probably written more about woman and her "bike" than any other lady in the land, and she writes well. As a wheelwoman, she is expert and tireless, and can set a lively pace even for a male scorcher.

Rules for the Summer Girl.

Remember that one may be witty without being popular; voluble without being agreeable; a great talker and yet a great bore.

Be frank. A frank, open countenance and a clear, cheery laugh are worth far more even socially than "pedantry in a stiff cravat."

Be sincere. One who habitually sneers at everything will not render herself disagreeable to others, but will soon cease to find pleasure in life.

Be sensible. Society never lacks for fools, and what you may consider very entertaining nonsense may soon be looked upon as very tiresome folly.

Be cheerful. If you have no great trouble on your mind you have no right to render other people miserable by your long face and dolorous tones. If you do you will be generally avoided.

Above all be cordial and sympathetic. True cordiality and sympathy unite all the other qualities enumerated, and are certain to secure the popularity so dear to the heart of everyone.

Be amiable. You may hide a vindictive nature under a polite exterior for a time, as a cat masks its sharp claws in velvet fur, but the least provocation brings out one as quickly as the other, and ill-natured people are always disliked.

Remember that a good voice is as essential to self-possession as good ideas are essential to fluent language. The voice should be carefully trained and developed; a full, clear, flexible voice is one of the surest indications of good breeding.

Keeping Quiet When Angry.

There is in this city a merry little woman who never is obliged to ask twice when she wants anything. She isn't one of the meek women who never dare to have an original opinion or to indorse one unless her husband has previously indorsed it. Very often things do not go to suit her, but she has the good sense to realize scolding or complaining or whining will not help matters. If she is too angry to laugh she keeps still until she can control herself. If very angry she shuts herself up in her room alone for a few minutes. She says an angry woman seems to her to be so repulsive an object that she cannot bear to have those women whom she loves best to see her in any such character. She never seems to command, and her husband imagines that he always has his own way. She never disputes the point, yet they who know her best know that there are few questions that are not settled to her entire satisfaction. She will appear young when the scolding women of her age are consigned to the old, and she will always have an influence for good where they have no influence at all.—Chicago Chronicle.

Georgia Girl in Politics.

Miss Sturgis, a young woman of Atlanta, has charge of the Populist headquarters for the State of Georgia in that city. Miss Sturgis is secretary and treasurer of the People's Party Publishing Company and practically runs the People's party paper. Miss Sturgis says that since the nomination of Mr. Watson for Vice-President she has received hundreds of callers, and whether or not her office is the party headquarters makes no difference; for the people think so, and they continue to flock there. Miss Sturgis is a good judge of human nature and is an educated woman. When her callers come she knows when to talk books, and she knows when to talk crops, but above all else she knows when to discuss politics. She has a pile of books around her on the desk, books on political economy, histories and poems. Naturally Miss Sturgis believes in Tom Watson. She was reared in the county in which Mr. Watson lives and has watched his course and studied his character until the present time.

Kansas City's Woman Machinist.

Mrs. H. M. Cooley, wife of a machinist in Kansas City, is a skilled machinist and works daily in her husband's shop. She served an apprenticeship of two years and is now trusted to do the most delicate work that requires skill and care. She handles a steam drill with the utmost precision and has bored 10,000 holes in brass tubes in a single day, a record not attained by any man in the shop. Mrs. Cooley is small, but muscular, and says that she enjoys the work. She keeps her clothing and face clean, but her hands become as dirty and greasy as those of any other workman. Her husband says that she is the best artisan he ever had in his shop. She has invented one or two valuable articles, and does not hesitate to repair gasoline or steam engines when they are brought into the shop.

DID NOT KNOW HIS RELATIVES.

Sad Predicament of a Man Who Found a Pretty Cousin by Chance.

A Washington Star reporter was talking to a Washingtonian in front of an uptown hotel entrance when a handsome young woman walked by and went into the door beyond. Evidently she knew, or thought she knew, the Washingtonian, for she hesitated as if to speak to him, but the man gave no sign.

"Why didn't you speak to the lady?" inquired the writer man.

"I wasn't sure I knew her, and am not now," he replied.

"Couldn't you have taken chances?"

"Not any more."

There was something back of that sort of an answer and the writer man went after it.

"Oh," he laughed, "you've made a mistake in knowing people, haven't you?"

"Not exactly; but in thinking I know them. At least in thinking I knew a lady once. It was this way: Four or five years ago my folks were spending the summer at Rockville, and I came to town one afternoon to meet a cousin of my wife's from the southwest, whom I'd never seen, and escort her out home. Of course, I had a description, but descriptions don't always count, and when I saw a good-looking woman descend from the car I sailed right in and introduced myself as her cousin's husband and her escort to the country. She accepted the escort with a charming smile, asked about the health of her dear cousin, and all that in a general way, which seemed all right, though slightly vague, as it appeared to me later, and we went from the Baltimore and Potomac station over to the Baltimore and Ohio to catch a train.

"What would have happened if we had caught the train I don't know, but we missed, and then while we waited I took her uptown to a restaurant for supper, as the next train was going to put us home too late for it there. I telegraphed my wife that we would be out on a later train, and then blew my pretty cousin off to a nice little feed that cost me $5. We lingered at the table, for she was a charming person to talk with, and I let her look at a fine diamond ring that I wore and which she admired.

"There was some trouble about the bill when the waiter presented his check, and I laid the pocketbook down on the table and went over to the cashier's desk with the waiter and the money I had given him. I presume my back was turned five minutes away from my delightful cousin, and when I turned to go to her again she wasn't there. One waiter had seen her go into the hotel from the cafe, but had not given it a thought, and we immediately began a search for her. Suffice it to say we didn't find her. Suffice it to say also that when I got home the real cousin was there, also a very pretty woman, and, in conclusion, suffice it to say, that I speak to no more women unless they come to me with credentials. That lost diamond was worth $100, and there was $50 in the pocketbook, to say nothing of my injured feelings and betrayed confidence."

It was truly a fit time for sympathy, and the writer extended all he had in stock.

Surnames.

The old saying is all that has survived of the superstition that it is unlucky for a woman to wed one whose surname begins with the same letter as her own:

"To change the name and not the letter,
Is a change for the worse and not the better."

June was the month that the ancients considered most propitious for marriages, especially if the day chosen were that of the full moon, or the conjugation of the sun and moon. The month of May was to be avoided as under the influence of spirits adverse to happy households. Ovid says:

"Let maid or widow that would turn to wife,
Avoid the season dangerous to life;
If you mind old saws, mind, this say:
'Tis bad to marry in the month of May.'"

There is another more common form of this prediction unfavorable to marriage in the month of May, which may be the one which he refers to:

'Marry in May,
You'll rue the day,
To marry in May
Is to wed povertie.'

Unclaimed Bank Deposits.

Interesting disclosures are annually made by Connecticut savings banks in their compliance with the law requiring a return of the deposits that have not been taken from nor added to by the depositors within twenty years. The banks in Hartford report several hundred of such deposits, aggregating a total of $12,467.72. A New Haven bank has over $8,000 in unclaimed money, there is $7,000 in a Bridgeport bank, $6,000 in a Southport bank and lesser amounts in other banks all over the State. The individual deposits are as a rule small, being probably small balances which have grown with the accumulated interests. There are, however, several deposits measured by hundreds, and one of nearly $2,000. After the list of unclaimed deposits is published each year considerable of the unclaimed deposits is always drawn from the banks by the people who have deposited it or by their heirs.

Jingle and Jangle.

Jingle and Jangle are two litle bells
That jingle and jangle all day;
And Jingle rings sweet, with an accent that tells
Of lightsomeness, promise and May:
Sunshine and sugar and honey and bees,
Rainbows and buterflies' wings.
Bird-songs and brook-songs and wide-spreading trees—
Of joy little Jingle-bell sings!

Jingle and Jangle are two little bells
That jingle and jangle all day;
And Jangle rings harsh, with an accent that tells
Of darkness, forboding, dismay;
Storm-cloud and vinegar, wormwood and gall,
Toads' tongues and poisonous things,
Owlets and ravens, and dreams that appal—
Of woe little Jangle-bell rings!

Yes, Jingle and Jangle are two little bells
That jingle and jangle all day;
And the one that you listen to strangely compels
Behaviour that's sure to betray.
So listen to Jingle and be a good boy—
To Jangle, oh, never give ear,
And your days will be merry and bubble with joy,
While sadness will never come near.
—St. Nicholas.

He Was Grown Up.

A little fellow went into a shop some days ago to buy a pair of gloves. The shopman stared at the juvenile customer and asked him what size he took. The youngster promptly informed him. "Do you want kid gloves, my boy?" asked the shopman. "Kid gloves," ejaculated his customer; "I'm not a kid now. I want 'grow-up' ones."

Looking Ahead.

Little Clarence—Pa, when I grow to be a man like you do you s'pose I'll have a little boy of my own, just as you have now?

Mr. Callipers—Very likely.

"And do you think he will ask me a good many questions, just as I ask 'em of you now?"

"You will be deserving of sympathy if he does."

"Maybe so, pa; but if he asks questions, not for foolishness, but because he really wants to know, just as I do now, and I tell him to go to bed instead of answering him, just as you often do, will it be because my time is too valuable to waste on my son, or just because I don't know the answers to his questions myself, but want to make him think I am wiser than he is?"

Vegetable Toys and Dolls.

With some clean potatoes, some carrots, parsnips and toothpicks a rainy afternoon can be made so short that supper will come hours before it is expected. The potatoes should be small and as knobby and queer shaped as it is possible to get them. The parsnips and carrots should be washed clean and the toothpicks should be of the cheap, common wooden kind.

With these materials, all or part of them, and a couple of knives, a whole menagerie of animals and a whole roomful of dolls can be made. The toothpicks are used to join the heads, arms, legs, etc., to the body of the animal or doll.

The pictures showing vegetable toys are sketches of some actually made. Of course, some of the originals of the pictures were rather difficult to make, but a little care will enable the young animal maker to do wonders. Some of the best of the toys illustrated were made by a girl not over 10 years of age, but then she had spent three of her ten years in a kindergarten, where she cut out all sorts of pretty designs in colored paper and modeled dolls and dogs and cows in modeling clay.

SOME VEGETABLE TOYS.

Sometimes a funny doll can be made with potatoes without cutting or shaping them at all, but it is more fun cutting the "murphies" to shape.

The horse in the picture was made with a carrot body and potato legs and head, and the rider was made of potatoes. The trunk of the elephant was made by slitting the tip of a carrot and bending it up, and the curly tail of the pig was made out of a hairpin.

There are no rules to follow in making vegetable toys, for rules and regulations and directions spoil the fun. Just collect the vegetables and toothpicks and go to work, and the dolls and dogs and cats and elephants and pigs and tar babies will almost grow themselves.

HIDE AND SEEK AT SEA.

Torpedo-Boat Practice with the Great White Cruisers.

Mr. Ernest Ingersoll describes "The Tricks of Torpedo Boats" in St. Nicholas. After telling what the boats are like and what they can accomplish, Mr. Ingersoll says: But to insure all these fine results, both officers and men must be taught how to manage and maneuver them to best advantage, as well as how to discharge the torpedoes they carry. Constant drilling is necessary; and lately one of these boats in our navy, the "Cushing" (so suitably named after the young hero of the civil war who destroyed the rebel ram "Albemarle" by means of a rude torpedo-boat—one of the first actually used) has been attached to the naval station at Newport, Rhode Island, in order to carry on this practice. One set of officers and men after another is instructed in handling her, and in the making and firing of her torpedoes; and they have plenty of fun along with the schooling.

The headquarters of this work is Goat Island, which separates Newport harbor from the outer waters of Narragansett Bay.

There is a serchlight which cammands the harbor entrances and a wide circle of the bay. One or more warships are always there. Those searchlights also can be swung in any direction. Yet the Cushing arrived one night and first announced herself by suddenly blowing her whistle within pistol-shot of the inner wharf of the island—and it was not a dark night, either. A few afternoons later she went down the bay, and challenged every eye to be alert to see her return in the evening. It was bright moonlight—a time in which no such boat would attempt a serious attack—yet Lieutenant Fletcher, the Cushing's commander, crept within a third of a mile of the shore before he was detected. It would have pleased you to see her that night, as she came plainly into view—a long, low streak gliding silently and swiftly athwart the mootlit sea, rolling a silvery furrow back from her plow-like bow, and seeming more like some great fish with its back fins out of water than any sort of steamship.

But it is on dark and stormy nights that the practice becomes exciting. Groups of officers stand upon the rampart of Fort Wolcott, or upon the bridge of each monitor or cruiser, and strain eyes and ears to obtain some inkling of the torpedo-boat's presence, the long white beam of the electric searchlight sweeping right and left, up and down, and every man gazing along the path it illuminates for some glimpse of the little enemy. A swing of the beam southward brings out the grim walls and numerous cannon of Fort Adams, and shows every yacht and fishing-boat at anchor inside of Brenton's Point. The main channel, the Dumplings, the far away shore of Conanicut Island, Rose Island and its ruined old fortifications, the upper bay dotted with lazy sloops and schooners slipping down with the tide, are revealed one after another, as the powerful rays are turned slowly westward and northward until at last they are shining again in the Naval War College and Training School, and on the clustered shipping and wharves of the picturesque old town.

The Scouts of the Sea.

Torpedo-boats, however, are designed for a wider service than simply to carry and discharge the frightful weapon from which they take their name. They are to the navy what scouts and skirmishers are to a land army. They form the cavalry of the sea, of which the cruisers are the infantry and the battleships and monitors the artillery arm. They must spy out the position of the enemy's fleet, hover about his flanks or haunt his anchorage to ascertain what he is about and what he means to do next. They must act as the pickets of their own fleet, patrolling the neighborhood, or waiting and watching, concealed among islands or in inlets and rivermouths, ready to hasten away to the admiral with warning of any movement of the enemy.

It is not their business to fight (except rarely, in the one particular way), but rather to pry and sneak and run. Hence they are as small and sleek and swift as they can be made. When the fleet goes upon a cruise, they are carried on the decks of the big warships, although they are able to get about in really rough weather by themselves. A very recent idea is to build them out of aluminum, which would be not only of great advantage toward ease of transportation, but would tend toward increased speed, by adding buoyancy and elasticity to the structure, which seems to skim along the surface and fairly leap from wave to wave; but it is doubtful whether aluminum is strong enough for safety and whether it will not be injured by the chemical action of the sea-water—St. Nicholas.

Humane Treatment of Animals.

A general order has been issued from the Department of Agriculture to meat inspectors to use every means to secure humane treatment of animals in transportation and in stock yards. Also to make investigation as to the manner in which animals are transported and handled by the railroad companies and stock yards, and to make suggestions with a view of improving the service and protecting animals from undue suffering and cruelty. Animals which are suffering from injury or pain are to be promptly reported to the Humane Society unless the owner or those in charge of the stock yards properly care for them within a proper limit of time.

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

COSTS MORE TO ELECT EACH SUCCEEDING PRESIDENT.

Funds Subscribed by the Great Parties Are Expended Legitimately, and Not to Buy Votes—Five Millions Will Be Scattered This Year.

Big Campaign Funds.

The election of a President of the United States is a costly affair and the handling of campaign funds is consequently a matter of great importance to both the great political parties. The most exact business principles must be followed and for this and other reasons the appointment of a man to have charge of the finances of a national committee is a most momentous question. With every recurring campaign the expenses of election show an increase. Competent judges predict that not less than $5,000,000 will be expended by the two national committees in the great battle this year. The late Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, said not long before his death that it cost less to elect Lincoln in 1860 than is now often spent in a single Congressional district, and yet the work was just as thoroughly done as that of any committee the party has had since.

ZACH CHANDLER.
(A Great Collector.)

The use of large sums of money by national committees began with the two committees that managed Grant's canvasses in 1868 and 1872, and so rapidly did the extravagance increase that in 1880, at the time of Garfield's election, the national committee handled, or others handled for it, more than $1,000,000, while it has been estimated by those whose opportunities for knowing were good that throughout the country there was spent by different committees in the aggregate more than $4,000,000. The expenses of the campaigns of 1884 and 1888 were about the same. In the campaign of 1892 the national committees each collected and expended over $1,500,000 and the State committees collected for their individual use about a quarter of that sum.

STEPHEN W. DORSEY.
(A Shrewd Dispenser.)

The charge that most of the money raised for campaign purposes is used to corrupt voters and purchase votes is both silly and false. The expense of a presidential battle are of a legitimate nature. Four years ago the Republican National Committee expended $200,000 in the publication and circulation of campaign documents. An additional $100,000 was devoted to the campaign orators and their expenses. A little over $200,000 went to the Congressional districts where the contest was close and the outcome doubtful, and where it was used to pay band hire and the cost of the uniforms of marching clubs and of parades and public meetings. Something like $300,000 was sent to the chairman of the State committees of the doubtful States, and the cost of maintaining the national headquarters and of the local campaign in New York City consumed the balance of the funds raised by the national committee. The expenses of the Democratic National Committee in 1892 varied in some minor details, but its funds were expended through about the same channels as the Republican committee, the campaign methods of both parties being very similar.

WILLIAM H. BARNUM.

With the growing use of money in politics it has been found more and more desirable that the chairman of a national committee should be a man of large private fortune and of high standing in the business world. When subscriptions are slow in coming in, and he has as yet only promises in lieu of cash, he must become responsible for or advance the funds needed to meet current expenses. These advances frequently amount to several hundred thousand dollars, while if there is a shortage at the end of the campaign the chairman is the one looked to to make it good. Contributions to the campaign funds come in the main from men of large means within the party, some of whem give as high as $100,000. Large corporations also contribute handsomely in hope of securing political favor. In some cases these large concerns give to both of the great parties, thus making themselves safe in any event. There is a considerable class of men anxious to secure political prominence or to occupy high positions who give lavishly as a means of advancing their political interests. Finally comes the aggregate of small popular subscriptions, which foots up a large sum, and which represents men of moderate means, who take a patriotic pride in the success of their cause.

WILLIAM L. SCOTT.
[A Liberal Giver.]

STEPHEN B. ELKINS.
[A Political Financier.]

Presidential candidates, as a rule, are not depended upon for large subscriptions. The only exceptions have been Mr. Tilden and Mr. Blaine. The former is said to have spent over half a million dollars in the campaign of 1876, and Mr. Blaine's contribution to the campaign of 1884 is said to have exceeded $150,000.

The importance and influence of this potent electioneering argument—hard cash—has developed some very successful and shrewd beggars of money for campaign purposes. Republican veterans, when in a reminiscent mood, delight to talk about the late Marshall Jewell, who as a collector of campaign funds, perhaps, never had his equal. When others failed Jewell always succeeded, and it is told of him that in Boston in a single day he raised $170,000. Zach Chandler was a good deal of a diamond in the rough, but he was a shrewd judge of human nature, and he knew pretty well what chords to strike in order to make men generous. He was chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1876, and there was no lack of funds in that campaign. August Belmont in the campaigns immediately following the war was another good collector. So was William H. Barnum, who succeeded Mr. Belmont as chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Roswell P. Flower and Levi P. Morton are also both expert beggars.

The moneys expended by the national and State committees represent only a part of the cost of a presidential campaign. Conventions like those held in St. Louis and Chicago cost at a modest estimate from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 apiece, and the check of business during the campaign which follows them involves a loss of many millions more. Taking all these things into consideration, it may be roughly estimated that a presidential campaign costs the country about $20,000,000.

DIFFICULTIES OF BURNT WORK.

Drawings Made by Hot Iron on a Surface of Wood.

Many years ago the manual labor of the artist in color was reduced to a minimum; he no longer grinds his colors, or makes his canvas and brushes. But up to the present day the artist in burnt wood has toiled on with his rude forge and burning irons, with the devotion of an old-time alchemist. Singularly enough, relief from the discomforts of this crude mode of work has at last come through the avenue which brings relief from all physical ailments—that of medicine. The thermocautery, a surgical instrument invented for cauterizing, has been adapted to the use of the artist, so that he can work with comparative freedom.

Formerly the fire-etcher employed copper tools, not unlike soldering irons, set into wooden or other non-conducting handles. These tools cooled rapidly, and had to be constantly shifted, while the oxidation of the copper necessitated constant cleaning. What with feeding his fire and blowing it up with hand-bellows, it is a wonder that the wood burner produced anything at all artistic. To-day the hollow burning point is of platinum, a metal which does not oxidize. Once heated, a never-failing current of naptha gas, burning within, enables the artist to work for hours, wholly independent of the forge, the bellows, and other paraphernalia. The electrode, another surgical cautery, is likewise used in burnt wood, and electricity will in time supersede all other means of heating the burning point.

With these facilities at hand, the fire etcher must still encounter difficulties not found in practicing the kindred arts. Clouds of smoke constantly rise in his face, while the incessant flashing of the fiery point is always trying to the eye. He must have a deep-rooted love of his art, and the patience of Job.—Century.

Crane the Carrier.

Every year, on the approach of winter, thousands and thousands of birds, little as well as big ones, have to leave their summer quarters in search of sunnier lands. How large birds of strong wing can cross such a wide stretch of water as the eastern part of the Mediterranean it is easy to understand, but how do the wee ones, like wrens, titmice, finches and the rest manage it? Why, they ride first-class on the back of cranes. In autumn great flocks of cranes may be seen traveling southwards, flying low and giving forth a strange cry, as if of warning, and they sweep along southwards. As soon as they hear this note all kinds of little birds fly up to the cranes and settle on their backs, the twitter of those already snugly squatting thereon being audible at times. Then when spring revisits the north, and it is time for the little things to return to their old haunts, the cranes carry them back again—this time, however, flying high, as if they felt assured their tiny friends would easily reach the earth once the great sea were passed.

Smart Golf Costume.

The old-time secretary with glass doors makes a pretty side-board. The glass shows dainty china and silver to good advantage, while the drawers hold table napery, etc.

ELECTION PROCLAMATION.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that a General Election will be held throughout the State of California on

TUESDAY, the third day of November, A. D. 1896,

When the following officers will be elected, namely:

Nine Electors of President and Vice President of the United States.

Also, seven Representatives to the Congress of the United States: being one Representative from each Congressional District.

Also, one State Senator from each of the following Senatorial Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twenty first, Twenty-third, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-first, Thirty-third, Thirty fifth, Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth.

Also, one Member of the Assembly from each Assembly District in this State.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County.

Also, three Judges of the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento.

Also, two Judges of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alameda, Humboldt, San Diego, San Joaquin, Santa Clara and Sonoma.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Contra Costa, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Inyo, Kern, Lake, Lassen, Mariposa, Marin, Merced, Mendocino, Monterey, Modoc, Mono, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Placer, Plumas, San Bernardino, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Stanislaus, Yuba and Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Tuolumne, Ventura, and Yolo.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Fresno, for the unexpired term of S A Holmes, deceased, ending January, 1897; vice Stanton L. Carter appointed.

Also, at said election, Amendments to the Constitution of the State, submitted by the Legislature at its last regular session, numbered and designated as hereinafter specified, will be voted upon by the electors of said state, namely,

Amendment Number One.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 33.)

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 1. All property in the State not exempt under the laws of the United States, or this Constitution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property" as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matter and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership; provided, that property used for free public libraries and free public museums, growing crops, mortgages, trust deeds, property used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation. The Legislature may provide for a reduction from credits of debts due bona fide residents of this State.

Sec 2. Section four of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Sec 3. Section five of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Amendment Number Two.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 8.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 5 All elections by the people shall be by ballot or by such other method as may be prescribed by law; provided that secrecy in voting be preserved.

Amendment Number Three.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 19.)

ARTICLE XII.

Section 3. The liability of stockholders of corporations or joint stock associations shall be limited by the face value of the shares of the subscribed capital stock or shares of such corporation or association; and whenever any shares have been fully paid up, the holder of such shares shall not be further liable to such corporation or association, or the editors thereof, on that account. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association, whose capital stock is not fully paid up, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder or shareholder, as the amount unpaid upon the stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole amount unpaid upon the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association. The Directors or Trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association, during the term of office of such Director or Trustee.

Amendment Number Four.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 25.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.

Amendment Number Five.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 13.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of article eleven of this Constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution and by the laws of this State, as follows:

1 For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of Police Courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the Judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of said Judges and of their clerks and attaches.

2. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Education shall be elected or appointed, and the number which shall constitute any one of such Boards.

3. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Police Commissioners shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards and of the municipal police force.

4 For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of all Boards of Election shall be elected or appointed, and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards, and of their clerks and attaches; and for all expenses incident to the holding of any election.

Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section eight of said article eleven, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies.

Amendment Number Six.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 11.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 1. Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under and by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims to vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, no native of China, no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, and no person hereafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, and no person who shall not be able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his or her name shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector in this State; provided that the provisions of this amendment relative to an educational qualification shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be sixty years of age and upward at the time this amendment shall take effect.

Each amendment shall be voted upon separately from the others, by ballot, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the third day of November, 1896.

The said amendments are respectively designated:

Amendment Number One,
Amendment Number Two,
Amendment Number Three,
Amendment Number Four,
Amendment Number Five,
Amendment Number Six.

Each ballot used at such election must contain printed thereon the words:

|---|---|
| Amendment Number One, being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 33, (exempting mortgages and trust deeds from taxation). For the Amendment? | YES ——— NO. |
| Amendment Number Two, being Senate Amendment No. 8 (authorizing elections by ballot, or such other secret method as may be permitted by law). For the Amendment? | YES. ——— NO. |

For the Amendment? | YES. ——— NO. |
| Amendment Number Six, being Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 11 (extending the right to vote to females). For the Amendment? | YES. ——— NO. |

And I do hereby offer a reward of One Hundred Dollars for the arrest and conviction of any and every person violating any of the provisions of Title VI, Part 1, of the Penal Code; such reward to be paid until the total amount hereafter expended for the purpose reaches the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the Great seal of the State to be affixed, at the City of Sacramento, this 25th day of September, 1896.

JAMES H. BUDD,
Governor.

[SEAL.]
Attest: L. H. BROWN,
Secretary of State.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, there has been presented to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, petitions signed by legal voters of the said County of Inyo, equal in number to fifty per cent of the votes cast at the last preceding election asking that an ordinance set forth in each of said petitions, be submitted to a vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, which said proposed ordinance is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

ORDINANCE NO. —

An Ordinance for the purpose of police regulation, by prohibiting the maintenance of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the County of Inyo, State of California.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo do ordain as follows:

SECTION 1.—It shall be, and is hereby made, unlawful for any person or persons, either as owners, principals, agents, servants, or employees, to establish, open, keep, maintain, carry on, or assist in carrying on, within the corporate limits of the County of Inyo, State of California, any tippling house, dramshop, cellar saloon, bar, barroom, sample room, or other place where spirituous, vinous, malt, mixed, or intoxicating liquors are sold or given away; provided that the provisions of this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of liquors for medicinal or chemical purposes by regularly licensed druggists upon the prescription of a physician entitled to practice medicine under the laws of the State of California.

SECTION 2.—Any act in violation of this ordinance shall be construed a separate offense for each day of its continuance.

SECTION 3.—Every person who violates any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any County Court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding three hundred and sixty dollars, or by imprisonment in the County Jail of the County of Inyo not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SECTION 4.—All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this Ordinance are hereby repealed.

SECTION 5.—This Ordinance shall take effect on the first day of January, 1897.

SECTION 6.—This Ordinance shall be published for two successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in said Inyo County.

Now, therefore, by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, and the authority in the said Board of Supervisors vested, the said Board of Supervisors do hereby, by due proclamation, submit the said Ordinance to the vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, State of California, on Tuesday, the third day of November, A. D. 1896. And notice is hereby given thereof, and that said Ordinance and the adoption thereof shall be voted on, for the Ordinance, Yes or No.

FRANK FITZGERALD,
(SEAL.) Chairman, Board of Supervisors.
Attest: D. J. HESSION,
Clerk.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE ON FORECLOSURE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

SARAH J. NICHOLS, Plaintiff, vs. E. H. EDWARDS, Administrator of the Estate of JOHN LUCAS, Deceased, Defendant. } Commissioner's sale on Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of sale and decree of foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 29th day of Sept., 1896 in the above-entitled action wherein Sarah J. Nichols, the above-named plaintiff obtained a judgment and decree against E. H. Edwards, Administrator of the estate of John Lucas, deceased, defendant, on the 21st day of Sept., 1896, which said decree was on the 23rd day of Sept. 1896, recorded in Judgment Book No. 1 of said Court at page 343. I am commanded to sell the lands and premises situated, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows to-wit:

The East half of the Southwest quarter, the Westhalf of the Southeast quarter, and the East half of the Southeast quarter of Section twenty-eight (28) Township fifteen (15) South, Range thirty six East, Mount Diablo Meridian, together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

Notice is hereby given, that on Tuesday, the 17th day of Nov. 1896, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, in front of the Court House of said County of Inyo, at Independence in said County, I will in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, with interest thereon and costs, to the highest and best bidder for cash, in lawful money of the United States.

JAMES R. MOFFETT,
Commissioner.

BORN.

FORBES—At Independence, Oct. 13, 1896, to Mr. and Mrs. P W. Forbes—a son

The Fair Ball was a social as well as a financial success.

Randall Slacke left Mojock for Randsburg last Monday.

Attorney Bledsoe, of Los Angeles, is visiting Independence.

Miss Maud Cook is expected home from Hawthorne next Monday.

Hay in the stack is being sold in this vicinity at two dollars a ton.

Our District Attorney's face is wreathed with smiles. The cause of joy is another boy.

Lack of space prevents the publishing of the Premium List this week of the late Fair.

Mrs. I. H. Mulholland and daughter returned from a visit to Los Angeles yesterday.

Jack Black passed through town early in the week from a trip to his mine at Beveridge.

There is talk of a Baseball Tournament being held at Big Pine during Thanksgiving week.

S. G. Gregg, host of the Big Pine hotel, and Mr. Burton, the upholsterer, were in town on Sunday.

The people of Inyo County will vote upon the question of "local option" at the coming election.

Miss Grace Collins, who was here attending the Fair, departed for her home last Tuesday morning.

Hon. T. B. Rickey, who has been in town looking after his cattle interests, went to Carson Thursday.

Mrs. John Shepherd returned to Keeler Thursday after a visit of two weeks with her daughters in San Francisco.

Mrs. Bert Rhine and daughter have gone on a visit to Mrs. Rhine's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Collins, of Black Canyon.

John McSweeney is engaged in teaming between Randsburg and Mojave. He came up to Inyo last Thursday after more horses to carry on the work.

Harrie J. Robinson, accompanied by some mining men from Los Angeles, is taking a look at the mining interests of this section with a view of investing.

Mr. Burton, the upholsterer, will be in Independence the latter part of the month, and all those needing work in his line should not fail to call on him.

Rev. L. Case delivered an address at Independence last Friday evening in the interest of the silver cause, which was listened to with the closest attention and merited the abundant applause the speaker received. On Saturday evening he went to Lone Pine and lectured there. He discussed the silver problem from the standpoint of a man who had been a lifelong Republican, and who is firmly convinced that in free silver coinage is our only hope of prosperity.

Dr. Keables the Nominee.

A meeting of the Inyo County Democratic Central Committee was held at Independence last Saturday evening. The choice of a candidate for the Assembly rested this year with Mono County, and before the meeting of the Mono Convention the Chairman of the Central Committee of Mono wrote to parties here tendering the choice to Inyo. Acting on that letter the Central Committee selected Rev. L. Case of Bishop. Subsequently Mono county held a Convention and nominated Thomas A. Keables of Bodie, consequently the Central Committee of this county had no choice but to ratify the selection of Dr. Keables. When Mr. Case was informed of the state of affairs he promptly filed his resignation as the nominee of the Populist party with the Democratic endorsement. Mr. Case evidenced the highest type of disinterested manly action, and has proved by his every deed that he is for the success of silver first, last and all the time.

JOSEPH SEELY,
County Surveyor.

The Board at this time took under consideration Citizens' Petition praying that an ordinance be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors of the County of Inyo, for the purpose of police regulation, prohibiting the maintenance of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of Inyo County, and it having been ascertained that said petitions were signed by legal voters of the said County of Inyo, equal in number to fifty per cent of the vote cast at the last preceding general election, it was Ordered, That whereas there has been presented to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, petitions signed by legal voters of the said County of Inyo, equal in number to fifty per cent of the votes cast at the last preceding general election, asking that an ordinance set forth in each of said petitions, be submitted to a vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, which said proposed ordinance is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

ORDINANCE No.—

An Ordinance for the purpose of police regulation, by prohibiting the maintenance of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the County of Inyo, State of California.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo do ordain as follows:

Section 1. It shall be, and is hereby made, unlawful for any person or persons, either as owners, principals, agents, servants or employees, to establish, open, keep, maintain, carry on, or assist in carrying on, within the corporate limits of the County of Inyo, State of California, any tippling house, dramshop, cellar, saloon, bar, bar-room, sample room, or other place where spirituous, vinous, malt, mixed, or intoxicating liquors are sold or given away; provided that the provisions of this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of liquors for medicinal or chemical purposes by regularly licensed druggists upon the prescription of a physician entitled to practice medicine under the laws of the State or California.

Section 2. Any act in violation of this ordinance shall be construed a separate offense for each day of its continuance.

Section 3. Every person who violates any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any Court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding three hundred and sixty dollars, or by imprisonment in the County Jail of the County of Inyo not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Section 4. All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this Ordinance are hereby repealed.

Section 5. This Ordinance shall take effect on the first day of January, 1897.

Section 6. This Ordinance shall be published for two successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in said Inyo County.

Now, therefore, by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, and the authority in the said Board of Supervisors vested, the said Board of Supervisors do hereby, by due proclamation, submit the said Ordinance to the vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, at the next general election to be held in the County of Inyo, State of California, on Tuesday, the third day of November, A. D. 1896. And notice is hereby given thereof, and that said Ordinance and the adoption thereof shall be voted on, for the Ordinance, Yes or No.

TO OUR READERS.

We have received word that the Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, have perfected a thoroughly reliable and economical Gas and Gasoline Engine, called the Hercules, and are offering a 2½ actual horse-power Gas and Gasoline Engine, guaranteed, for $185.00.

Those of our readers who use or need power for mining, hoisting, pumping or for any purposes, will be glad to know this, as cheap, reliable power has been difficult to obtain heretofore. We can vouch for the responsibility of the Company offering this Engine; in fact, they guarantee satisfaction or to refund purchase price.

It will pay those needing power to write to the Hercules Gas Engine Works, San Francisco, Cal., for particulars.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Is this what ails you?

Have you a feeling of weight in the Stomach—Bloating after eating—Belching of Wind—Vomiting of Food—Waterbrash—Heartburn—Bad Taste in the Mouth in the Morning—Palpitation of the Heart, due to Distension of Stomach—Cankered Mouth—Gas in the Bowels—Loss of Flesh—Fickle Appetite—Depressed, Irritable Condition of the Mind—Dizziness—Headache—Constipation or Diarrhœa?

Then you have in one of its many forms. The one positive cure for this distressing complaint is

THE DEACON'S DISAPPEARANCE

By WILLIAM LEIGHTON.

The light certainly did not come, but there was now more official inquiry as well as energy. Girvan, at an early hour of the forenoon, took the blood stained paper to the bailies' office and found that the assessor was so much impressed with the strangeness of the whole story that he had resolved upon handing it over to the fiscal. Nor did he fail in this, as soon appeared by a wall bill which, about 1 o'clock, glared in various parts of the city to the effect that whereas a paper on which was written the following words (quoted) had been found on the High street of Edinburgh, a reward of £5 would be given to the person who had written the contents of the said paper (assuming it doubtful whether Angus Macgillivray was the man), if he would come forward and give testimony as to the object or meaning thereof, or to any person who would give information tending to show where the person of Duncan Macgillivray, deacon of the hammermen, could be found, whether dead or alive. Nor did the fiscal limit his official duties by this proclamation, for about 2 o'clock he commenced a precognition of all parties who knew anything regarding the affair, among whom were the deaconess (who was, in consequence of her weakness, taken to the office in a sedan chair), Mrs. Angus Macgillivray, McPherson, Girvan, myself and the individuals who had seen the missing men on the day of their disappearance.

But nothing came out of the bill or the precognitions tending toward any theory sufficient to stay the mind or induce belief, if we except a statement made by a young man, a clerk in the coach office, opposite which the blood stained paper had been found. He went forward in the afternoon and was precognosced by the fiscal to the effect that on the day of the disappearance he saw two men whom he did not know mount the coach just when it began to move, and without having time to pay their fares, which they probably calculated upon settling at the other end of their journey.

One of the men, who was stouter and fatter than the other, got inside, and the other, immediately upon perceiving the movement, sprang up behind. He observed no concert between the two, yet he felt satisfied that the one had resolved to go after he saw the other about to take his seat. It was only after he heard a description of the two Macgillivrays that he began to think they were the men whom he had observed. When this story came to be known, it was conveniently found to agree in some respects with the history of the paper. Assuming that the men seen by the clerk were really the two brothers, it seemed probable that the deacon was he who went inside, probably called upon to undertake the journey on short notice by some business emergency, and that Angus, who was prowling about, had seen his brother in the act of entering the coach, had suddenly formed a resolution to dog him into the country and there wreak his revenge at a distance from Edinburgh.

This sudden purpose seemed probable, because if there had been any concert between the two to travel together Angus would have gone inside also, where, according to the clerk's statement, there was plenty of room for him. So far ingenious and certainly in the circumstances not improbable. Then, as to the paper, what more likely than that it should have come with the returned coach, having been sent by Angus when upon the eve of flight after committing the deed and bearing the marks of bloody fingers? As for the motive for thus proclaiming his villainy, the most difficult element in the whole story, it might have been (what might not be when the mind is predisposed to find that it is?) the wild act of a bravado, glorying, as Mrs. Macgillivray herself expressed it, in his revenge at a time when he knew he would be far away before the paper reached its destination.

Another day dawned, bringing with it of course further confirmation, in the passage of time, of the universal conviction that, whatever might be the speculations as to the when, how or wherefore, there could be little doubt of the fate of Deacon Macgillivray. And with the same increase of effect the day passed. Taking Girvan along with me, I called at the house in Borthwick's Close about 5 o'clock. We found there Mrs. Girvan, and another, of all the world the most unexpected, the wife of Angus Macgillivray herself. Her story was extraordinary enough. She said that ever since the taking out of the lawborrows Angus Macgillivray had been a changed man. He read his Bible in the morning and showed other indications of penitence for the enmity he had entertained toward his brother.

"And now," continued the woman as she took from her pocket a Bible, which she had probably brought with her for the very purpose, "I swear by this holy book, which I hope to be the means of the salvation of my soul and that of my husband, that Angus Macgillivray, on that morning when he so strangely disappeared, stated to me, aye, with tears in his eyes, that he mourned continually over the separation of himself and his brother; that he was determined to throw himself in his way, to confess his contrition and sorrow for what had passed, to offer him his hand and swear a renewed friendship, which he would keep true to the day of his death."

This remarkable statement, which was confirmed by the manner as well as the honest character of the woman, was, I think, believed by all of us excepting the deaconess, who had been so completely wedded to the old theory of the murder by Angus that it seemed as impossible to move her from this conviction as it was to raise her out of the great depth of her sorrows. "The news has been lang o' coming, woman," said she; "I will believe it when Angus proves himsel' to be innocent o' a brother's blnid."

"But you forget, sister," said the other, "that I have nothing to expect from coming here and telling you a lie. I am here for your comfort; to satisfy you that, whatever has become of your husband, he has received no injury from the hands of mine."

"That looks like reason," said I, "and I think I now see some light breaking through all this darkness."

"Whaur?" ejaculated Mrs. Macgillivray. "There is nae light to me except the light o' heaven. Nae earthly light will ever show me 'gain the living face o' Duncan Macgillivray. He is dead—dead!"

"And I may say the same of my husband," said the brother's wife. "Is he not a-missing as well as Duncan, and who has a right to say that the one killed the other, or that other the one?"

I was struck with the reasoning of the woman, who was better educated than the deaconess and with a greater power of penetration, and the mystery was about to take another turn. I was about to enlarge upon what had been last said when Mrs. Girvan laid her hand upon my arm and said, "Hush!" We had no notion of what she meant. Every one looked at her now. I saw plainly that she was busy listening.

"I hear Deacon Macgillivray's voice on the stair," she said.

And the words were scarcely spoken when a confused shuffling of footsteps was heard in the lobby. The door opened, and in there came the deacon and his brother Angus.

"What is the meaning o' a' this?" cried the cast up dignitary. "A dozen people have met me and told me I have been dead and buried for five days."

"And that I murdered my ain brother," cried Angus.

"And surely I am dead," added the deacon, with a laugh, "for my ain wife is feared at me and winna even offer me her hand. Peggy, woman," he continued as he went round and took his wife in his arms, "what ails ye?"

During all which the deaconess was in a vertigo, with nothing in her brain fixed except the image of her husband, received through a pair of staring eyes.

"And Johnny Gow didna tell you?" continued he as he looked round upon us all still in amazement.

"No," responded the wife as she began to recover herself. "What had he to tell?"

"Just that Angus and I had gane down to Blackha' to see our brother Andrew," said he, "but I see now how it is. Johnny was half drunk when I gave him the message, and the sixpence had helped to mair drink, and the drink had driven him stupid."

"Peggy, woman," he continued, as he went round and took his wife in his arms.

"Why, deacon," said I, "it has been a serious affair. The whole city has been in the belief that you were murdered, and Angus was suspected of the deed. Nor is it to be wondered at, for even yet we want explanations."

"Explanations!" replied the deacon. "What mair do ye need than just that as I was going up the High street I met Angus, who came up to me and said that he was a changed man, that he wanted the past to be forgotten, and that he would give the world to be friends wi' me. I couldna refuse the offered hand of a brother, and after a' I was as anxious to be friends again as he. So maybe our hearts got big, and there might have been something in baith our een that belangs mair to women than men. When we were in this saft mood, the coach for Galashiels was on the very point of starting, and Angus said that he intended to go to Blackha' to buy sheep the next forenoon, but that if I were agreeable he would take his trip that day, and we might go together. I have no objections, said I, but we maun send notice to our wives. I beckoned Gow, because I thought I could trust him, gave him a sixpence and got a promise. Next moment we were on the coach, and, by my troth, I never enjoyed a jaunt better in my life. Andrew was delighted to see us friends again, and maybe there was a sowther o' kind that gaes mair to the heart than words. But what though the cadie deceived us, didna ye get," he continued, as he looked into the face of the deaconess, "didna ye get the salmon that Angus sent you on the day it was killed—the 19th?"

The secret was all but out. What was wanting was afterward ascertained. The driver had appropriated the fish because he saw no ticket of address upon it. The ticket was found by Hugh McPherson. And thus was explained a mystery which occupied the metropolis of Scotland nearly a week—in other words, which are less or more applicable to most mysteries, the worsted was rolled off, and, behold, the cork!—"Mysterious Legends of Edinburgh."

THE END.

He Knew His Rights.

A little bowlegged Jap about 4 feet high made the conductor on a Market street car feel very uncomfortable yesterday. The Jap got on the car at Powell street, and in payment of his fare gave the conductor a transfer. He glanced at it and observed that it had been punched an hour before.

"Fare, please!" he growled as he held out the transfer.

"I have gave you one transfer," said the Jap very calmly and deliberately as he stared ahead like a wooden Indian.

"That was punched an hour ago."

"I cannot help if the conductor punch a wrong hole," declared the Jap.

"But it is not good. I want your fare."

"If it is not good, why he gave it me?"

"Will you pay your fare?"

"No."

"Then you will have to get off."

"I neither pay any more nor get off," declared the Jap deliberately, and his face never moved a muscle.

"Then I will have to throw you off." And the conductor stopped the car.

"You are afraid to put me off, if you even could. The law says you must take transfers, and your employer says you must take it, too, if you cannot make a man pay again. You cannot make me pay again."

The conductor gave the bellcord a jerk, and the little Jap continued to stare out the window opposite.—San Francisco Post.

On the Bargain Counter.

"You say, then, that this material is the latest fashion?"

"The very latest, madam."

"But will it fade in the sun?"

"Why, it has been lying in the window for two years, and look how well it has stood!"—Boston Traveller.

DID NOT PROVE AN EDEN.

Miserable Failure of a New England Colony in Mexico.

Newspaper readers will remember the glowing promises and high hopes which some years ago attended the formation of a colony of Americans at Topolobampo, Mex. The place was pictured as an Eden, and many people went there expecting a life of ease and independence after a few years. Here is what a San Francisco paper has to say of the colony:

Six people—destitute and discouraged people—are all that now remain of the colony of Vermont and Massachusetts people, comprising several hundred families, who emigrated some eight years ago, full of dreams of prospective wealth and prosperity, to Topolobampo, on the Mexican coast. The steamer Coos Bay, which arrived Friday from various southern ports, put into the little harbor at the mouth of the Fueries river, the nearest coast point to Topolobampo. It was the first steamer seen by the few inhabitants in over two years. Capt. Jansen reports that every man, woman and child who could possibly get out of the desolate country has emigrated long since, all probably still deploring their foolhardiness in listening to the tales of the people who urged them away from comfortable homes to a region of rocks and sand, where little or no water exists and nothing will grow. The six white people who remain are there, he says, simply because they cannot get out. The ettlement of Topolobampo, which was pictured by the colony projectors as the garden spot of the world, is situated on the north bank of the Fuertes, and is about thirty miles from the delta. It is described by Jansen as being one of the most desolate spots he ever visited.

"An Example in Agriculture."

Under this head the Youth's Companion recently published an article giving a newspaper report of the opinion said to have been expressed by Mr. Morton, United States Secretary of Agriculture, with regard to the magnificent estate of George Vanderbilt at Asheville, N. C. In the article was also a statement, said to have been made by Mr. Morton, that the people of Asheville do not appreciate the beneficent character of the work done, and think that Mr. Vanderbilt is "spending enormous amounts of money to gratify his pride and appetite." They "imagine that it is all due to selfishness—when he is really working for them."

A correspondent writing from Hendersonville, N. C., declares that what Mr. Morton is reported to have said with regard to the people of Asheville is as unjust as it is untrue. He says:

"The fact is, we are a domestic people to whom nothing seems more natural than that a man should build for himself a beautiful home; it also accords with our ideas of the fitness of things that this home should be as complete as his intelligence can dictate, and as elegant as his means can command and as his station in life demands.

"The writer's business brings him into intercourse with all classes of people in this locality, and he never heard from any one comments that would justify Mr. Morton's conclusions. On the contrary, Mr. Vanderbilt is regarded as a benefactor. He commenced this work at a time of great business depression; the money expended saved us from a business collapse, and gave employment to hundreds of worthy people, many of whom would otherwise have suffered for the necessities of life.

"Mr. Vanderbilt and the manager of his estate, Mr. McNamee, have been just, even to generosity, in their dealing with our people, and we appreciate it, and are also grateful for the many unostentatious charities received from both these gentlemen."

Too Confident.

Much of our success depends upon the quality of self-confidence, but in its extreme it often plays a trick that restrains us somewhat. Remembering such mortification it is pleasant to reflect that the greatest men have met with a similar check.

When Mr. Gladstone was a young student, he met with an amusing disaster in the examination room at Oxford.

"What books do you take up?" the examiner asked of him.

"It is immaterial to me," replied Mr. Gladstone. "Pray examine me in any book you like."

Then the examiner grinned an ugly and malicious grin, and produced a corrupt and crabbed chorus from one of the less read plays of Aristophanes, and invited Mr. Gladstone to translate it. He could not do so. No one could have done so who had not seen it before, and the result was that Mr. Gladstone was more careful when he tried a second time.

He Desired Moderation.

It is an unmistakable and unfortunate fact that too many reformations are as incomplete as in the following case, told by the Washington Star:

"Yessirree," said Farmer Corntossel, as he tilted back in the rocking-chair and let the paper fold itself over his knee. "I'm a red-hot, out-and-out teetotal reformer every time."

"Well," replied Mrs. Corntossel, "I'm right glad to hear you say so."

"What fur."

"Well, ef yer goin' in fur reform, I reckon mebbe ye'll be out o' bed 'fore 6 in the mornin' and' have stove wood handy fur the breakfas' fire, and do a leetle turn at the milkin' oncet in a while, an' git yer apples into town 'fore they're down to 50 cents a bar'l an——"

"Hole on, Mandy," was the solemn interruption; "hole on! I said I was out fur reform an' I'll stan' by it. But I'm blamed ef I'm goin' in fur any revolution."

A Good Turn.

Gobang—I do not know why folks complain about mothers-in-law. Mine tried to do me a good turn once.

Pshaw—How? Did she attempt suicide?

Gobang—No, she refused her consent to my marrying her daughter. But I was suspicious and we eloped.—New York World.

The reason why sponge cake is tough is often because it was baked too rapidly. Use the juice of half a lemon in it, and allow a quarter of an hour longer for the baking. Cheap water sponge is generally tough unless it has lemon juice added to it, and it should be very carefully baked.

GROWTH.

Blow, winds! Your rage but shakes the tree
And roots it surer in its place.
Scatter your rain, ye cloud and free
The buds that wait your frowning grace!
Roll down, O river, to the sea
And widen in your onward race!

Peace through a sunny span may keep
His garden in some quiet glen
Whilst others sow for him and reap
And tend his flocks on moor and fen.
The flowers of peace are death and sleep.
The strife of living makes us men.

Ah, joy it is to win the goal
By tireless work and dauntless will,
Yet may the life rise ofled and whole
From clouded hopes and loss and ill.
Our baffled toils upbuild the soul,
And failure so is victory still.
—A. St. John Adcock in Spectator.

TACKS.

Made In Great Variety and For Many Different Uses.

The best tacks are made of imported Swedish iron, the next grade of American soft steel and the cheapest of common American iron. Tacks are also made of copper. Some tacks are tinned, and for ship use tacks are galvanized. Tacks are made of sizes ranging from a half ounce to 24 ounces. The tack commonly used as a carpet tack is an eight ounce tack. A 24 ounce tack is about 1½ inch in length.

There are many kinds of tacks, made for a great variety of uses, and they are put up in many different forms. There are gimp tacks, looking glass tacks, upholsterer's tacks, trunk tacks, lace tacks, basket tacks, brush tacks, coffin tacks, shank tacks, lasting tacks, miner's tacks, cheesebox tacks and tacks for many other uses. Within the past dozen years the sale of double pointed tacks has increased tenfold with the greatly increased use of electrical wires. Double pointed tacks are also used for tacking down straw matting and for other purposes.

Tacks that are sold in papers are put up in full weights, half weights, and quarter weights, the weight indicating the size of the package. Almost all kinds of tacks are also sold in bulk in 25 pound and 50 pound boxes and in 100 pound kegs.

A one ounce tack machine will make in a day about 100,000 tacks altogether. The iron is fed into the machine in a plate which is of a width a little greater than the length of the finished tack, so as to allow of material to be upset for the head. An eight ounce machine will make about 200 pounds of tacks a day—1,250 to the pound, about 250,000 tacks. Tacks that are put up in papers are weighed out and the papers filled by hand. Comparatively few tacks are put up nowadays in tied up papers. They are put up mostly in little pasteboard boxes. These boxes are packed in larger boxes and in turn in cases for shipment. A common tack package is a case weighing about 100 pounds.

The annual tack product of the country is estimated at about 20,000 tons. If these tacks were all put up in papers of the usual assortments of sizes and weights, the papers would number about 300,000,000, or something more than four papers per capita of the population.
—New York Sun.

How Edison Learned to Tell Stories.

"It seemed like a waste of time," said a gentleman who passed an evening with Mr. Edison, in Norwalk, O., recently, "to hear Mr. Edison rolling off story after story, and demanding of all his acquaintances to tell him more, when we knew how much information we might have received from him. I finally asked him how he got to be such a story teller. 'Well,' he replied, 'when I was quite a young man I was a telegraph operator during the war. I was stationed at St. Louis, which was a sort of distributing point for a large district, and when we would get our batch of stuff off and we still had several hours to put in, I used to get pretty tired. Then we would begin to call up the operator at the other end of the line and gossip with him. I always liked stories, and if Chicago had a good one, he would wire it to me. Then I would send that off to Louisville and New York and Cincinnati, and hear them laugh over it by wiring back, "Ha, ha," over the wire. In this way we would get all the best stories there were going, and we would always write them out for the day men. It got to be a sort of passion after awhile, and has stuck to me ever since.'"
—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Japanese Explorers.

Japan, too, has keen explorers. The professor of astronomy in the university of Tokyo, Mr. Nomaka, accompanied by his wife, last October ascended Mount Fujiyama, 13,000 feet high, to make meteorological observations in the course of the winter. A short time ago word was received that the professor was dying, and a relief expedition was fitted out. With great difficulty the members of the expedition reached the snow covered hut. Professor Nomaka was found to be exceedingly weak and unable to move, but his wife had suffered no evil results from the exposure. Nomaka was taken back to Tokyo, but he declares he will return next winter, and his wife says she will accompany him again.

Solid Cookery.

"I made these biscuits myself, Billiger," said Mrs. McSwat, with honest pride.

"They look very nice, Lobelia," replied Mr. McSwat, picking one of them up and making an effort to split it. "And they are still hot. How long ago did you—ah—cast them?"—Chicago Tribune.

DISHONORED DRAFTS.

When the stomach dishonors the drafts made upon it by the rest of the system, it is necessarily because its fund of strength is very low. Toned with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, it soon begins to pay out vigor in the shape of pure, rich blood, containing the elements of muscle, bone and brain. As a sequence of the new vigor afforded the stomach, the bowels perform their functions regularly, and the liver works like clock work. Malaria has no effect upon a system thus reinforced.

ON THE STAGE.

In the rosy light of my day's fair morning,
Ere ever a storm-cloud darkened the west,
Ere ever a shadow of night gave warning,
When life seemed only a pleasure guest,
Why, then, all humor and comedy scorning,
I liked high tragedy best.

I liked the challenge, the fierce-fought duel,
With a death or a parting in every act,
I liked the villain to be more cruel
Than the basest villain could be, in fact,
For it fed the fires in my mind with fuel
Of the things that my life lacked.

But as time passed on and I met real sorrow,
And she played at night on the stage of my heart,
I found that I could not forget on the morrow
The pain I had felt in her tragic part;
And, alas! no longer I needed to borrow
My grief from the actor's art.

And as life grows older, and, therefore, sadder
(Yet sweeter, may be, in its autumn haze),
I find more pleasure in watching the gladder
And lighter order of humorous plays,
Where mirth is as mad, or may be madder
Than the mirth of my lost days.

I like to be forced to laugh and be merry,
Tho' the earth with sorrow is ripe and rife;
I like for an evening at least to bury
All thought of trouble, or pain, or strife.
In sooth, I like to be moved to the very Emotions I miss in life.

-Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

HERO OF THE HALL BEDROOM.

When I told my wife about it she exclaimed: "How utterly absurd! Why, I think you should have understood him all along."

"Mrs. Dockboy," said I, severely, "how was I to believe all his stories—his tales of prowess in matters of love, in feats of strength? Perhaps he did knock out O'Sullivan, the champion middleweight; perhaps he was the greatest halfback that ever played on the Cad university eleven; perhaps he did leave the West on account of the importunities of three beautiful millionairesses; but even Lieutenant Swash doubted the story of his capture by Apaches and his subsequent release by the chief's daughter."

"Swash!" retorted my wife. "Why do you always quote that horrid old thing? I think that he is himself inclined to exaggeration at times, whether unconsciously or otherwise, I cannot judge."

I do not take my wife's view of the matter at all, and I cannot see why the lieutenant and myself should have acted otherwise than we did.

We were talking of Filkins—Filkins, who occupied the fourth floor rear hall bedroom in my old boarding house. In locating the man I have described him, for that particular room in every boarding house is inhabited, experience has taught me, by a peculiar genius—men of culture, but on their uppers, men whose long lines of distinguished ancestors have bequeathed to them some quarts of blue blood, but nothing with which to keep it in circulation, and an inherent idea that it ought to keep moving itself, without their descending to plebeian labor to supply the motive power. Just such a person was Filkins. His clean-cut features, his easy manners, his polite bearing, supported by his pretension to family. When preparatory to going out after dinner he donned the evening clothes of the medical student who occupied the second floor front, and you saw him, not a hair of his head or mustache out of place, not a wrinkle or a speck anywhere, you instinctively felt that he was a gentleman born.

And if, perchance, he was off to "that swell little affair at Mrs. Van Foam's that the papers have been talking so much of," and needed a quarter for car fare, his father having forgotten to send him his check for the month, it was willingly given, for he was a capital fellow. He drew on us occasionally, but we regarded that as only a slight compensation for his company.

Lieutenant Swash came into my room early one evening as Filkins and I were discussing things in general over our pipes, and announced that he had three tickets for a series of boxing bouts at the Olympic Athletic Club.

"There will be some bruising," he cried, enthusiastically, "and it will be worth seeing."

"Awfully sorry, old man, but I can't go," replied Filkins. "There is a certain man in New York who has been searching high and low for me for three weeks. He'll be there, I know, for he has been going to the bowwows and spends all his time about such places. I'm not afraid of him, but I deem it more discreet for a while to avoid him."

"Your tailor?" ventured the lieutenant.

"Dear me, no," replied Filkins, with great good humor. He seemed to enjoy the joke. "Would that he was and I was wearing a respectable-looking cause for him to pursue me, but I am not so lucky."

"Now, see here, Filkins, you've got to come," I said.

"To tell the truth, it would be awfully embarrassing for me to meet that fellow," he replied. "You'd be surprised if I'd tell you who he is. Everyone has heard of him—rich, great swell."

Swash looked at me and winked one of his knowing winks. Then, turning to Filkins, he asked:

"Well, what does he want with you?"

"A woman at the bottom of the whole thing," replied our companion, unruffled. "You'd be surprised if you knew who she was—great belle—piles of money in her own name. I met her at a dance. Three weeks ago she broke off the engagement, and since then he has been going to the bowwows—a perfect madman, the fellers say, and he has sworn to break my head on sight."

"And why should he bother about you?" sneered Swash, sitting down on the edge of the bed, a most contemptuous look on his face.

Filkins smiled and softly puffed up his pipe.

"Why should he bother about you?" repeated the lieutenant, more emphatically.

"Indeed, I don't know," was the quiet reply. "I never spoke to her more than three times." He was silent for a moment. Then he laughed: "And, by Jove! do you know, she sent me a note the other day that cost me a quarter—forgot to pay the messenger."

"Never mind your certain man. Come on!" cried the lieutenant, rising, buttoning his coat and drawing on his gloves.

Filkins sighed, knocked the ashes out of his pipe and arose.

"Very well, if you insist," he said. "But I know there will be trouble, and I am very rusty with my fists. Now, I would not care if I was like what I was when——"

"Hurry! We're late!" interrupted Swash. And as we were filing down the stairs he whispered:

"A million to one we don't see the certain man."

"I would be a fool to take you up," I replied, softly.

When we reached the gymnasium of the Olympic Club the first bout was over. Several hundred men, generally in their shirt sleeves, were seated on low benches about the ring, all smoking so vigorously that a thick haze filled the room, and from where we stood we could hardly distinguish the faces of the two muscular fellows who were seated in their respective corners.

"There are three seats up front. Let's get there," said the lieutenant, indicating the place with his cane.

Filkins hung back.

"I'd rather not," he said, "I'll not be noticed here."

"Rot!" exclaimed the other, seizing his arm and literally dragging him through the crowd, until at length we were comfortably fixed in the front row. I could see everything then, and even heard the low tones of the referee as he arose and announced: "Six rounds between Harry Donohue of Boston and Kid Williams of New York. Then, with a nonchalant wave of the hand toward the right-hand corner, "Donahue;" toward the left, "Williams."

Donahue and Williams were two very respectable looking young men, with clear, pink faces, and splendid chests and muscles. Swash said that the latter was a middle weight and fought too low, but of that I knew nothing. In fact, I thought it was rather tame. My idea of prize fights had been drawn from comic and religious papers, but in these two active, athletic young men, who shook hands and then began to jump lithely about the ring, beating the air and at times striking each other with their gloved hands, I did not see a realization of my sanguine imaginings. To be sure, in the second round Williams landed villainously on Donohue's nose, causing it to bleed profusely, and received in turn an upper cut on the chin which brought from the crowd about us cries of "Good un!" "Now, another!" "Yer got 'im skeert." "Ah, pshaw! the Kid's too slow; jest see the chances he missed!" "He's fighting too low."

The affair was getting more interesting. Williams gave his opponent a body blow that sent him reeling against the ropes at one side, but the Boston lad regained himself in an instant and dealt the New-Yorker such a violent one on the cheek that the young man began to stagger stupidly about, holding his hands out to protect his face. Involuntarily I half rose and cried, "A good un!"

A sudden pull at my coat brought me back to my seat and Filkins whispered in my ear:

"There he is! What did I tell you?"

"Who?" said I, ruffled at the interruption.

"The man that I spoke of. Come, let us get out. He is moving this way."

Swash heard him, and, seizing him, he pulled him back into his seat, for he had made a motion to go.

"Leave at this point?" he cried. "Filkins, you're a fool."

I looked toward the person whom Filkins had pointed out, and although I had never before seen him, from a series of pictures of noted society men which a certain paper had published I knew him to be Archibald Van Peyster.

"Yes, Filkins," I said, "you're a fool."

"Call me what you choose," he retorted, "but mark my words, there will be trouble if we stay. Time has been called and I, at least, had better go."

"Nonsense!" laughed Swash. "We'll stand by you, old man, for I propose to see this thing out. It'll be hot the next round."

"Indeed, it will," said Filkins, grimly.

"Well, here comes the certain well-known man," I chuckled, for Van Peyster was moving around our way, and since Filkins had so boldly declared himself I determined to give him a few gentle thrusts. The opportunity was so good.

"I see him," he replied, quietly.

Swash began to laugh and used a rather strong expression, but hardly was it out of his mouth when I heard a stronger one, and looking up saw Archibald Van Peyster right in front of us, glaring down at our companion. There was a pause. Then he deliberately raised his cane and brought it down toward Filkins' head. I sprang from my place and put out my arm to arrest the blow, but Filkins was too quick for me. He caught it on his left wrist, and shot out his clenched right hand, landing neatly on his assailant's chin with such force as to send him groping against the ring platform.

In an instant the place was in an uproar; a dozen men sprang between the two new combatants; a hundred others gathered around us, filling the air with their excited cries and inquiries as to what had happened.

Van Peyster's execrations were something terrible. Inflamed with drink, maddened with jealousy and thirsting for revenge for the punishment he had received, he struggled to free himself from the grasp of those who held him. Filkins on the other hand coolly explained:

"The man is drunk, gentlemen. Some one had better find his name and address and send him home." Then in a lower tone he whispered to me: "Don't you think we had better go now?"

"I think we had," I said, and without another word Swash and I followed him out of the place and home to the boarding house, where he bid us good-night and retired to his fourth floor rear hall bedroom.

I saw Filkins the other day. He was driving toward the park in a handsome victoria, two neatly liveried men on the box. At his side sat a pretty girl whom I had never before seen, but knew from the pictures to have been the great belle, Miss Emily Carusher. And when I told my wife about it she said that I ought to have known it all along.

"But I judged him from his other stories," I expostulated.

"Perhaps they were true, too," said she.—New York Sun.

TREATMENT OF COLDS.

How They May Be Cured and Their After Consequences Averted.

Colds are probably the most common ailment in the world. They are always disagreeable and oftentimes dangerous. A person in good health, with fair play, easily resists cold, but when the health flags a little and liberties are taken with the stomach or with the nervous system a chill is easily taken, and, according to the weak spot of the individual, assumes the form of a cold or pneumonia, or it may be jaundice. Of all causes of "cold," probably fatigue is one of the most efficient. A jaded man, coming home at night from a long day's work, a growing youth losing two hours' sleep over evening parties two or three times a week, or a young lady heavily "doing the season," young children overfed and with short allowance of sleep, are common instances of the victims of "cold." Luxury is favorable to chill-taking; very hot rooms, feather beds, soft chairs, create a sensitiveness that leads to catarrhs. It is not, after all, the "cold" that is so much to be feared as the antecedent conditions that give the attack a chance of doing harm. Some of the worst "colds" happen to those who do not leave the house or even their beds, and those who are most invulnerable are often those who are most exposed to changes of temperature, and who by good sleep, cold bathing and regular habits preserve the tone of their nervous system and circulation. Probably many chills are contracted at night or at the fag end of the day, when tired people get the equilibrium of their circulation disturbed by either overheated sitting or underheated bed rooms and beds. This is specially the case with elderly people. In such cases the mischief is not always done instantaneously or in a single night. It often takes place insidiously, extending over days or even weeks.—London Lancet.

By Any Other Name.

Oberlin, the French philanthropist, was once traveling in the depth of winter amongst the mountains of Alsace. The cold was intense, the snow lay thickly upon the ground, and ere the half of his journey was over he felt himself yielding to fatigue and sleep. He knew if he gave way to sleep he would wake no more; but in spite of this knowledge, desire for sleep overcame him and he lost consciousness. When he came to again, a wagoner in a blue blouse was standing over him, urging him to take wine and food. By and by his strength revived, he was able to walk to the wagon, and was soon driven to the nearest village. His rescuer refused money, saying it was his duty to assist one in distress. Oberlin begged to know his name, that he might remember him in his prayers. "I see," replied the wagoner; "you are a preacher. Tell me the name of the Good Samaritan." "I cannot," answered Oberlin, "for it is not recorded." "Ah, well," said the wagoner, "when you can tell me his name, I will then tell you mine." And so he went away.

Military Pride.

Looked at from a soldierly point of view, the following little anecdote of the battle of Alma is worth quoting from Sir John Adye's "Recollections of a Military Life." "The battle ended about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the headquarters camp being pitched near the river; and Lord Raglan then went in search of his orderly officer, Lieut. Tom Leslie, and, with the help of some Guardsmen, with a stretcher, brought him to his tent. Lord Raglan asked me," writes Sir John, "if I knew Tom's mother; and on my replying in the negative, he said, 'A charming woman. I must write to her. How proud she will be to hear that he has a bullet in his shoulder!'"

Mosaics.

Mosaic floors, laid with small pieces of different colored stones set in regular patterns, were known to the Egyptians 2300 B. C. In Babylon floors of this kind dated from 1100 B. C.

To Freshen Boiled Water.

Cold boiled water tastes flat because it has been deprived of air. To restore air pour water quickly from one jug to another.

PERSONAL TIDBITS

Ouida never shakes hands. She declares it to be the most vulgar form of salutation.

Queen Victoria, it is said, has taken quite a fancy to the young Duchess of Marlborough.

The commander-in-chief of the Sultan of Morocco's army is a Scotsman, McLean by name.

The last words of Sir Augustus Harris were: "Do not let anyone disturb me. I want a long, long rest."

Sir Edward Clarke's retainer on receiving the Jameson brief was 500 guineas, while every day he had a "refresher" of 100 guineas.

William T. Richardson, of Cambridge, Mass., left an estate of $100,000 and his old wearing apparel to "some poor worthy Baptist minister."

Charles Dickens, the son of the novelist, who died a few weeks ago, was named Charles "Boz" by his father, but when he grew to man's estate he dropped his middle name.

Among young society women who are thoroughly accomplished musicians are Miss Villard, Miss Rockefeller and the Misses Hewitt. Each plays the violin, violoncello, harp and piano.

Among the Sultan of Turkey's plate there are dishes of solid gold large enough for a baby's bath, and there are plates, cups and saucers, tureens and pitchers, massive and heavy, made of this same precious metal.

M. Waddington's great collection of coins has been sold by his family to the French Government for $100,000. He had intended to bequeath it to the State, but was prevented from doing so by heavy pecuniary losses.

Miss Virginia Fair has forsaken her bicycle and is learning to ride horseback, and inasmuch as this young woman is an acknowledged leader there is a probability of other Newport young girls forsaking the wheel and taking to the horse.

The will of T. S. Woodward, of San Jose, Cal., leaves $2,041,000 to his nephew, William F. Woodward, of Boston, aged 24. He was in delicate health, out of work, without money and in debt for board and lodging when the good news reached him.

Mrs. E. L. Loring, of Washington, goes in swimming every day in the bathing pond at Appledore, and regularly swims four times around the pond. As she is 85 years old, the islanders declare that the smartest old lady on the coast is a guest there.

The jewel casket of the dowager empress of Russia is the most fashionable in the world, from a gem point of view. Hardly second to it is that of the empress of Austria, whose black pearls are noted throughout Europe for their extreme beauty and rarity.

Col. North's fine house at Eltham, which cost $1,500,000 to build, was recently put up at auction, but as the highest bid was only $250,000, it was withdrawn from sale. The auctioneer described it, and very properly, as "one of the most princely homes in the kingdom."

The Princess of Wales, who was brought up in the most democratic fashion by the sensible Danish king, has found that actually milking cows at Sandringham and superintending the dairy gave her better health than all the medicine of the court physician.

WAS NOT A SUCCESS.

An Idea in Rapid Transit that Once Made a Hit.

Several years ago a stranger with ideas worthy of Colonel Sellers located at Mount Holly, N. J. He talked of many inventions which he had under way, but the greatest was the bicycle railway. The rails could be laid on brackets extending over the street, on awning posts and from telegraph poles and trees in the country, and, having nothing in its way, great speed could be made over it for long distances. The machines were very much like an ordinary bicycle turned "upside down," split up the middle and placed upon the track like clothespins. In front and back of the rider were grooved wheels about nine inches in diameter, both resting upon a steel rail, wedge shaped like a knife blade, and almost as sharp. This was fastened to a 3x3 inch plank, securely fastened to posts at frequent intervals. There being but little friction or weight, propulsion was easy, requiring but slight expenditure of energy, and this latter and very important element was generated from a ratchet gear and clutch levers instead of pedals.

THE FUNNIEST BICYCLE OF ALL.

The scheme made a hit. A company was formed and the road put in operation. It passes over wood and farm land. The scenery is exquisite. For a quarter of a mile from Mount Holly the road is double-track. During the remainder of the distance the Rancocas creek gets in the way eleven times and is crossed on pilings driven "single file." But when the farmers want to get into their fields and let down a strip of fence, the next luckless rider that comes along is dumped. There has been endless wrangling over right of way. The employes of the big machine shops at Smithville go on the "bike" railroad to and from their homes in Mount Holly. But the scheme has never paid even the cost of operation. The track is getting rickety and sadly out of plumb. The inventor, disgusted, has sold out his interest and gone to Florida.

CUP WHICH COST MANY LIVES.

Facsimile of the Czar's Souvenir Which Caused a Tragedy.

A Chicago dry-goods firm has on exhibition some of the drinking cups which were given away as souvenirs of the coronation of the Russian Czar. The dreadful calamity on the Khodinskoe plain, marring the magnificent pageants arranged upon the occasion of the crowning and costing upward of 6,000 lives in the short space of a few hours is still fresh in the memory of everyone.

The origin of this appalling disaster is to be traced to an ancient Russian custom. Among other curious usages it has been usual to distribute among the many thousands congregating from all parts of the great empire to witness the imposing ceremonies of the coronation a present to be kept as a remembrance of the great evet.

At the last coronation a drinking cup had been selected for this purpose, which was to be given away with a parcel of eatables, cakes and sweets, to every comer. Of course everybody was anxious to bring home one of these mementos, but nobody thought that so tragic a memory would be added to the general interest of this little piece of metal.

The cut is an exact illustration of the memorable cup. It is made of white enameled metal, covered with curious Russian ornamentation. A broad line of gold runs around the top and bottom. The narrow dark lines of the illustration are brick red, while the broader lines are of a pale blue and yellow. The shield on one side bears the Russian coat of arms, while the other shows the initials of the Czar and Czarina in Russian characters and the imperial crown with the date 1896 below. The effect of the whole is very curious.

These cups were furnished by one of the largest establishments in Austria. This firm laid down 600,000 pieces in eight weeks. The fact will be of interest that twenty-six railway cars were necessary to transport these 600,000 cups.

An Ant's Dwelling.

One of the strangest members of the vegetable kingdom and one which of late years has become quite common as a greenhouse plant is the myrmecodia tuberosa. The plant was first sent to Europe in 1811 by Dr. Collingwood from Malacca. Its stem is tuberous and everywhere covered with thorns. In its native country every plant is constantly inhabited by thousands of ants of the great family of myrmica, and it is on that account that the plant was given its scientific name of myrmecodia. The ants pierce the tuberous stems in all directions and coat the galleries thus formed with an insect cement that is of surprising durability. In fact, it is so strong that when a branch or plant dies it will rot away, leaving the cement galleries intact, the whole then having the appearance of a beautifully ramified specimen of seaweed.

Our Turn Next.

The Chinese Government has aroused itself after centuries of slovenly housekeeping. It proposes to refurnish and redecorate. It has sent out its wily old major-domo, Li Hung Chang, to study styles and hunt bargains. The Germans and then the French flattered and cajoled him and showed him their wares. They urged him to decide at once. "Now is the time to buy," said Germans and French. But Li is too good a shopper for that. "These are fine goods," said he, "and I shall probably take them. But I must look at all before I decide." And now England is taking down her goods, trying on her best gowns and bonnets, and parading all before him. And soon it will be America's turn. Li has some big orders to place. We shall do well to show him everything and give him a good time.—New York World.

Effect of High Altitudes.

Some German savants have shown recently that there is a notable increase in the proportion of the number of corpuscles in the blood in persons who go from a low to a high altitude. This increase takes place in from twenty-four to thirty-six hours. It is possible that this fact may be one of the reasons for the benecial effects of high altitude in cases of pulmonary tuberculosis.

Lunatic's Square Meal.

An escaped lunatic captured at Lewiston on Tuesday after a two-day fast ate four platefuls of green pears before the policeman who stood watching him decided that his limit had been reached. Then the peace guardian gave him a cup of hot ginger tea to top off with.

The fruit season for Georgia growers has been one of the most successful ever known.

In Russia the principals in a duel partake of breakfast together before going out to fight.

Sixteen out of the eighteen assembly districts of San Francisco have woman suffrage clubs.

It is proposed to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of Natal by an expedition next year.

A 44-year-old chancery case has just been decided in England, and there was a little money left for the contestants.

A New Orleans man who rides home on a street car is met every evening by a pet cat, which waits for him at his usual place of alighting.

In Albania the men wear petticoats and the women trousers. The women do all the work and the husbands attend to nothing in particular.

A couple in New York who have lived happily together for thirty-five years refuse, although starving, to go to the poorhouse, because they would be separated.

From the Prince of Wales down to the postman nearly every man in London has adopted the straw hat; only the policeman yet remains the victim of a hot helmet.

The first woman drummer to visit Lewiston, Me., aroused a good deal of interest among the merchants last week as she went about selling gloves in the men's furnishing stores.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has been notified by the city of Newport, Ky., that it must secure a franchise or remove the electric clocks it has placed in the city.

An electric road will be built by San Francisco men from that city to San Jose, so as to take in towns not on the railroad. Stanford University will be in the center of the line.

Parisian lovers of horse flesh devoured more than 30,000 horses last year. In 1894 the number was 21,227, in 1878 it was 10,000, and in 1872 5,034. There are 200 hippophageous butchers' shops in Paris.

The Government of Hawaii is in the market in southern California for 10,000 horned toads, by means of which it is hoped to abate the plague of bugs, which are working destruction on the islands.

Five golden weddings were celebrated on the same Sunday recently at the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul in the town of Wazemmes, Belgium. The combined ages of the brides and grooms made 800 years.

M. Waddington's great collection of coins has been sold by his family to the French Government for $100,000. He had intended to bequeath it to the State, but was prevented from doing so by heavy pecuniary losses.

A Virginia farmer asserts that if one-half of the fruit of a heavily laden tree is removed by picking, the remainder will be of better quality. The product will also be as many bushels as though all of the fruit had remained on the tree.

Antioch in the beginning of the fourth century discovered the importance, as a matter of safety, of lighting the streets, but the discovery lapsed. In the middle of the sixteenth century Paris lighted up her streets with fires, made of pitch and rosin.

Large numbers of prospectors are out on the Mojave and Colorado deserts, and the great heat—the temperature has ranged as high as 128 degrees—has dried up many of the springs upon which they had depended. Some anxiety is therefore felt upon their behalf.

In New South Wales the annual death rate is less than one-half that in Spain, Austria and Hungary, and far below that in the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. The average of all these countries is 23.15 per 1,000. In New South Wales it is 14.66.

The very peculiar theory has of late been propounded that all women who partake to any extent of malt drinks have large feet. The women of Holland, Germany and even England are quoted as examples, while the women of the wine countries—France, Spain and Italy—are, on the other hand, famed for their small and shapely feet.

Mr. Power, the complaining witness in a burglary case in the New York court of sessions, was called to the stand. He looked blankly at the district attorney, but never moved. Twice again he was loudly called, but made no response. He was about to be committed for contempt when he exhibited his tablets, on which he had written, "I am deaf and dumb."

Foreign medical students in France have had their position defined by the minister of public instruction. They are divided into two classes; those wishing to practice in France must produce a French diploma of bachelor of arts or some equivalent diploma; others will be allowed to complete their studies, but their diplomas will not give them the right to practice in France.

For a long time Parisians have been spared the spectacle of persons throwing themselves from the tops of the high monuments, such as the Vendome and Bastile columns. Now this craze of suicides has started afresh. Some days ago a young woman mounted to the platform between the towers of Notre Dame, deliberately climbed the parapet and threw herself over. Death was instantaneous.

A Solomon has risen in judgment in Germany who declares that hotel proprietors are responsible for valuables stolen from their lodgers' rooms, in spite of the placards posted in the rooms disowning irresponsibility. Especially in the case of foreigners who cannot read German, the proprietor must take pains to specially inform them that he limits his liability. The decision was given in a Berlin court.

St. Petersburg had 1,135 arrests for drunkenness in one week recently and 1,000 arrests the week before. The persons arrested are locked up until they are sober again and are then sent home without further punishment unless they have disturbed the peace. Drunkenness is rapidly increasing, and the Government thinks of trying the system of fines and short imprisonments that has proved no deterrent of drink in other countries.

Policemen in Paris now carry clubs, beautifully decorated. They are pure white, with yellow handles. Around the middle is painted a double blue ribbon, with the city arms at the point where the ends of the ribbon cross. The white color will be more easily noticed than any other by coachmen, the sticks being held like conductors' batons by the policemen in the middle of the street to direct travel to the right or left, or to stop it when needful.

Dave Potter, a Carson, Nev., veteran, committed suicide recently. He sat down, leaned up against a shed, laid his hat on one side, took off his boots, attached a string to a trigger of the musket and to one of his toes, placed the musket to his left breast, and by means of the string fired the fatal shot. When he took the musket it was loaded only with powder, and he had found a bit of brass, somewhat similar to a bicycle valve, weighing, perhaps, three-fourths of an ounce, and this he used in lieu of a bullet. This queer missile passed through his right lung, and coming out of his back, passed through the wall behind him and was found imbedded in the opposite wall.

Dr. P. Penta, an Italian criminologist, has discovered a new feature of criminal anthropology, which goes to confirm still farther the views of Prof. Lombrosso. Dr. Penta has studied the fingers and toes of 4,500 criminals, and finds a deficiency in the number as well as prehensile toes marked by a wide space between the great toe and the second toe; also a webbed condition of the toes, an approximation to the toeless feet of some savages. He found the little toe rudimentary in many cases, showing a tendency toward the four-toed animal foot. The most common of all the abnormalities was the webbed condition of the toes. The criminal is truly a degenerate type.

New to the Country.

I had overtaken an old farmer in the road, and as we jogged along together we turned a bend and came upon eight or ten men, who had a prisoner in their midst, and were making preparations to hang him to the limb of a tree.

"Here—what's all this?" asked the old man, as we came to a halt.

"Goin' to hang the kuss!" was the brief reply.

"What fur?"

"Stealin' that hoss over thar'."

The "hoss over thar'" was tied to a tree, and the farmer took a good look at him, and then at the prisoner, and asked of the latter:

"Say, didn't you come along to my place this mornin'?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"And didn't I sell you that hoss fur thirty dollars?"

"Yes."

"I am sure I did. How does it come about, then, that they ar' goin' to hang you fur hoss stealin'?"

"I dunno."

"He bought that hoss of you, did he?" asked the leader of the band, who was arranging the noose.

"He surely did, and no doubt he's got my bill of sale in his pocket. Yes; I sold him that critter at 8 o'clock this mornin'. My name's Thompson, and I guess some of you know me."

"Look a-here!" exclaimed the leader, as he turned on the prisoner, "did you buy that hoss?"

"Yes."

"And you've got the bill of sale?"

"Yes."

"Then why in blazes didn't you say so when we run you down fur a horse thief?"

"Wall," replied the man, as he looked around and yawned, as if bored with the proceedings, "I hain't bin in this kentry but three or four days, and I didn't know what the custom was!"

They hauled him off his feet twice, just to make him acquainted with the ways of the country, and then rode off in search of new game.

When Napoleon Learned Humanity.

Bonaparte had ruled men's hearts by his use of a cause, securing devotion by rude bonhomie, by success and by sufficient rewards; Napoleon quenched devotion by a lavishness which sated the greediest, losing the affections of his associates by the demands of his gigantic plans. As he felt the foundations of his greatness shivering, he became more and more humane. Early in 1813 he said: "I have a sympathetic heart, like another, but since earliest childhood I have accustomed myself to keep that string silent, and now it is altogether dumb." He was mistaken; throughout that season he was profoundly moved by the horrors of war; his purse was ever open for the suffering; the King of Saxony was released from his entangling engagements; in spite of his hard-set expression, on the retreat from Leipsic he forbade his men to fire the suburbs of the city in order to retard the pursuit of their foes, and before he left Mainz for St. Cloud he showed the deepest concern, and put forth the strongest effort, in behalf of the dying soldiery.—Century.

Also, three Judges of the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento.

Also, two Judges of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alameda, Humboldt, San Diego, San Joaquin, Santa Clara and Sonoma.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Contra Costa, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Inyo, Kern, Lake, Lassen, Mariposa, Marin, Merced, Mendocino, Monterey, Modoc, Mono, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Placer, Plumas, San Bernardino, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Stanislaus, Yuba and Sutter, Tehama, Trinity, Tuolumne, Ventura, and Yolo.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Fresno, for the unexpired term of S. A. Holmes, deceased, ending January, 1897; vice Stanton L. Carter appointed.

Also, at said election, Amendments to the Constitution of the State, submitted by the Legislature at its last regular session, numbered and designated as hereinafter specified, will be voted upon by the electors of said state, namely,

Amendment Number One.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 33.)

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 1. All property in the State not exempt under the laws of the United States, or this Constitution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property" as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, gues, franchises, and all other matter and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership; provided, that property used for free public libraries and free public museums, growing crops, mortgages, trust deeds, property used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation. The Legislature may provide for a reduction from credits of debts due bona fide residents of this State.

SEC. 2. Section four of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. Section five of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Amendment Number Two.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 8.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot or by such other method as may be prescribed by law; provided that secrecy in voting be preserved.

Amendment Number Three.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 19.)

ARTICLE XII.

Section 3. The liability of stockholders of corporations or joint stock associations shall be limited by the face value of the shares of the subscribed capital stock or shares of such corporation or association; and whenever any shares have been fully paid-up, the holder of such shares shall not be further liable to such corporation or association, or the creditors thereof, on that account. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association, whose capital stock is not fully paid up, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder or shareholder, as the amount unpaid upon the stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole amount unpaid upon the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association. The Directors or Trustees of corporations and joint stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association, during the term of office of such Director or Trustee.

Amendment Number Four.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 25.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.

Amendment Number Five.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 13.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of article eleven of this Constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution and by the laws of this State, as follows:

1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of Police Courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the Judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of said Judges and of their clerks and attaches.

2. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Education shall be elected or appointed, and the number which shall constitute any one of such Boards.

3. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Police Commissioners shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards and of the municipal police force.

4. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which she members of all Boards of Election shall be elected or appointed, and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards, and of their clerks and attaches, and for all expenses incident to the holding of any election.

Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section eight of said article eleven, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies.

Amendment Number Six.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No 11.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 1. Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under and by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims to vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, no native of China, no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, and no person heretofore convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, and no person who shall not be able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his or her name, shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector in this state; provided that the provisions of this amendment relative to an educational qualification shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be sixty years of age and upward at the time this amendment shall take effect.

Each amendment shall be voted upon separately from the others, by ballot, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the third day of November, 1896.

The said amendments are respectively designated:

Amendment Number One,
Amendment Number Two,
Amendment Number Three,
Amendment Number Four,
Amendment Number Five,

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, there has been presented to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, petitions signed by legal voters of the said County of Inyo, equal in number to fifty per cent of the votes cast at the last preceding election asking that an ordinance set forth in each of said petitions, be submitted to a vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, which said proposed ordinance is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

ORDINANCE NO. —

An Ordinance for the purpose of police regulation, by prohibiting the maintenance of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the County of Inyo, State of California.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo do ordain as follows:

SECTION 1.—It shall be, and is hereby made, unlawful for any person or persons, either as owners, principals, agents, servants, or employees, to establish, open, keep, maintain, carry on, or assist in carrying on, within the corporate limits of the County of Inyo, State of California, any tippling house, dramshop, cellar, saloon, bar, bar-room, sample room, or other place where spirituous, vinous, malt, mixed, or intoxicating liquors are sold or given away; provided that the provisions of this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of liquors for medicinal or chemical purposes by regularly licensed druggists upon the prescription of a physician entitled to practice medicine under the laws of the State of California.

SECTION 2.—Any act in violation of this ordinance shall be construed a separate offense for each day of its continuance.

SECTION 3.—Every person who violates any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any Court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding three hundred and sixty dollars, or by imprisonment in the County Jail of the County of Inyo not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SECTION 4.—All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this Ordinance are hereby repealed.

SECTION 5.—This Ordinance shall take effect on the first day of January, 1897.

SECTION 6.—This Ordinance shall be published for two successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in said Inyo County.

Now, therefore, by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, and the authority in the said Board of Supervisors vested, the said Board of Supervisors do hereby, by due proclamation, submit the said Ordinance to the vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, State of California, on Tuesday, the third day of November, A. GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

I. H. Mulholland and wife left for Los Angeles last Monday.

A. W. Eibeshutz returned from San Francisco on last Monday evening.

Mr. Howe and sister of Bishop were visitors here during the week.

Johnny Meroney of Bishop was in town a couple of days during the week.

L. Wood is having a handsome addition added to the residence portion of his building.

Only eleven days more and the struggle will be over. Then we will be able to tell you how it happened.

Henry Levy will leave immediately after election for Randsburg, where he contemplates embarking in business.

Mr. Moulton, the popular shoe drummer for Williams, Marvin & Co., of San Francisco, was interviewing our merchants during the week.

E. L. Reese, of Bodie, Republican nominee for the Assembly for this District, arrived in town yesterday and is around interviewing the voters.

C. Fuller and Henry Malone, who have been prospecting in Kern county for the past two months, returned to their home at Fish Springs during the week.

There is no particular argument in a bet and when a bet is placed through a brokerage firm, as election bets are now being placed in New York City, there is no religion, sentiment or politics in it. But the broker in advising his customers calculates the chances as cooly as a sea captain surveys his chart in order to get his location on the sea. The manner in which bets on the approaching election are being placed through a New York betting broker is therefore of peculiar interest at the present time

Randsburg, the Desert Bonanza.

A correspondent of the Los Angeles Times writes thus regarding the new mining region.

The mining camp and future city of Randsburg is to be reached by stage-coach every day from Mojave, and every night on the streets you hear newsboys crying out the San Francisco and Los Angeles papers. This place seems to be another Cripple Creek. It is no wild boom at all, for the facts speak for it. The gold is everywhere. All you have to do is to stick your shovel down in the sand and wash the sand out. There you have the gold.'

There are men making all the way from $2 50 to $20 a day here, working their own ground. When men hire out they get $3 per diem. Just at the present writing there are about thirty-five producing mines, and in the next six weeks there will be quite as many more, for prospectors are finding new claims every day, and some of these have to be stripped off before the pay drift is reached. Town lots are at a premium, and no lot that is centrally located can be bought for less than $500. Stores, saloons, restaurants and lodging-houses are principally what are being located. The latter will be most needed immediately, as the cold weather is coming on, and people do not like sleeping out of doors as they did last summer.

There is an opening here for a bakery, tailor's shop, shoemaker's shop, harness-maker and second-hand furniture store. Everything now looks to this becoming a first-class point for merchandising.

MINING NOTES.

Developments in the Reward Gold Mine, at Francis, are extremely satisfactory. The new patent whim has been put in place and is doing excellent work. The incline is now down over 115 feet and the ledge has opened up to over 6 feet in width, carrying a large percentage of gold and silver. On the outer and upper croppings Supt. Hoskins has a force at work and is opening up some new and very rich ground. Mr. Hoskins informed your reporter that he intended to put in 10 stamps more after the 1st of December, and expected to put in an electric plant as well for power to run the burleigh drills. The rope tram is doing good work, bringing down sufficient ore in two hours run daily to keep the mill running at its full capacity. A new gold saving device, in the shape of a canvas plant, has been put into operation and it is expected will save $40 per day. The concentrators have been set on new foundations and are now expected to do better work. The last clean up, finished the 15th inst., resulted in turning out bar No. 20, valued at $1100, after only 15 days run besides some $300 in concentrates. Supt. Hoskins expects to be able to operate the 10 additional stamps with only $12 per day additional expense, and is confident that the mine will be on a dividend paying basis when they shall begin operations. There are some 20 men now employed and the outlook that this will be a paying concern is more than favorable.

Los Angeles parties have bonded the Maxim mill and mining properties from Mrs. Rhine. It is expected that active operations will begin on the property in the near future.

Pat Keyes has five men now employed in taking out ore at his mine in the Beveridge District. He has recently struck a large deposit of very rich ore, which promises to rival the output of the Keynot in its palmiest days.

Julius Schoeder will in a few days ship two carloads of valuable ore, which he has lately taken out of his mine on Kearsarge mountain. This will be the first shipment of ore made from this district in the last fifteen years. Years ago some very rich rock was shipped from this district, and made to pay, when the freight charges alone amounted to $140 a ton. It is confidently expected, that after paying all expenses for shipping and working, the two carloads will net Mr. Schroeder $6,000.

The Mazourka canyon placer fields continue to return a handsome profit for the labor expended.

Prospectors are daily passing through and leaving Independence for the rich mining section of south-eastern Inyo.

Cause of High Wheat Prices.

Wheat is worth more in California at present than it has been for years past. Much excitement prevails on the call board of the San Francisco Produce Exchange, and the most extravagant predictions are made by local brokers as to the future in California wheat, and the claim is made that the increased prices will mean millions of dollars to this State. Of the wheat market in Great Britian the European agent of the Agricultural Department writes: Great Britian is the principal outlet of the superfluous wheat of the world, and her markets during the past month have presented a study of peculiar interest and value. It was known at the opening of the month that the Russian and American crops were short. There was practically nothing available from other exporting countries, except a few cargoes of last season's wheat from Argentina, and stocks were lower both in Great Britian and on the Continent. The Russians declined to sell, except at enhanced prices, and their shipments fell far behind the usual average for the time of year. The only source of supply was the United States, and it might naturally have been expected we would reap the benefit of the situation by obtaining enhanced prices. Our financial position appears, however, to have precluded our taking full advantage of the situation, and our new wheat came forward in great quantities. The month ends with an improvement of 6 to 7 cents a bushel, but it is the general opinion of the members of the grain trade in London and Liverpool that the advance might have been doubled and brought about earlier had the United States been in a position to hold back wheat. It is certain that the harvest of the current year will see no surpluses, and it is reasonable to suppose that we shall see no further reduction of wheat areas, such as have been observable in the records of the last few years.

Wind and Sound.

The means by which wind may be measured by its sound is a novelty in modern scientific research to which the attention of the National Academy of Sciences has been drawn by Professor Barus. He asserts that the whistling of the wind as it crosses a wire varies with the velocity, and that this can be computed from the pitch of the note observed in case of a given diameter of wire and for a given air temperature. A special micrometer attachment can be made to convey the sound, isolated from other noises, to the observer at a distance. Thus every gust and variation of the wind can be studied in this way, and an idea of the actual direction of the gust can be had by means of the sounds obtained from three wires placed at right angles to one another.

TOO LATE TO MEND.

There is a point beyond which medication cannot go. Before it is too late to mend, persons of a rheumatic tendency, inherited or acquired, should use that benignant defense against the further progress of the supertenacious malady—rheumatism. The name of this proven rescuer is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, it should also be recollected, cures dyspepsia, liver complaint, fever and ague, debility and nervousness.

$100 REWARD, $100.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treament. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

THE FAMILY STORY

GOING TO THE CIRCUS.

One time Lou and I were hoeing potatoes, when we saw a man in blue uniform coming down the road. Lou was my older brother, and he didn't like to hoe potatoes any better than I did, but he could dissemble better. Twice that hot August morning in 1864 he had left me to tread the wine press alone—I regard that simile as a heap pleasanter than is the fact—while he pretended to fix something on the shady side of the barn. He explained each time when he came back that he much regretted the necessity of leaving this nice, easy work in the potato field for such unpleasant tasks at the barn, and I grew quite sorry for him. I offered to go next time in his place, but he was the most self-abnegating fellow you ever saw, and insisted on this systematic martyrdom.

When the man in the blue uniform came down the road we stopped hoeing long enough to look at him and wonder who he was. We had stopped several times before, but that was not to wonder who the travelers were. We knew who they were. We even knew where they were going. We knew they were neighbors going to the circus at the county seat—the circus that had been advertised with tremendous posters and intemperate print for just four weeks. We knew in a general way people did go to such places, but we thought about it as almost as distant as the battles with which the uniformed man was associated. A circus was not for us. We must hoe potatoes.

The man in blue uniform turned in at our house and sat there in the shade of the locust trees while mother rinsed the milk pails and set them in the sun.

Presently he came out in the field and shook hands with us. We remembered him as a hired man who had formerly worked for us—an excellent fellow, as you shall see. He was something far removed from potato hoeing. He had seen big battles, and we believed we had found his portrait in a colored print of the times, which showed a column of even-stepping heroes rushing to conflict as to a carnival. We were a little embarrassed in his presence, and scarcely asked him about the weapons he wielded and the foemen he had slain. Our library contained some books which treated of conflict in those rarer times when men went single-handed into the ranks of an enemy and swept down swaths of weaklings—those rarer times before a rifle bullet made one man as good as another.

John asked us how the cattle were getting along, and something about the neighborhood gossips, and then marched away very straight, as if he were under the eye of a drillmaster. Another neighbor came along and John signaled him.

"I guess I'll go to the circus, too," he said to us, laughingly, over his shoulder.

Oh! soldiers could do anything. This proved it. Men who could suddenly think of something desirable, something wonderful, and who could instantly decide they wanted it and so have it—those were the favored among men.

As to the circus! Why, I would have given anything—everything, discounted hope and bonded the future for the plain privilege of "going to the show." You cannot know the heart hunger felt for the circus by a country boy in war time. It was an expected, an illimitable, an inexhaustible case of wonders.

John ran to the fence, placed his hands on the top rail and vaulted over, as became a soldier home on furlough, while the people in the wagon—they were dressed in the very flower of gala attire—pushed forward to shake hands with him. Then they called across to us:

"Ain't you going to the circus?" and so went on. Fate was a despot. We did not question the decree, though we could very freely understand the charm that was crouched in that one phrase—"Going to the circus!"

We had hoed out the row when mother called to us, and we went to the house. It was not nearly noon, but there was a luncheon of bread and butter, of milk and of warm currant pie on the little table in the vine-shaded porch. The spread astonished us. Mother was getting at her spinning wheel.

"Do you want to go to the circus?" she asked.

Of course that meant permission. No mother can taunt her child. John had said he would pay for our tickets if she would let us go. He wanted to do that much for the sake of old times, he said. And, dressed in the best those trying war times afforded, we started on foot for the county seat.

My people were church members, and we knew about miracles. But no sun waiting the will of Joshua was ever more miraculous than this instant change in our condition. But an hour ago hoeing potatoes; now going to the circus!

I had never seen a lion nor an elephant nor any of the curious beasts from foreign lands. I knew their presence in the garden of Eden and in the ark. I knew that African travelers had found them. But that was far away. At the end of these little miles, just beyond these business buildings, already in sight, I should find "wild beasts of the field," and should drink my fill of marvels.

The season was right. Harvest was over, corn needed no more plowing. There was a midsummer lull in all activity. Even in a time when few men remained at home, and when women and boys did much of the farm work, there was still time and inclination to visit "the show." The proportion of men in blue uniform was greater than it had ever been. The army pervaded everything. Men home on furlough were guests of honor and were feted royally—they, too, had money and could reciprocate, were that permitted. They were sought continually. And they told when the war would cease.

The circus was there. All lurking fear that at the last something might happen to disappoint me was dispelled when we came to the courthouse square, for there, just beyond the temple of justice, in the vacant lots, was spread the mighty tent. Sure those vacant lots had been doubled in size since last I saw them, for no common space could entertain an establishment so vast as this. Why, there were walls of canvas on the right hand and on the left hand of the mammoth tent, and there were successions of smaller tents that stretched away into bewildering vistas, and before them all everywhere tugged the great advertisements, wonderful in picture, exotic in text. There was a noise, a bustle, a hurry, a nervous tension, unknown in the town. No man had more time than sufficed for the scantiest of greetings, unless accosted by a soldier, in which case he would talk interminably, or a sharper, in which case he would invest disastrously. The only calm, contained men were those law-defiers who looked with such honest faces into the wavering eyes of honest men and beguiled them to their ruin. For there were three-card games and "chuck-a-luck," popular among the soldiers, and wheels of fortune and straight faro. Only the most beggarly pretense of secreting all this crime was made. The "short change" man, who flourished in one place and disappeared to rise in another, was on the ground and was remembered. There were assistant marshals with large stars, and they walked in and out of all tents at will. But they saw nothing less than quarreling men, and roused to activity only to prevent fighting.

Just before noon the parade started. We watched the wonderful aggregation of marvels form into line. To youths bred in an environment where some of the odor of sanctity might reach them it seemed most shocking that so much profanity was needed in assembling a great moral aggregation. Furthermore, there was a quality about that profanity I have never known equaled. It was intense, incisive, terse, emphatic, sulphurous, full of murder and flashing with the lightnings of blasphemy. I have ridden behind "mule whackers" on the plains and have spent vacations where the voice of the first mate of a river packet could assail my ears. But I have found no man whose profanity matched the splendid wickedness of the circus employe in the old days of wagon transportation.

The parade was a thing to marvel at. In the front was a carriage resplendent above above anything in the town and bearing the dusty human who was yet more than mortal, for he owned "the show."

Then came the band in a golden chariot that quite satisfied me. If anything in my reading equaled that I could not recall it. How many there were in the band, what they played, or whether they played well, these things did not impress me. For behind them came the elephant. He walked alone, stately—or sore-footed, and how was I to know? He swung like the rocking of a haystack in a storm and his driver prodded him. Then came the cars. Upon the sides of each were painted such pictures as must have whetted the curiosity of the unlearned. But two were opened. In one was "the massive and blood-sweating behemoth of holy writ"—a hippopotamus! In the other a man sat in safety with unchained lions on his every hand.

What more there was in the parade, how many ladies in remarkable skirts and gentlemen in the armor of knights, how many clowns and how many cages, I do not know. But it was a magificent spectacle. It wound about those streets that had always before been commonplace, and it grew more wonderful as it advanced. I know, for I followed it.

And then it vanished into the spreading walls of the canvas city and was lost. The beauty and the loveliness would have vanished from the earth but for the glare and flare and marvel of that circus day.

John was in the line before the ticket wagon, but his progress was slow for a time, and again he was pulled from his place to give a frantic greeting to someone whose son or brother or father was in the service. That was why soldiers came home on furlough—to tell when the war would end and to talk hopefully to the friends of the boys at the front.

But finally he stood at the wonderful door of the ticket wagon, where money was leaping from the hand of the countryman in exchange for pleasure. Instantly he was away again. The fat, hot man that sold tickets cared nothing for the blue uniform. He saw nothing that interested him beyond the bills laid down. And these he whisked from sight half savagely.

Our tickets were in our hands. We had passed the insolent, broad-jawed fellow at the gangway of ropes, and stood in the most amazing place in the world. To the left were rows of wonderful cages—now opened—and in each was a marvel of animal life. I never had seen them, but somewhat of natural history had been opened to me in books, and I could call them by name.

A man may live a thousand years and win great honors, but he will never feel so keen a joy as thrills in the boy of 10 when he stands in the center of an unexpected circus and menagerie.

I sought the elephant in vain, because my little eyes had not been adjusted to the huge dimensions of the pachyderm. And I was touched by his trunk before I gave him recognition. And in the midst of that wonder, but half filled with the charms of the animal portion, I was dragged away to the smaller etertainment of the ring.

The old circus was near at hand, and a single ring embraced the limit of its possibilities. There was the band above the place of entrance, and on each side of it were the higher-priced seats. Our tickets called for but common sittings and we found place in a coatless, fanning, perspiring, but happy crowd. The men were vociferous, the women broadly smiling. Girls giggled and blushed when the clown tossed kisses at them and their escorts bought what they called refreshments and tried with prodigality to purchase popularity.

There was bareback riding—and, being old, I will say these later days have taught us nothing in that. There was the leaping through "balloons," which seems to have come with the first circus, and a trapeze performance which was doubtless good. There was trick riding and performers on a horizontal bar. And then there was a bout at boxing.

Nothing could have been more timely. No doubt amusement purveyors are the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and even before rural audiences, which they hold in contempt, delight in making applause. Well, this sparring exhibition was no "frost." Very likely that undertone combativeness, which, appealed to by drum and fife, set a nation at war, was just sufficiently assertive to respond to this matching of man against man. For there was nothing of the hippodrome about the affair. The men were fearfully, exhaustively in earnest. But to me, who got even in war time my first sight of human blood drawn in anger, there was something so horrible, so heart-sickening, so impossible, that I appealed with tears to the man at my right to stop them. He was a powerful fellow, but he laughed at me.

The circus was almost over when loud voices to the right announced the beginning of a quarrel. There were at least ten years, beginning in 1861, when circus men counted themselves fortunate if they got out of a town without a battle. They hired canvas men who were as good at fighting as at work. The whole corps of workers was organized and constantly prepared. And the towns in which they showed were sure to have "hard men." Fighting was the order of the day. The circus simply provided the occasion.

Sitting up there in our lofty place, we could hear that premonitory speech in an ominous lull of other sounds, could feel, as sentient humans always do, the gathering of human muscle and the hardening of human hearts. And then we could see a little rush, for the words had ceased, and the fight was on. I don't remember the "Hey, Rube!" exclamation, which later years have told me is the showman's slogan; but I know that a great wave of horror rolled over the hearts of those who did not love a fight, and the soul of slaughter leaped up in those who scented battle afar off, and hastened to join in it.

Who began it, what it was about, how many were hurt, and who finally triumphed are matters of small concern. I have an idea none of the combatants is still living, so it does not matter. But I do know the seats were overturned, law officers were defied, bleeding men surged across the ring chasing other bleeding men before them, and were chased back in turn. And at last it was all over. Someone said the combatants had transferred the field of their activities "up town," and we avoided that quarter on our way home.

There were many neighbors from beyond our farm, but the battle separated us from them, and we walked back to the farm. Just as we came to our meadow gate the first wagon of that show came along, driving already for the next town, thirty miles away. The driver was asleep, his horses taking the way of their own free will. A man ahead on horseback seemed, although half a mile away, to mark out the line of march. The great golden chariot, housed in dull trappings to keep off the dust and the rain and the sun, rolled heavily past, and the gaudy men who rode so proudly by day slept in it miserably by night and blessed their stars they could find the solace of even so meager a repose.—Chicago Chronicle.

Comradeship Among Workers

The Century, in an editorial recognizing "The Workingman's Support of International Arbitration," says:

The demand for arbitration has been made with most emphasis where the workingmen are most thoroughly united for other purposes. In England, where trades unions are at their best, the peace movement among workingmen is strongest; and in our own Eastern States it is very strong. The strength of the demand itself grows in proportion as the contest over wages, for which trades unions are primarily formed, becomes active. There is clearly a connection between these phenomena. This connection it finds in what is described by the words "solidarity of labor"—the creation of comradeship among the workers of all countries. The injury of war to the laboring man, and his recognition of that fact, both come in for consideration.

It Takes Nine Tailors to Make a Man

Curran, the famous orator and wit, never hesitated to sacrifice his friends for the sake of a joke. On one occasion the Merchant Tailors' Guild of Dublin gave a banquet, to which he was invited; in fact, he was the guest of honor. He kept his hosts amused all evening. There were just eighteen of his entertainers, and when Curran took his leave he waited till he reached the door, then with a smile and a bow said: "And now, gentlemen, I have the honor of saying good-night to both of you." He made his escape before the eighteen tailors realized the joke and then it was too late to catch him.

Telephone Wires and Lightning.

Telephone wires seem to have an important influence in preventing lightning from striking, according to the investigations of the German Telegraph Department. Three hundred and forty towns with telephone systems and 560 towns without them were under observation. In the former the lightning struck three times for every hour of storm; in the latter five times. Moreover, the violence of the lightning was much less in the former cases.

Cost of Kansas Grain.

In Kansas thrashing an acre of wheat is estimated to cost $1.18, while the housing after the thrashing is completed, costs 30 cents.

In an argument the average man does not listen to what the other fellow is saying, but spends the time formulating a reply.

Time sets everything finally right, but the trouble is that our time here is so limited.

A Terrible Ride.

From the Evening Times, Buffalo, N. Y.

Along one of the dismal roads in Western New York, a man and wife were driving as rapidly as the darkness and inclement weather would permit.

The rain beat down upon the rubber covering and found its way into every crack and opening.

The occupants of the buggy were Dean Jones and his wife, of Springville, N. Y. Everybody is familiar with the name. He is the well-known starting judge, who has become famous for his impartial and fair treatment of jockeys at the post.

It was about ten years ago when Mr. and Mrs. Jones took that fateful ride that came near costing her her life.

Mrs. Jones' clothes were thoroughly soaked before town was reached. There was no fire in their hotel room and she became chilled to the bone before the little blaze, the attendant started, warmed the atmosphere.

From that time on Mrs. Jones was an ill woman.

Her trouble—well it was about everything with which human flesh can be afflicted. She had a strange, queer feeling in her head, that felt as if several shot were rolling around loose on her brain. Pen cannot describe the torture she suffered. Local doctors told her she had water on the brain.

A Times reporter called upon Mrs. Jones, who said:

"Ever since that terrible wetting I received, up to a year ago, I was an invalid. I had terrible neuralgia pains in the head which often went to my feet and limbs. I was often in such a terrible state that I had to use a crutch to get around or else slide a chair before me to move about the house. I was very ill for five years, in spells, and never expected to get well. It was a blood disease I guess. One of the doctors I consulted said I had clotted blood in my head, and perhaps I did. He could not cure me, neither could several other doctors I tried. I also used many patent medicines, but they did me no good.

"My complexion was a perfect white, and my ears were so transparent you could look through them. My blood was turning to water.

"Look at me now, do I look sick?"

The reporter was forced to admit that he had seldom seen a more perfect embodiment of health.

With pardonable pride Mrs. Jones said, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People did it.

"I can go anywhere now, while before I commenced using Dr. Williams' remedy I could not move out of the house.

"For three years, would you believe it, I did not even go to church. I was not always confined to my bed, but could not leave the house.

"Wherever I go people say, 'Why Mrs. Jones, how well you are looking. How did it happen?' and I always tell them 'Pink Pills did it.'

"I have not had the slightest touch of my old illness for the last six months and feel as if I never had been ill in my life."

Mr. Jones said, "you can readily imagine how highly we regard the remedy in this house where we have had a wife and mother restored to perfect health."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk, or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

TO OUR READERS.

We have received word that the Hercules Gas Engine Works of San Francisco, have perfected a thoroughly reliable and economical Gas and Gasoline Engine, called the Hercules, and are offering a 2½ actual horse-power Gas and Gasoline Engine, guaranteed, for $185.00.

Those of our readers who use or need power for mining, hoisting, pumping or for any purposes, will be glad to know this, as cheap, reliable power has been difficult to obtain heretofore. We can vouch for the responsibility of the Company offering this Engine; in fact, they guarantee satisfaction or to refund purchase price.

It will pay those needing power to write to the Hercules Gas Engine Works, San Francisco, Cal., for particulars.

Beware Of the Knife.

Mr. Lincoln Nelson, of Marshfield, Mo., writes: "For six years I have been a sufferer from a scrofulous affection of the glands of my neck, and all efforts of physicians in Washington, D. C., Springfield, Ill., and St. Louis failed to reduce the enlargement. After six months' constant treatment here, my physician urged me to submit to a removal of the gland. At this critical moment a friend recommended S.S.S., and laying aside a deep-rooted prejudice against all patent medicines, I began its use. Before I had used one bottle the enlargement began to disappear, and now it is entirely gone, though I am not through with my second bottle yet. Had I only used your S.S.S. long ago, I would have escaped years of misery and saved over $150."

This experience is like that of all who suffer with deep-seated blood troubles. The doctors can do no good, and even their resorts to the knife prove either fruitless or fatal. S.S.S. is the only real blood remedy; it gets at the root of the disease and forces it out permanently.

A Warm Weather Milk House.

A very convenient milk house for warm climates, or for summer use in colder sections, is shown in the engraving herewith. It is six feet square and six feet high at the eaves, which is large enough for the milk of two or three cows. The house is built under a large grape arbor, about twenty feet from my kitchen pump. The milk tank, which is twelve inches deep and fourteen inches wide at the top, extends along the north side. It has a screen cover, which may be covered with cloth in very hot or dusty weather. A table with shelf underneath occupies the southeast corner. A space just above the level of the tank, two feet wide and extending on all sides of the house, is covered with wire screen. Shelves above the screen and below the tank give sufficient room for pails and butter dishes. The milk is set in pails. A galvanized iron pipe leads from a small tank at the side of the pump down eighteen inches below the surface of the ground, across the twenty-foot space and up again to the level of the milk tank. An overflow pipe at the other end of the tank carries off the water after it has reached the proper height in the tank. Another pipe, at the bottom of the tank, is used for emptying it when desired. The door in the southwest corner is of wood, but could be of screen if preferred. Board shutters cover the screens in rainy weather. The water in the tank may be changed at any time by pumping water into the small tank at the well.—American Agriculturist.

Evils of Close Pasturing.

Close pasturing in autumn retards the growth in the early spring. When the covering of roots is eaten right down to the ground the frost penetrates more deeply, hence the ground remains cold longer in the spring. The cold winds, also, which sweep over the surface of the earth tend to retard growth. Take the very same field, compare the growth in early spring on the portions eaten bare with that made on the parts where more or less of a mulch of uneaten grass covered the roots all winter, and you will find that the grass blades on the parts so protected will have made several inches of growth before they commenced to grow on the other portions of the field. The yield of meadows is greatly increased, as already intimated, when they are not pastured closely. The advantage of the protection from the uneaten portion of the grass will be greater in dry than in moist seasons, but with some grasses it will be considerable in any season. Shallow-rooted grasses are thus greatly benefited. With timothy meadows the benefit in the crop is so great that it is at least an open question as to whether they should ever be pastured so long as they are to be retained as meadow. It is different with deep-rooted plants; they are less easily injured by either drouth or frost.

Useful Garden Tool.

Our engraving shows a very handy home-made tool for leveling seed beds in the garden or for grading walks and lawns. The board can be of considerable length, sharp at one edge, with a bit of flat iron riveted to the edge, the used-up blade of an old woodsaw being excellent for this purpose. The handle is braced firmly by a half-circle of iron which a blacksmith can fit in place in a few moments. With such an implement the work of leveling and grading can be done quickly and easily. It should have a place in any garden kit.

GARDEN LEVELER AND GRADER.

Grass for Sandy Soils.

It is very difficult to keep soils fertile if they contain a large proportion of sand. If they are kept under cultivation this difficulty is increased, as the sand both blows and washes away when exposed to winds. For this reason many owners of sandy fields keep them seeded with grass or clover as much as possible, and only plowing them when the seeding runs out.

"Hair Balls."

What looked like a new horse disease, has turned out to be an accumulation of the hairy calyxes and flower stalks of the crimson clover plant, in the stomachs of the afflicted animals. The trouble was first reported in Delaware, and has since become prevalent in other localities. The short barbed "hairs" of the plant accumulate, and form into hard, compact balls, which close up the intestines of the animal, and produce peritonitis, gangrene and finally death. As many as thirty of these balls have been taken from one animal. It is advisable in view of all this, to abstain from feeding this species of clover to stock after the plants have ceased flowering, and especially never to use for fodder the straw raised and threshed as a seed crop. The dangerous hairs do not become stiff until the plant has passed the flowering stage, and has begun to ripen. Use caution in this direction.

Training the Heifer.

In training young heifers it is well to remember that gentle handling is a great factor in gaining their good will and submission to be handled. All dairy animals, whether young or old, should be taught to regard their master as their best friend. If the young heifer is to be made a useful and pleasant animal for the dairy, it is important that she should be handled and accustomed to all necessary manipulations while she is a calf. If they are handled familiarly from the first, there will usually be very little trouble with them. When force is used at the start to compel them to submit to being milked, then the trouble begins. Many a young heifer has been ruined as a dairy cow by bad usage. Get her started right, and much future trouble will be avoided; it will be far better to exercise a little patience than to have trouble as long as she is a cow.

Advantages of Diversified Farming.

Diversified farming has two great advantages over that which is confined to one or two specialties. If the different crops are properly chosen there will be a succession of marketing to be done through the year, and also something to be done on the farm to keep its labor employed at all times. Where the specialty only is grown, though it may bring a good deal of money when sold, most of this has already been expended during the season while the crop was being grown. This is the difficulty with the Southern planter who depends wholly on his cotton crop. After the expense of making it is deducted the planter his less ready money than if he had more crops, so as to be able to sell something every month in the year.

Live Stock Notes.

Stock keeping keeps up the fertility of the farm.

If animals cannot understand language, they at least realize that a gentle voice betokens kindness toward them.

Keep the fences cattle proof. When cattle are tempted to jump a low, broken-down fence, a dangerous habit may be started.

A well-bred, well-fed yearling steer can be made to outweigh at twelve months the scrub at twenty-four months. This being true, why continue to raise scrubs?

The meat of an animal whose bone and muscle have been fully developed is better than the meat of an animal that has been forced on the fat side from the beginning.

Keep no unprofitable stock, whether it be horse, cow, hog, dog or poultry. Make it a point that every month on the farm must at least earn the food it eats. Keeping "dead stock" is making many farmers poor.

The color of an animal affects its sale as much as the other points of the animal. Breed with the end in view to get good conformation and color in the steers that you want to send to market and in the cows that you want to sell.

At a recent sale of Shorthorns in England, 32 cows and heifers averaged $145.25, and 16 bulls $209. At another sale, 66 head sold at an average of $133.50. Most of the bulls were sold for exportation, a good many going to South America.

Poultry Pointers.

When the bird begins to wheeze, you have a case of roup on hand.

Keep the coops and yards sweet by freely using air-slaked lime.

When the nests are where the dog can run before and around them, either the dog, the nests or the laying hens are out of place. Laying hens need to be kept quiet.

Keep the poultry out of the barn. It's no place for hens. You can't give them the care they need; you can't fight the lice, and you don't want them littering up the barn.

Are some of your fowls looking pale around the head, and not as lively as they should be? Look to the grit supply and put a few drops of tincture of iron in the drinking water.

It is best not to feed cooked vegetables to fowls during warm weather. They are too heating and fattening. Besides, there is so much desirable green stuff on the farm that is going to waste.

EMANCIPATION OF THE INDIAN.

Education the Only Means by Which He Can Be Improved.

Any government capable of annually assimilating half a million foreigners, many of whom have come from the dregs of European countries, should in the course of a few years digest 260,000 Indians. What prevents? We answer, methods; nothing but methods. Use the Indian method of isolation and segregation with the immigrant, and the American nation will be destroyed in a decade. Use the immigrant method of distribution, association and opportunity with the Indian, and a decade need not pass until they become a real part of our country's life blood.

The Indian has the capacity to meet the issues of civilized life at once. All Indian youth may readily be prepared to enter the common schools of the country by two or three years' course in government schools established for the special purpose of bringing them to this condition of fitness, and, having once entered the public schools, the way is open for them to remain and go up head. Such schools and all our higher schools are now and always have been open to the Indians. Harvard and Dartmouth colleges were started in the interests of Indian education.

The door of education has never been closed to the Indian. The whole 40,000 or 50,000 Indian youth may now, if they will, distribute themselves among the schools of the country. There need not be another school house built for exclusive Indian education. Pennsylvania has about 22,000 schools, and there are about 250,000 schools in the United States. If all the Indian youth in the country were distributed among the schools of Pennsylvania there would not be two Indian pupils for each school. If distributed among the schools of the country there would not be an Indian for each six schools. In either case the process would accomplish the civilization of the Indian a hundred times faster than government or mission schools, or both, for the reason that he is trained by daily contact with the very condition and individuals that later, as a man, he will have to compete with. We do the Indian no kindness by holding him away from this competition, for it is this very experience that is to develop him. Without it we shall never accomplish the emancipation of the Indian.—Chautauquan.

Wood Engraving.

The invention of wood engraving, like that of gunpowder, has been claimed for the Chinese, whose books have certainly been printed for ages from engraved blocks. It has even been asserted that the art of cutting figures in relief and printing impressions of them on paper was known and practiced by that nation as early as the reign of the renowned Emperor Wu-Wing, 1120 B. C. There is no doubt that wood stamps were used by the ancient Egyptians and Romans for stamping bricks, and other articles made of clay; and that wood and metal stamps of monograms, etc., were used in various European countries for attesting deeds and other documents, at a very early period, when writing was considered an extraordinary accomplishment, even for princes. It was not, however, until the beginning of the fifteenth century that any evidences of wood engraving, as understood at this day, were found. The earliest print of which any certain information can be obtained is that discovered in one of the most ancient convents of Germany, which represents St. Christopher carrying the infant Savior across the sea, and is dated 1423. This art was employed in illustrating many of the early editions of the Bible, and with rapid strides has at length reached a degree of perfection which is truly wonderful, as may be seen by reference to numerous works to be found in libraries or books, the lights and shades and other minutiae of the engravings comparing favorably with those done upon steel or copper.

Exempt.

Renan, in his "Feuilles Detachees," tells a story of a church service in Brittany where the priest delivered such a touching appeal that his hearers, with one exception, shed tears. But this one robust individual, who was leaning against a pillar, remained unmoved throughout the entire sermon.

The French are an emotional people, and the rest of the congregation could not imagine how this heart of stone had remained untouched.

"And you," said one of them to the man, "you are not weeping!"

"Why, no," replied he, "I don't belong to this parish!"

Bedtime in Ancient Days.

The boys and girls of this period would think their lots very hard should they be sent to bed at dark. Yet the majority of grown people, as well as the children, in ancient Rome rarely lighted a candle unless at dawn. In Rome, Athens, Egypt, and other parts of the Mediterranean shore, the bedtime was between seven and nine o'clock in the evening, according to the season. The Turks go to bed early and get up early to this day.

Not Flattering.

"When I grow up," said little Jack to his father, "I'm going to be just like you, papa."

"Good boy to say so," said his father.

"Well, I mean it," said Jack. "What a jolly time you do have with mamma always about to wait on you!"—Answers.

Forgetful.

Professor—Give me the names of the bones that form the human skull.

Medical Student—I've got them all in my head, but I can't recall their names—Texas Sifter.

OUR SUNDAY SERMONS

A FEW SUBJECTS FOR ALL TO PONDER OVER.

California Preacher Who Can Compass Practical Things—Power of Love—God Needs the Help of His Instruments—Words of Wisdom.

Love in the Household.

LOVE is the wind, the tide, the waves, the sunshine. Its power is incalculable; it is many horse-power. It never ceases, it never slacks; it can move with the globe without a resting place; it can warm without fire; it can feed without meat; it can clothe without garments; it can shelter without roof; it can make a a paradise without. But, though the wisest men in all ages have labored to publish this force, and every human heart is, sooner or later, more or less made to feel it, yet how little is actually applied to social ends. True, it is the motive power of all successful social machinery; but, as in physics we have made the elements do only a little drudgery for us, steam to take the place of a few horses, wind of a few oars, water of a few cranks and hand mills; as the mechanical forces have not yet been generously and largely applied to make the physical world answer to the ideal, so the power of love has been but meanly and sparingly applied as yet.—Henry D. Thoreau.

Building His Own Church.

Rev. Henry Victor Morgan, pastor of the First Christian Church Society at Alameda, Cal., is building a meeting house with the assistance of several members of his congregation. In labor's garb, with his coat off, his sleeves rolled up and a straw hat on the back of his head, Rev. Mr. Morgan may be seen daily at the corner of San Jose and Park avenues, plying the saw and the hammer in the construction of a house which will be dedicated to God.

Rev. Henry Victor Morgan has been in charge of the Christian flock in this city seven months. He is an earnest, practical man, and believes in building up his congregation by manual and muscular effort, as well as by preaching. The society made arrangements for the erection of a church building several months ago. A splendid site was purchased at the northeast corner of San Jose and Park avenues, facing the city park. The frame structure which Mr. Morgan is erecting will be 32x54 feet in dimensions. It will be used as a meeting house temporarily. During the year Mr. Morgan expects to build his church edifice proper, and the present structure will then be moved to the rear and used as a Sunday school room.

Accept Destiny.

Accept the place the divine Providence has found for you—the society of your contemporaries, the connection of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves, childlike, to the genius of their age, betraying their perception that the eternal was stirring at their heart, working through their hands, predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest mind the same transcendent destiny; and not pinch in a corner, not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but redeemers and benefactors, pious aspirants to the noble clay, plastic under the Almighty effort, let us advance and advance on chaos and the dark.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Practical Christianity.

You and I are instruments which God must use to consummate His plans and carry out His inflexible purpose. All-powerful though He may be, He needs your help and mine to hasten the dawning of that perfect day, when the kingdom of Christ shall prevail. The want of sympathy pervades society. We do not know each other. Draw nearer, clasp hands, recognize the struggling soul, the lonely, the ostracized, the fallen. Seek for the good and you will find the good. Discover the best in each soul; resolve that ill-will, fault-finding and hatred shall find no place in your thoughts, speech or actions.

Communion with God.

Worship is communion with God. Communion is that mysterious commingling of souls which makes them one, and gives to each the gifts of the other. We feel it in human love or friendship. It is deeper than words and larger than sympathy. It is the opening and giving of heart to heart. Thus we commune with God. He dwells in us and we in Him. The world fades away. Our sorrows are forgotten. We are uplifted by new aspirations and holy impulses. We go forth into the world again with new light on our faces and new joy in our hearts. We have been with our God.—Rev. W. S. Sayers.

Amen.

I cannot say,
Beneath the pressure of life's cares to-day,
I joy in these;
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way
If Him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when darkening clouds conceal
The shining sun;
But then I know
God lives and loves; and say, since it is so,
Thy will be done.

I cannot speak
In happy tones; the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad,
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When He is love;
But I can see,
Though often dimly, through the mystery,
His hand above.

I do not know
Where falls the seed, that I have tried to sow
With greatest care;
But I shall know
The meaning of each waiting hour below.
Sometime, somewhere.

I do not look
Upon the present, nor in nature's book,
To read my fate,
But I do look
For promised blessings in God's Holy Book,
And I can wait.

I may not try
To keep the hot tears back, but hush that sigh,
"It might have been;"
And try to still
Each rising murmur, and to God's sweet will, Respond "Amen."

—Ophelia G. Browning.

Courage.

The Lord likes courage in his hosts,
Courage to scale the heights of fortressed sin,
To fight the foes that strongly lurk within,
And yet to treat the sinner ever fair;
As object not of battle but of prayer.

Courage to shelter weak ones when oppressed,
E'en when their tyrants are earth's mightiest.
Courage to do what duty says it right,
In no half coward way, but with our might,
This is well pleasing in our General's sight.

—Ram's Horn.

Joy of Definite Personal Work.

Helping an individual in time of need is a more real and positive act than helping a whole community. To write a poem, an essay, or a volume, that shall interest and influence thousands, does not give the sense of personal satisfaction to the writer that comes with the consciousness of giving encouragement and cheer to one aching heart or troubled soul that might have fainted or failed but for this stimulus and aid.

Being Forced to Work.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you temperance and self control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and content, and a hundred virtues which the idle never know.—Charles Kingsley.

The Little Circle in Which We Live.

Each one of us is bound to make the little circle in which he lives better and happier. Each one of us is bound to see that out of that small circle the widest good may flow. Each one of us may have fixed in his mind the thought that out of a single household may flow the influences that still stimulate the whole commonwealth and the whole civilized world.—Dean Stanley.

Whatever the Temptation.

Be honest with yourself, whatever the temptation; say nothing to others that you do not think, and play no tricks with your own mind. Of all the evil spirits abroad at this hour in the world insincerity is the most dangerous.—James Anthony Froude.

Bits of Things.

Sin is the worst word in any language.

For a man to exert his power in doing good so far as he can is a glorious task.

It is a sin on the part of any Christian not to be a friend of missions.—Van Oosterzee.

It may sometimes cost you a good deal to do right, but it will be sure to cost you more not to do it.

Success in life is not so much a matter of talent or opportunity as of concentration and perseverance.—C. W. Wendte.

I find the great thing in this world is, not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving.—O. W. Holmes.

Kind words prevent a good deal of that perverseness which rough and imperious usage often produces in generous minds.—Locke.

Speak the truth; let it fall upon the hearts of men with all imparted energy by which the Spirit gives it power, but speak the truth in love.—Rev. William M. Punshon.

You may not be able to leave your children wealth or the inheritance of a great name or eminent social advantages; but you can leave them the results of fidelity and precious memories of devotion to the holy task of trying to make them know what God says to us in the Old and New Testaments, and what he wants us to believe and to do and to be.—Dr. F. A. Noble.

LITERARY LITTLEBITS

Herbert Spencer and James Bryce are among those suspected by English reviewers of having written the reply to Max Nordau entitled "Regeneration."

John Boyd Thacher's folio volume, "The Continent of America; Its Discovery and Baptism," which has just been published by William Evarts Benjamin, is limited to 275 signed copies.

The Macmillans announce a translation from the Russian of A. P. Tverskov entitled "Sketches from the United States of North America." A high German authority has called Tverskov the Rusian Bryce.

President Paul Kruger's library has hitherto consisted of two volumes—the Bible and "Pilgrim's Progress." Now he is said to have become so fond of Mark Twain's humor that he has ordered a set of the American writer's works. Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer always were careful of the company they kept.

Evelyn Briggs Baldwin, the member of the Chicago Academy of Sciences who accompanied Peary in his north polar expedition as meteorologist, has issued a volume entitled "The Search for the North Pole," in which he sums up all former expeditions and announces his intention of organizing a new one himself at an early day.

Kipling's "Letters of Marque," descriptive of the old cities of Rajputana, written when he was a reporter for the Pioneer, were issued in pamphlet form in India, but could not hitherto be published in England on account of some copyright trouble. This has now been removed, and the essays will soon be brought out in London.

Surviving friends of Gambetta are exceedingly wroth with Henri Rochefort, who is publishing his own reminiscences in a Paris journal. Whether Gambetta died of pistol wounds, and whether these wounds were inflicted by a woman after an all-night orgy, are questions which Rochefort professes to decide in the affirmative by new personal evidence, but he has been promptly met with categorical denial and scientific refutation.

Commodore's Dying Joke.

Some reporters were waiting for news after midnight recently of the condition of Cornelius Vanderbilt. It is no fun to kick your heels against the pavement until 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning, and the reporters grew restless. "This reminds me," said one, reflectively, "of the death watch on the old commodore. Things were quite different then from what they are now. When the old commodore was just taken ill he used to send for us every day and tell us all about himself. He used to read the papers and he noticed that a great deal of space was devoted to him.

"'Well, boys,' he said one morning, 'I hope I live a little longer for your sakes. You seem to be making a lot of space out of me.'

"Finally, though, when he became too ill to see us, we had to camp out, as we are doing now, and it soon became tedious. We used to camp about twenty feet from the front of the house in which the old gentleman lay, and sometimes you could hear what was said in the sickroom.

"Among us was a certain gentleman who is now the respected father of a family. He was rather impatient. It was late at night. He had a voice in him like a bull.

"'Oh, why don't he die?' he suddenly exclaimed, petulantly.

"We thought no more of his remark until a few minutes later, when a trim servant girl came out of the house. She looked us over and watched us for a few moments. Then Doc. said something and she came over to him and handed him a note. He opened it, wondering what it could be. On the paper was a score or so of words written in the old commodore's well-known scrawl. They read:

"'I trust you will pardon me, but as this is the first time I have ever died, I am a little inexperienced and don't exactly know how to go about it. If you will bear with me a little while, however, I will try to do my best.'

"The old gentleman had heard the pious remark and it had been too much for his grim sense of humor."—New York Press.

Rising Tide.

Many of the anecdotes told of Father Taylor, the celebrated preacher of the Boston Seamen's Bethel, show that he was ready with a simile whenever occasion for one arose.

One evening a prayer meeting had lasted long beyond the usual hour for closing, and Father Taylor's talk was increasing in fervor and energy, when some restless young men arose and shuffled hastily out of the room.

"That's right, brethren," said Father Taylor, shaking his head as if his anticipations were suddenly realized, "the tide is rising; the driftwood is beginning to float."

Peculiar Spiders.

The most peculiar spiders in the world, as well as the largest ones, inhabit the island of Sumatra. Some have square bodies poised on long red legs, and others have crooked green and yellow legs which support heart-shaped bodies. One of the very oddest of the lot has a body that looks like that of a young turtle, the "shell" having round knobs and pear-shaped projections all over it.

At a distance, it is impossible to tell a little girl's tan stocking-covered limbs from a boy's dirty legs.

COMEDIANS OF ANIMAL REALM.

Grotesque in Appearance and Clownish in Their Manners.

Pigs, especially happy pigs, when not too fat, but only "well liking," and free to wander in a big yard and forage for themselves, are among the most comic animals. Almost all the necessary elements are present—fat bodies and fat cheeks, twinkling eyes, tightly curling tails, short, turned-up noses, voices capable of expressing in a grunt intense self-satisfaction, curiosity and all forms of squeaks and squeals for surprise, fear and panic. The writer has watched a family of young pigs, about eighteen inches long, just turned out to spend the morning in a meadow, and returned convinced that there was not a moment at which their appearance and behavior was not too comical for description. Each flower and weed was tasted by the little pigs with the air of a connoisseur trying a new dish, and when they found a horse lying asleep taking its Sunday rest the whole litter stood in a semi-circle round its head as if grouped to sing in a chorus.

Pigs are so funny, and everyone so thoroughly recognizes the fact now that it seems rather odd that the discovery should be so recent. There is plenty of allusion to the pig as a filthy, ugly creature in the East, and many old English anecdotes of their cunning and knowing ways about weather and food, but except the pig-selling scene in the Acharnians, which is sadly wanting in humor, there is hardly any early recognition of the comicality of pigs. The reason is that it is only the modern improved British pig that is comical. His alone are the round stern, the curly tail, the short nose, the dumpling cheeks and the fine high spirits. The wretched grayhound pig of the East or of the unimproved breeds of Europe has not an atom of humor in him. Even a young wild boar is a glum little fellow, only growing lively as he grows hungry. We owe the "comic pig" to the encouragement of the Smithfield show and the Royal Agricultural Society. But there is room for difference as to the humorous side of animal life in creatures which are not domesticated and have never changed.

The owl is a case in point. The Greeks looked upon him as a grave and wise bird and assigned him to Athene. We think his appearance comic, and in common talk the owl represents a bewildered, rather dense person, who can not see the obvious. Though the Greek revered the owl, the Hindoo feeling is exactly the same as ours. To call a stupid servant "ooloo" ("you owl") would convey exactly the same meaning in India as it would here. A physical explanation is just possible. We and the Hindoos think of the night owl, a bird bewildered by light. Athene's owls, which are now sold in large numbers in London as pets, are little wideawake ground owls, able to see by day as well as by night. Most people who have watched penguins hopping on the ground will own that when moving about they are irresistibly funny. Their little wings, like fat hands without arms, round white waistcoats, short necks and short legs with little, flat, black feet, make them a bird edition of Mr. Pickwick. Their only movement is a series of hops, with the head bent nervously forward, as if they were afraid of falling—which they are—and their little wings stuck out on each side to balance them. Of course, the penguin has not the least notion that it is funny or amusing, and is as uncomfortable as a Chinese lady trying to walk across a rice field. Puffins rank high among the comic birds. Their "make-up," which is that of a city waiter, is enhanced by the big red and yellow bill, which is set on like a Guy Fawkes mask. Young puffins, which have not developed this adjunct to "facial expression," are far less ludicrous to look upon and have none of the exaggerated, inspection-like air of their seniors. The Japanese artists, who have a fine sense of the ludicrous in nature, but usually read in some portion of human wit into their studies of animal life, show a proper appreciation of the comicality of the crab. They cast bronze crabs in all attitudes, the most effective being the enraged crab sticking up his pinching claws in a position of defense. If their mechanical skill also allowed of a clockwork movement, by which the crab could be depicted retreating sideways, with his claws raised and snapping, these works of art would be perfect illustrations of the comic side of submarine life.—London Spectator.

Money Lavished on Trifles.

Expensive trifles have ceased to be a luxury to the rich. One of the fans which Mrs. Almeric Paget inherited from her mother, Mrs. Whitney, has gold and ivory sticks, a lace mount and is valued at the trifling sum of $1,000, and one of the treasures in Mrs. W. H. Vanderbilt's library is a whip which belonged to her husband, a gift from friends. The stock is of ivory, finely carved. The whip is made of solid whalebone. The cost of this little gift is said to have been $2,000.

Been There Himself.

Pullman Porter—You can't imagine how trying it is to have people always making fun of you.

Passenger—Just guess I can. I was a member of the LIIId Congress.—Washington Times.

Daughter (in tears)—Oh, papa! why did you throw Reggy down the front steps? Father—Why, you didn't think I was going to throw him up the front steps and into the house again, did you? You're as hard to satisfy as your mother.—Judge.

Miss Prettie—Mr. Ryder is so entertaining! He seems to have come in contact with so many people. Mr. Wheeler (viciously)—You should watch him on his bike.—New York Press.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE ON FORECLOSURE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

LUKE REGAN, Plaintiff, vs. RICHARD D. DUNPHY, Defendant. } Commissioner's Sale on Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of sale and decree of foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 30th day of Sept., 1896 in the above-entitled action wherein Luke Regan, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree against Richard D. Dunphy, defendant, on the 30th day of Sept. 1896, which said decree was on the 13th day of Oct., 1896, recorded in Judgment Book No. 2 of said Court, at page 10. I am commanded to sell the lands and premises situated, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

The lands and premises directed to be sold by this decree are situated, lying and being in the Cerro Gordo Mining District, County of Inyo, State of California, known and described as the "Morning Star Mine" and Mining Claim, together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in anywise appertaining.

Notice is hereby given, that on Tuesday, the 17th day of Nov., 1896, at 11 o'clock a. m. of that day, in front of the Court House of said County of Inyo, at Independence in said County, I will in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, with interest thereon and costs, to the highest and best bidder for cash, in lawful money of the United States.

JAMES R. MOFFETT, Commissioner.

Dated: Independence Oct. 13, 1896.

TUESDAY, the third day of November, A. D. 1896,

When the following officers will be elected, namely:

Nine Electors of President and Vice President of the United States.

Also, seven Representatives to the Congress of the United States: being one Representative from each Congressional District.

Also, one State Senator from each of the following senatorial Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth, Nineteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third, Twenty-fifth, Twenty-seventh, Twenty-ninth, Thirty-first, Thirty-third, Thirty-fifth, Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth.

Also, one Member of the Assembly from each Assembly District in this State.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

Also, four Judges of the Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County.

Also, three Judges of the Superior Court in and for the County of Sacramento.

Also, two Judges of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alameda, Humboldt, San Diego, San Joaquin, Santa Clara and Sonoma.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for each of the following counties: Alpine, Amador, Butte, Calaveras, Contra Costa, Colusa, Del Norte, El Dorado, Inyo, Kern, Lake, Lassen, Mariposa, Marin, Merced, Mendocino, Monterey, Modoc, Mono, Napa, Nevada, Orange, Placer, Plumas, San Bernardino, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, Shasta, Sierra, Siskiyou, Solano, Stanislaus, Yuba and Sutter Tehama, Trinity, Tuolumne, Ventura, and Yolo.

Also, one Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of Fresno, for the unexpired term of S. A. Holmes, deceased, ending January, 1897; vice Stanton L. Carter appointed.

Also, at said election, Amendments to the Constitution of the State, submitted by the Legislature at its last regular session, numbered and designated as hereinafter specified, will be voted upon by the electors of said state, namely,

Amendment Number One.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 33.)

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 1. All property in the State not exempt under the laws of the United States, or this Constitution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word "property" as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matter and things, real, personal, and mixed, capable of private ownership: provided, that property used for free public libraries and free public museums, growing crops, mortgages, trust deeds, property used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this State, or to any county or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation. The Legislature may provide for a reduction from credits of debts due bona fide residents of this state.

Sec 2. Section four of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Sec 3. Section five of article thirteen of this Constitution is hereby repealed.

Amendment Number Two.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 8.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot or by such other method as may be prescribed by law; provided that secrecy in voting be preserved.

Amdndment Number Three

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 19.)

ARTICLE XII.

Section 3. The liability of stockholders of corporations or joint-stock associations shall be limited to the face value of the shares of the subscribed capital stock or shares of such corporation or association; and whenever any shares have been fully paid up, the holder of such shares shall not be further liable to such corporation or association, or the creditors thereof, on that account. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association, whose capital stock is not fully paid up, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder or shareholder, as the amount unpaid upon the stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole amount unpaid upon the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation or association. The Directors or Trustees of corporations and joint-stock associations shall be jointly and severally liable to the creditors and stockholders for all moneys embezzled or misappropriated by the officers of such corporation or joint stock association, during the term of office of such Director or Trustee.

Amendment Number Four.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 25.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 6. Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.

Amendment Number Five.

(Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 13.)

ARTICLE XI.

Section 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of article eleven of this Constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution and by the laws of this State, as follows:

1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of Police Courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the Judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the compensation of said Judges and of their clerks and attaches.

2. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Education shall be elected or appointed, and the number which shall constitute any one of such Boards.

3. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of the Boards of Police Commissioners shall be elected or appointed; and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards and of the municipal police force.

4. For the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the members of all Boards of Election shall be elected or appointed, and for the constitution, regulation, compensation, and government of such Boards, and of their clerks and attaches; and for all expenses incident to the holding of any election.

Where a city and county government has been merged and consolidated into one municipal government, it shall also be competent in any charter framed under said section eight of said article eleven, to provide for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the several county officers shall be elected or appointed, for their compensation, and for the number of deputies that each shall have, and for the compensation payable to each of such deputies.

Amendment Number Six.

(Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 11.)

ARTICLE II.

Section 1. Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under and by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims to vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, no native of China, no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, and no person hereafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money, and no person who shall not be able to read the Constitution in the English language, and write his or her name, shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector in this State; provided that the provisions of this amendment relative to an educational qualification shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be sixty years of age and upward at the time this amendment shall take effect.

Each amendment shall be voted upon separately from the others, by ballot, at the next general election to be held on Tuesday, the third day of November, 1896.

The said amendments are respectively designated:

Amendment Number One,
Amendment Number Two,
Amendment Number Three,
Amendment Number Four,
Amendment Number Five,
Amendment Number Six.

Each ballot used at such election must contain printed thereon the words:

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, there has been presented to the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, petitions signed by legal voters of the said County of Inyo, equal in number to fifty per cent of the votes cast at the last preceding election asking that an ordinance set forth in each of said petitions, be submitted to a vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, which said proposed ordinance is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

ORDINANCE NO. —

An Ordinance for the purpose of police regulation, by prohibiting the maintenance of places for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the County of Inyo, State of California.

The Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo do ordain as follows:

SECTION 1.—It shall be, and is hereby made, unlawful for any person or persons, either as owners, principals, agents, servants, or employees, to establish, open, keep, maintain, carry on, or assist in carrying on, within the corporate limits of the County of Inyo, State of California, any tippling house, dramshop, cellar, saloon, bar, bar room, sample room, or other place where spirituous, vinous, malt, mixed, or intoxicating liquors are sold or given away; provided that the provisions of this ordinance shall not apply to the sale of liquors for medicinal or chemical purposes by regularly licensed druggists upon the prescription of a physician entitled to practice medicine under the laws of the State of California.

SECTION 2.—Any act in violation of this ordinance shall be construed a separate offense for each day of its continuance.

SECTION 3.—Every person who violates any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before any Court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding three hundred and sixty dollars, or by imprisonment in the County Jail of the County of Inyo not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SECTION 4.—All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this Ordinance are hereby repealed.

SECTION 5.—This Ordinance shall take effect on the first day of January, 1897.

SECTION 6.—This Ordinance shall be published for two successive weeks in the INYO INDEPENDENT, a newspaper of general circulation published in said Inyo County.

Now, therefore, by virtue of the statute in such case made and provided, and the authority in the said Board of Supervisors vested, the said Board of Supervisors do hereby, by due proclamation, submit the said Ordinance to the vote of the qualified voters of the said County of Inyo, State of California, on Tuesday, the third day of November, A. D. 1896. And notice is hereby given thereof, and that said Ordinance and the adoption thereof shall be voted on, for the Ordinance, Yes or No.

FRANK FITZGERALD, Chairman, Board of Supervisors.

DIED.

MUNN—At Bishop, October 27, 1896, James Nicholas Munn, a native of Sonora, California aged 31 years.

Republican speaking to-night.

Editor Chalfant came down from Bishop Monday, returning Tuesday morning.

Will Morton returned from Los Angeles Thursday. He says the horse market is far from encouraging.

Sample ballots for the coming election have been mailed each voter in the county. Call at your post office and get it.

District Attorney Forbes will address the voters of Lone Pine, on the political issues of the day, to-morrow (Saturday) night.

Mr. J. J. Gunn came in from his mine, the Minnietta, yesterday. He reports the mining outlook for Southern Inyo as encouraging.

The Great Register for Inyo County for 1896 has been received. It is a beauty, and does credit to the job department of the Register office.

George Thorpe and M. Laprairie have struck a flattering prospect in Mazourka canyon. They will commence developing their find in a few days.

If Archbishop Ireland would pay more attention to the spiritual and less to the political welfare of his people, he would be thought just as much of.

J. W. Wright came in from Coso district last Thursday. He reports the late storm as having stopped all work with dry-washers for the season.

The prevailing idea is that the amendment to the constitution on woman suffrage will carry easily, as very few are osposing it and so many are for it.

Sheriff Given says he takes no Stock in the report that an Inyo county official removed a McKinley button from his coat when he crossed the line into Nevada.

It commenced raining here last Monday evening, continued showering during the night and all day Tuesday. It was a general storm throughout the county.

Attention is called to Amendment No. 3. An effort will be made to repeal the amendment to the constitution which makes the rich stock-holder liable to the amount of his stock in a firm or corporation.

The many friends of Miss Maud Cook tendered her a pleasant surprise last Friday evening. Music, games, and dancing were indulged in, and all expressed themselves as having had a jolly time.

Another petition has been forwarded to Supt. Jaynes of the Western Union Telegraph Company asking for the re-establishment of a telegraph office in this place. It was signed by the County Officers and business men generally. Will we get it?

Julius Schroder and Charles Houle came down from Kearsarge mountain last Tuesday morning. They report over two feet of snow having fallen during the storm. This will necessitate the closing down of Mr. Schroder's mine until next spring.

It is with deepest regret that we learn of the death of James N. Munn, of Bishop. Mr. Munn was an enterprising young business man and was unversally respected and esteemed. He was married and leaves a wife and four children, besides numerous relatives, to mourn his loss. His family have the sympathy of this entire community in their sad bereavement.

Arthur L. Levinsky, a Republican speaker from Stockton, will address the people of Independence on the political issues of the day to-night (Friday). He is said to be a speaker of marked ability, and everybody should go and hear him, as Democrats claim that after this election Republicanism will be a thing of the past, and that the party will meet with such a Waterloo at the polls that it can never be resurrected.

Silver Rally.

As the time draws near to make a choice for a President for our great republic the patriots of all parties get more interested and excited. Wednesday evening W. S. Scott, a Silver Republican speaker from San Francisco, filled an appointment here. He arrived by Wednesday's train and was met at the depot by A. W. Eibeshutz with a private conveyance and brought to town. Bonfires were lighted and the town was filled with people from the surrounding country who came to hear him. The speaker's desk was profusely decorated with flowers. Long before the speaking comenced the Court Room was filled with men and women eager to hear the issues of the day discussed. At eight o'clock District Attorney Forbes, who was Chairman, opened the meeting with a few appropriate remaks, and then introduced the speaker of the evening. Mr. Scott spoke for over two hours, and he kept his audience interested and amused from its commencement to its close. He is far ahead of the average campaign speaker, and made many friends, if not converts, by the pleasant and logical manner in which he presented his facts. This was undoubtedly the largest and most enthusiastic political meeting held here during the campaign, and closed with three rousing cheers, which were given with a will, for Bryan and Sewall, and for Mr. Scott, the speaker.

Mr. A. A. Neil is prospecting at Coso Springs.

Miss Bertha Way has gone to Independence.

Mrs. Goodale has gone back to Fish Springs.

Last Saturday night the Good Templars from Big Pine gave an entertainment at the Fish Springs school house. The program was a very good one and well rendered, although the tableau did fail to appear.

AURORA.

She Was Hopeful.

There was a colored funeral in the southern suburb of Carson. The widow was inconsolable at the cemetery, but when she returned to the desolated home, and the fatherless pledges of affection ran out to meet her, her grief was like the giving way of a great dam. "Pore, pore little orphans," she sobbed, "ye haven't got fodder no moah. But don't cry, I hopes to get you a step-fodder before you is much older. De Lawd tempers de wind to de early worm."

County Clerk Hession has sent an envelope containing a sample ballot and a small pamphlet of the Proclamation of the election by mail to every voter. On this general ticket appears the names of all candidates of all parties in the second congressional district, the thirty-second senatorial district, the sixtieth assembly district and second, fourth and fifth supervisoral districts. This sample ballot needs study and let our Bryan men of the Democratic party not get their ideas mixed up with the National Democratic ticket. Study your ticket.

One of the arguments advanced against equal suffrage is that women do not as a rule care to vote. On the same line of argument women do not care for the privilege of making beds or sweeping or wasning dishes and yet all these unpleasant tasks are necessary to the welfare of "we men" and so is equal suffrage. We have tried to operate this government for a long time and have not exceeded very well and it is time for us to not only allow the women to help us but to ask them to do so.—Ex.

Young Swinnerton will go to Europe soon after the election, to attend art schools to perfect himself in his art. He will be absent three or four years attending different schools. He is now drawing cartoons for the Examiner, while his father is speaking for the Republicans. What will become of the country when the old man is gone and the young one returns with improved genius, is not stated.—Sun.

The voter's attention is called to the fact that an endeavor will be made to repeal the amendment which places the taxes on the holder of the mortgage, thus adding them on to the already burdened debtor, the man whose land is mortgaged. This is Amendment No. 1, and all voters should be sure to read it carefully before voting.

Archbishop Ireland says the Chicago platform is a declaration of secession Certainly it is. It advises the people of the United States to join in open rebellion against the further domination of this government by British financiers, and Bryan offers to lead the patriotic rebels.

Why all this excitement over the Castles? If they had been poor, ordinary American citizens the stir would hardly have been perceptible. We need a little English justice in this country. We need that the rich be as amenable to our laws as the poor.—Sun.

The very idea that Bryan will be elected has boomed wheat, and the stronger and stronger the probability of his election has kept it on the jump. It is this idea which has leavened the whole loaf and now the rise is on to stay.

The English courts have not shown much consideration for the Castles. They are treated according to the evidence, the same as poor people are in those tribunals of justice.

When the government is properly administered there wil be no syndicates fattening out of the government's adversities after they have brought those adversities on the government for their own benefit.—W. J. Bryan.

The free silver campaign is before us, but let us not forget to vote correctly on those amendments.

Henry George says Bryan will carry Iowa by a majority of least thirty thousand.

POLITICS AT THE HAMLET.

BIG PINE, Oct. 28, 1896.

ED. INDEPENDENT:—The warfare being waged by the leaders of the national gold-bug republican forces in the present campaign is being closely copied by the strikers and blowers of the straight-out gold standard candidate for the Assembly in the 60th district. To commence, the prototype referred to, the ancient and honorable editors of the Bridgeport Union, mixed a gold cure version of the incidental circumstances attending the endorsement of Comrade T. A Keables, the Independent Silver candidate for Assemblyman, by the Democratic Central Committee of Inyo, intended to convey the impression that the Populists of the county were very much disgruntled at the retirement of Rev. L. Case their candidate for this position. The more astounding copy of the Hannatactics has developed since the second passage of Grove Johnson's man Friday, E. L. Resse, the would-be Assemblyman of the 60th Distriot. Now, look you! when Tom Keables was here, the friends of bimetallism gave him a rousing welcome, under the auspices of a club numbering two-thirds of the entire number of registered voters in this precinct. On this occasion Swamper called on this old veteran to know "where he was to" on the silver and funding issues in this campaign, the Dr. came to the front and declared flat-footed for the gospel of silver, enunciated at the Republican State Convention and the Chicago Council of Democrats, and said, that he was unalterably opposed to the refunding infamy, and bore down heavy on his opposition to the re-election of its only advocate in the last Congress, Grove L. Johnson, of the City of Sacrehuntington. The old "vet" further gladdened the hearts of all faithful bimetallists present by a solemn promise to vote for no aspirant for U. S. Senator, who was not in accord with his sentiment on these issues, and told us "out loud" that he would not under any circumstances vote for the caucus nominee of the Republicans of the next legislature for that position. Your faithful chonicler was unfortunately debarred from the privilege of meeting Mr. Keese, owing to absence in the service of bimetallism and its advocates; but equally observant Republican friends of Bryan and the rights of the masses, informed me that this good man from Bodie, expressed soul-harrowing doubts, in whispers, surcharged with a hidden meaning of the loyalty of Comrade Keables on the silver issue at the same time developing into such an anarchist as to declare himself in favor of foreclosure of the Government's claims against the S. P. R. R. The same observers also tell me, that within twelve hours after the departure of this consistent candidate of the Hannaistic Senator builders, the doughty warrior, who introduced Tom Keables on the occasion referred to, as the next Assemblyman from the 60th district, might have been seen, and was seen painting their excellencies in Dolly Varden hues, of the man who sent his proxy to a R. R. Attorney of Uncle Collis, who voted it for the nomination of his man Friday in the late Republican Congressional Convention, and even unto the present time he croaks: "I tell you, Reese is the man, he is a business man, he is sound on silver, and a dandy on the R. R. issue, he is sound on ad nauseam." This is written for the sole purpose of giving a bunch to any converts made by the late itineracy of Mr. E. L. Reese, candidate of the McKinley Republicans of the 60th Assembly District. That whatever may have changed the hearts of the strikers and blowers, herein referred to, and of any other eleventh hour converts, Swamper's stupid conclusion of the premises is, that the average voter of the precinct will not distrust the loyalty of a man who stood in when the country's existence was threatened, from the whispered insinuations of an opposing candidate, driven to desperation by being handicapped by the dual straddle of Collis P. Huntington and Grove L. Johnson. The apt imitator of the solons of his party, was obliged to take a fresh inventory of his political stock as soon as he hit the Inyo line, and about ten o'clock p. m. last Saturday, he dug from his inner consciousness an assortment of Bryan jewels sufficient to capture one member of the hamlet's Silver Club. As a gaudy bid for this agile acrobrat, he informed him confidently, that Keables couldn't begin to carry the silver vote of Mono. That Mono and Alpine would lend him (Reese) without much assistance from Inyo and that sort of rot. You, of the capital, are hereby assured that this precinct will give rousing majorities for Marion DeVries and T. A. Keables.

A WOMAN'S LOVE.

She Bared Her Arm to the Surgeon's Knife For Her Husband's Benefit.

The keen stroke of the surgeon's blade along the slender nerves, shooting currents of agony to every fiber and torturing every muscle, causes the physically bravest of us to quail, even when it is vitally necessary to undergo the pain, and something like Spartan courage is needed when one voluntarily goes through with the experience solely for another's sake.

Dr. Jarnigan tells a story, and it is out of his own professional experience, that has for its heroine a woman who did this bravely unselfish thing.

Her husband's arm had been crushed in the machinery. The hard folds of muscle had been flattened, and the bone had been crushed. The arm, bruised and discolored, was bad enough to look upon, but it gave no indication of the excruciating torture of pain the man had to undergo. It was thought at first by the doctors that his arm would have to come off—the good right arm that supported the brave wife who stood by his side and the serious, anxious faced children who stood looking on. He begged them to save his arm, and his wife begged them, and fortunately the condition of the case permitted them to.

But the arm did not heal. The skin sloughed away from the wounded surface and left it raw and sore. The doctors saw that it was necessary to graft portions of skin to the service to bring about a cure. They told the sick man of it, and they bared his side to cut off the strips of skin to put over the raw arm.

The blade flashed into the man's side, the blood spurted out, and with a moan the man fell over in a faint, sickened by the pain. His wife had been watching, her sympathetic heart touched to its depths by the sight of her husband's suffering.

"Doctor, don't do that again," she begged. "Don't cut him any more. He is too weak and has suffered too much. Cut it off me. Won't that do?"

The doctors told her that it would. She coolly bared her arm and told them she was ready. The razor edged blade sank into the flesh and went ripping down, followed by a tiny fountain of blood. She did not wince. Dexterously, expertly, the doctors slit out a piece of skin and grafted it over the man's arm. Another and another piece was cut out until more than a dozen had been removed, and all the while the Spartan woman remained standing watching the swift flash of the knife, the springing of the warm blood and the sickening spectacle without shrinking once.

The husband's arm, grafted over with skin taken from his wife's arm, is now well, and the arm of the brave woman is fast healing up, leaving many long scars, that will ever bear evidence to the heroism of her love.—Atlanta Constitution.

THE FAMILY STORY

THE ODD NUMBER.

The short November afternoon was darkening, and the snow, falling steadily, melted as it fell, making the slush still deeper.

On one of the street corners of an Eastern city stood a girl playing a violin; the wild, sweet notes pierced the air and died away, and the girl held her chilled hands out to receive the pennies offered her. Then she walked on, only pausing to look through the brilliantly lighted show windows at the rich furs.

For some moments she stood, then, drawing her old shawl closer, hurried on. Over the bridge she passed and up the dark street, entering one of the houses in a long row of tenements.

The great bare room, dimly lighted by a lamp; the rusty stove, and the fumes of oil struck the girl unpleasantly as she threw open the door. By the window sat a man busily mending an old violin, while near him was a bench strewn with tools.

"Here, father," she said, coming over and throwing some pennies on the bench; "I stayed out until I was chilled through, and that is all I could get."

"You hussy! It's because you won't work that you can't get it. You're as lazy and proud as your mother was—she'd rather freeze to death than ask a penny."

The girl stood by the stove, with one foot resting on the fender. It was her apparent indifference that roused the anger of the man. He spread the money in his palm, and counted it.

"Twenty cents, you lazy good-for-nothing. How are we going to pay the rent with that?"

The girl neither answered nor showed that she had heard. When she had partly dried her feet she went to the cupboard and, bringing some brown bread and cheese, sat them on the table. She then wheeled her father's chair to the board, and sat down to the cheerless supper. She broke off bits of bread and ate as though unconscious of what she was doing.

"You'd be glad enough to see your father turned out, wouldn't you? Rent coming due and nothing to pay it with." He waited for a reply, but the girl had nothing to say.

"Three days more, then nothing to do but freeze and starve to death," he continued, watching closely to see the effect. The face opposite remained unchanged.

"Say, Sal," here the surly tone changed into a coaxing whine. "Bill Bradden was around to-day again, and he says he'd be willing and glad to marry you.

"YOU'LL MARRY BILL BRADDEN, OR YOU'LL LEAVE HOME.

Now, Bradden's got money enough to take us both in, and a good home for your poor old——"

The dark eyes slowly raised to his—great, glowing eyes, burning with rage and scorn.

"I'd starve before I'd marry that Bill Bradden. I'd rather starve, anyway, than live out this—this—what is called life."

"We'll see, my girl," was the reply, spoken so quietly as to sound ominous. "You'll marry Bill Bradden, or you'll leave home."

"Home!" and the girl laughed a miserable little laugh.

Nothing in the determined expression of the girl betrayed the agitation in her mind as she quietly rose and cleared away the dishes, piling the crusts and bits of cheese in the bowl for their breakfast. Suddenly a figure passed the window. In an instant the girl had sprung to the door and bolted it.

A loud rap sounded. She went on putting away the supper things. The vigorous pounding continued.

"Sal! Let me in."

She did not answer but slowly lighted the candle and, passing the window at which the man stood peering in, went upstairs. She listened at the pipe hole and heard her father open the door to admit the visitor.

"That girl of yours is a rare one. The minute she sees me coming she runs and bolts the door in my face. It doesn't look very encouraging, eh, Garrick?"

"Just you have patience, Bradden. The girl's got to have some of the stubborness knocked out of her, that's all. But say, old fellow, about the cash. It's agreed and written down in black and white that you are to hand it over the night you marry her?"

"That's the bargain. The girl's a prize and I'm willing to pay well for her. Clip her wings Garrick, that it will be straight sailing.

"Let me see—this is the 12th. Three days more and then— Say, Bradden, what do you say to doing the thing up to-morrow night? She'd be just as willing then as she would a year from now. Shall we go ahead?"

Then they laughed together and shook hands. Sal strained her ears, but could hear nothing more but the click of glasses.

"Oh, how cold it is," she half moaned. "Inside—inside I am freezing—my heart is turning to stone and my blood is like cold water; but my brain is not yet numb—I can think."

She heard the door open and Bill Bradden go out. Creeping noiselessly down the stairs, she laid the bundle down and put on her bonnet and shawl, then walked over and looked long at the unconscious face of her father as he sat in a heavy stupor in his chair with head fallen on his breast.

"I have done the best I could by you, father. I have tried and failed. I won't stay and be made to marry that man. No! not even to save the roof over your head."

The girl opened the window a trifle, picked up her bundle and violin, and, blowing out the light, left the house.

* * * * * * *

Paul Oldfield sat reading before the fire in his little back parlor. The blaze lighted and shadowed the walls lined with books—old, musty books which had lain for years waiting to be claimed; the little room was oddly furnished in quaint pieces, also waiting to be claimed, for Paul Oldfield was a pawnbroker, as his father had been before him.

"I HAVE DONE THE BEST I COULD BY YOU, FATHER.

The door opened, jingling the bell on its wire. The pawner drew aside the chintz curtain and entered the shop. Before the counter stood Sal Garrick.

"You can sell my things," she said. "I can't redeem them, and you needn't save them any longer." As she spoke she looked at a bracelet and a bunch of brown curls in the case.

"I can keep them a while longer, Miss Garrick. Just to-day a woman wanted the curls, but I told her the time was not up. If—if you could pay the interest."

He watched the girl's face as she gazed steadily at her treasures. She slowly raised her eyes; they were glistening with tears.

"It's no use, Mr. Oldfield. I can't do it. Mother will know I tried to keep them, but couldn't.

"Anything I can do for you, Miss Garrick?"

"Well—yes. I don't suppose you ever loan money on people do you?"

The broker was surprised and puzzled.

"It is this," she went on. "I must have money to keep father from being turned into the street. I can't make enough by playing to pay up the back rent, and—I thought I could pawn myself!"

"Why, yes, I could loan money on you, though I have never done it before. How much do you need?"

"Twelve dollars. Oh, Mr. Oldfield, I will play on the streets night and day to pay the interest and redeem myself."

"Take your time about it, Miss Garrick. I am not in any hurry," he said, making out the ticket and handing it to her.

It was midnight when he locked the shop and put out the lights, after first taking a bracelet and a bunch of curls from the case, and laying them carefully in a box.

Sal Garrick grasped the money in one hand and her violin and bundle in the other, as she almost ran along the streets. Going home, she slipped the packet through the partly opened window and heard it fall on the floor, then went on.

She had walked a long distance when she entered a lodging house and paid the price of a bed. The adjoining room was well filled with cots, and Sal Garrick looked cautiously about at the sleepers before taking a paper from her pocket. It was a pawn ticket. By the light of the candle she read:

"MINE—BY CONSENT AND RIGHT OF LAW."

"International Loan Office,
"No. 205. Nov. 12, '93.

"Received the following goods, the person of Sal Garrick, who will be subject to conditions herein contained as security for twelve dollars ($12).

"To be paid in one month from this date with 10 per cent per month addition for interest, and in default of payment thereof, the undersigned is authorized to sell the same at any public auction.

"PAUL OLDFIELD, 6 Penn Street."

"No. 205," she murmured. "Always the odd number. All my life I have been the odd one. The world didn't want me and has no place for me."

* * * * * * *

It was Christmas night. Paul Oldfield sat by his fire, idly watching the bright coals and thinking, thinking, always thinking. He was thinking of the wistful, earnest face of Sal Garrick, of the poverty and unhappiness crowded into that young life. He was thinking of his own life; solitary, lonely, almost melancholy in the monotony of its days.

Just then the bell tinkled. He went into the shop and found Sal Garrick gazing intently into the case.

"You have sold them, then?" Her voice trembled in spite of her effort to hide her disappointment.

"Miss Garrick, I couldn't——"

"Mr. Oldfield," she interrupted, "the loan is due—overdue. I have sent the little I could pick up to father, and there is none left for interest. Take this—take it!" she demanded, shoving the violin on the counter. "I won't need it any more."

The broker started as he saw the expression in her eyes—wild, desperate, determined. He took the girl's hand and drew her toward him.

"The loan is up," he said slowly. "In default of payment thereof, the broker is authorized to take into his possession that which is deposited, to protect and love as he has never loved in all his empty, lonely life. Sal, will you marry me?"

She thrust the pawn ticket in his hand.

"It's the odd number that's not redeemed—take it," she said, wearily, and Paul Oldfield kissed the beautiful upturned face and held her in his arms, saying, "Mine—my own—by consent and right of law."

INDISCREET LETTERS.

Never Safe to Pen Matters Which You Want to Keep Secret.

Harriet Martineau, who was very deaf, always shifted her ear trumpet when any one asked her a question she did not wish to answer. The late Cyrus W. Field apparently did not hear a question that it would be indiscreet to answer. He had another good habit. Letters that if seen would cause others pain or might be misunderstood he destroyed as soon as he had read them. The following true story proves the wisdom of Mr. Field's practice:

A distinguished educator had, with considerable difficulty, persuaded a millionaire to found a college. The educator was to have been its president, but unfortunately he neglected Aaron Burr's advice: "Talk as much as you please, but don't write a word."

The founder, an uneducated man, was full of crotchets which, if expressed in the deed establishing the college, would have greatly interfered with its educational work. The educator, irritated by the labor it required to eliminate these whims from the founder's mind, one day wrote a complaining letter to a clerical friend, in which he narrated his trials, and ended by saying of the rich man, "—— is an ass."

The clergyman, a careless, absent-minded man, put the letter into his hat, and called at the office of a law firm to transact business with one of the partners.

While in the private office he left his hat outside, and one of the lawyers, seeing the letter, and knowing the handwriting of the address, read it. Of course he was not a gentleman, and was without moral principle; and his subsequent conduct showed him a mischief maker.

He retailed the contents of the letter to a nephew of the founder, who was bitterly opposed to his uncle's proposed disposition of his property. He reported it to the uncle.

The college was founded; but the educator was never its president. He died a broken-hearted man, through the carelessness of his clerical friend and the meanness of a legal Paul Pry.

SONG OF THE LIONESS.

The Lullaby She Has to Calm Her Noisy Little Cubs.

Fanny Locke Mackenzie has a Russian story, "The Little Duchess and the Lion Tamer," in St. Nicholas. Here is the tamer's account of one of his pets:

"The lioness is Puska," he said, "Leo's wife; and she is a great scold. She growls and worries at Leo all the time. Sometimes she even slaps him with her paw, and snarls at him; but to the baby lions Puska is very gentle and kind. She sings to them softly, and licks their smooth little heads with her warm tongue, and they snuggle up to her and listen, until they fall fast asleep. She always sings the same lullaby song."

He closed his eyes and dropped his head lower over his hand.

PUSKA'S SONG.

When Kiva, the big snake, swallows the sun,
Then, O my cubkin, the long day is done.
Yellow and burning, so the day dies,
Drowsy lids, drowsy lids, close over eyes.
Sleep, sleep, while mother purrs,
Sleep, sleep, cubkin of hers.
Lie low, cuddle and rest,
Sleep, now, mother knows best.

"That is Puska's song," he said.

"Sing it again," begged little Duchess, her eyelids dropping down over her brown eyes, and Ivan sang:

Hear my heart beat for you, small whelp of mine,
All the love in it surely is thine;
Hear Nana, the night-hawk, call as he flies,
Drowsy lids, drowsy lids, close over eyes.
Sleep, sleep, etc.

"Once more, please," she said dreamily; her head rested against the white bearskin, and her dark lashes touched her cheek. Half under his breath, softly, sleepily he murmured it:

When the night falls, come the stars one by one;
Fire-flies flit, and the little mice run.
As Bursa, the beetle, passes, he cries,
Drowsy lids, drowsy lids, close over eyes.
Sleep, sleep, etc.

Dreadful Duel Between Animals.

There was a terrible battle to the death between a stallion and a bull on the stock farm of Richard Jordan, eight miles north of Kokomo, Saturday. It lasted forty-five minutes. The bull charged again and again on the stallion, repeatedly thrusting his horns through the ribs of the horse the full length. The stallion kicked, struck and bit with all the force at his command, tearing the tough hide from the bull's neck and back and breaking nearly every bone in his body. The bull, thoroughly exhausted, lay down and died. Fifteen minutes later the stallion died. The two animals were valued at $1,500.—Indianapolis News.

"This car," said the surly passenger, "reminds me of an organ. It has so many stops." "Reminds me just now of a street organ," retorted the tired conductor, "it goes with a crank."—Philadelphia Record.

AS TO HATS.

Slouched Hats Caused a Riot In Spain Which Cost Many Lives.

Has not some one calculated that a sixth part of the memoirs of St. Simon in the original is occupied with the controversy whether or not the president of parliament should wear his hat or put it on the desk when performing various functions? At length the matter was compromised. The Tiers-etat should wear a chapeau rabattu, which had the slouched brim pinned up. This childish quarrel was remembered, no doubt, when the states general met and the king harangued them. His speech over, he put on his hat, and the noblesse did likewise, according to their privilege. The commons had no such claim, but they also clapped on their chapeaux rabattus, amid fierce protests from the nobles. The revolution might have begun that day with a scrimmage in the king's presence had he not removed his own hat, when all, of course, did the same.

But slouched hats had already caused a riot in Spain, which lasted so long and cost so many lives that it might almost be termed a civil war. This was 20 years earlier. Charles III thought them untidy. He thought the streets of his capital untidy also and denounced both eyesores in an edict. Every Spaniard henceforth must pin up his flopping brim, and every householder of Madrid must clean the street opposite his premises. Forthwith the people rose. They were little interested, comparatively, in the street cleaning, but they would die for their hats. And a good many of them did, but not unavenged. More than a week the fray lasted, but it was thought remarkable by foreign observers that at 2 p. m. regularly the soldiers plied arms, the furious citizens withdrew and silence reigned for one hour. Both parties were enjoying the siesta, except, perhaps, the wounded. After that interval they recommenced. The king fled, and for the rest of his life he never returned to Madrid willingly. In fact, it was understood he designed to make Seville the capital henceforth, and only gave up the project when his ministers showed him what a vast sum he had already spent on the new palace. So, mighty may be the influence of the hat in state affairs! Finally the king compromised. He withdrew his edict so far as the realm at large was concerned. Within the walls of Madrid every man must wear his brim pinned up, but outside he was at liberty to let it slouch. But the police courts did not cease to be busy until the fashion changed.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treament. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

BUTTERFLIES.

Out in the churchyard the grass grew deep,
Where the peaceful dead were lying;
Over their quiet and holy sleep
The butterflies white were flying.
And one little child was playing there
In the churchyard, sunny and still;
He'd wandered away, in his innocent play,
From the litle white house on the hill.
"Butterflies, butterflies!" cried the child,
As he played on the grassy sod,
"You're the souls of the little dead children here Fluttering up to God."

Out in the churchyard a place new-made,
Waits for the innocent dead;
Still, for the dear little sleeper, there
Waited his quiet bed.
And a long farewell they say over him,
With kisses on lip and brow;
And, with flowers sweet at head and feet,
He goes from his mother now.
Butterflies flutter above her head,
As she kneels on the grassy sod,
And the little white soul of her precious one
Flutters away to God.
—Ladies' Home Journal.

UNDER FALSE COLORS

Under the ice of Cape Gris Nez two vessels were hove to within fifty yards of each other. Boats were coming and going between them, and on the quarter deck of the larger vessel seven dejected-looking English sailors were drawn up under a guard of marines.

From the maintops of both flaunted the tricolor of France, with this ominous difference: that on the smaller vessel it surmounted the union jack of England.

The brigantine Firefly was in the hands of the French. The lumbering old coaster, bound from London to Chichester harbor, with a genral cargo, had been blown off her course by contrary winds to the wrong side of the channel; the forty-two gun frigate Alceste had pounced upon her, and now her skipper, Jacob Dempster, was ruefully giving an account of himself on the frigate's quarter deck.

"Ha! say you that?" exclaimed the French captain, who spoke English well. "Your ship is of Bosham, in the harbor of Chichester? Know you the manor house at Bosham, owned, but not inhabited, by one Squire Bullard?"

"I do—seeing as I live within 100 yards of it," replied the rugged old mariner, sullenly.

"Certain French officers are residing there? Prisoners of war on parole?"

"They were, when I left for London, three weeks back."

Captain Fournier of the Alceste turned and addressed himself with much gesticulation and excitement to a group of his officers, who stood a few paces in the rear. The captured skipper fell back and spoke with his companions in misfortune.

"There's something in the wind, lads; the Mounseer captain has been making kind inquiries about the prisoners at the manor house," he growled.

Captain Fournier, having finished his consultation, again came forward.

"M. Dempster," he said, "my brother, the Lieutenant Camille Fournier, is one of the prisoners living at the manor house of Bosham. He cannot attempt to escape himself because of his parole, but that makes no reason why I should not release him by force. I propose to put a hundred of my men in the Firefly, which as a ship of Bosham will not be suspected till too late for prevention, and run in and effect my purpose."

Jacob Dempster laughed sourly. "I'd like to see you try it," he replied. "Don't you know that Bosham lies six miles from the sea? You'd be stuck on a mud bank before you'd done a mile of the creek."

"It is you who will pilot us, my friend—in return for your liberty," he said. "My men will remain below for concealment, while you and your crew work the vessel, as though in due course returning home."

"What—me steer a pack of Frenchmen up Bosham creek to the doors of my native village! I'll see you in Davy Jones' locker first!"

A murmur of approval came from the prisoners behind him, but Fournier, a cynical, cruel-looking man, merely smiled. "I have so far omitted to state the alternative," he said. "If neither you nor any member of your crew will steer the brigantine up the creek I will hang you all at the yard arm within five minutes."

There was a moment's dead silence, and the old skipper turned and faced his crew.

"What say you, my lads?" he asked quietly. "I'm for hanging."

A lip or two among the married men twitched as they thought of wives and little ones, but the answer was unmistakable, "We're with you, Jacob."

Not quite, however, as it proved. One voice among the Firefly's company was silent, and all eyes turned on the tall, blue-eyed young fellow in the center of the line in amazement. Was Greg Applegarth, of all men, going to turn traitor?

The French captain, whose quick eye had already singled him out as a dissentient, put the question point blank:

"You, there, are not so foolish as these others—you will steer the brigantine to Bosham?"

Avoiding the withering glance shot at him by old Jacob, the young man raised his head for a second and answered:

"Yes, I'll pilot her up the creek—if so be as you'll spare my mates' lives as well as mine."

"Yes, certainly—unless they attempt to thwart me," said Fournier, contemptuously. "Mind this, though," he thundered, changing to sudden fury. "If by the act of any one of you my plan fails I will not only hang you all, but I will burn every house in the village. It is a secluded spot, far from garrisons, I see by the map, and many things would happen before help could arrive."

Having selected 100 of his best men, under a proper complement of officers, Captain Fournier sent them aboard the Firefly, and followed with Greg, for he meant to lead the enterprise in person, leaving the Alceste in charge of his first lieutenant.

As soon as the transfer was complete and a rendezvous appointed with the frigate the French flag was hauled down on the Firefly and she stood across for the English coast. Greg Applegarth was permitted to remain on deck, but Jacob Dempster and the rest of his crew were thrust into the hold, where they passed their time in cursing their comrade's treachery.

That the traitor should be Greg Applegarth was the most astonishing fact of all—especially to old Jacob, who was aware of certain tender passages between the smart young sailor and his own wayward daughter Peggy.

The prisoners of war were permitted by the Government to rent the manor house and live there as they pleased, provided they kept to the stipulations of their parole, which demanded that they should make no attempt to escape or go farther than two miles from their dwelling.

Camille Fournier, the brother of the captain of the Alceste, had early contrived to scrape an acquaintance with Peggy Dempster, and the vivacious village beauty had been flattered into allowing a warmer flirtation than she had perhaps intended.

Peggy was leaning over her father's garden gate one evening, saying good-night to the French officer, who was too much engrossed to notice that Greg Applegarth was coming up the road.

"Would that my captivity could endure forever," Camille said. "How shall I ever tear myself from your sweet presence, Mistress Peggy, when I return to France?"

"There is a way out of that difficulty; you might ask me to come, too," replied the thoughtless girl.

"I will bear that in mind," said Camille, not suspecting, in his vanity, that the words were meant for other ears than his.

Greg Applegarth had referred to this incident only the day before the capture of the Firefly, and had expressed a bitter hatred of all Frenchmen in general and of Lieutenant Camille Fournier in particular.

And now here he was, to Jacob's amazment, assisting not only the nation, but the individual, to defy his own country and to land an armed force on her shores.

Questioned by Captain Fournier as to his reasons for not following their example, he replied with a grin that he was not so fond of his country as to want to die for her when there was a plain way out.

The Firefly was captured on a Saturday, and it was not till dawn was breaking on Sunday that Greg was called on to act as pilot, when the brigantine was rounding Selsea Bill. As the vessel was now in the fair way for Portsmouth and British cruisers swarmed like wasps about the entrance of their nest, the French seamen lay concealed below, except half a dozen dressed in garments taken from the English sailors' stock. Captain Fournier, pistol in hand, stood close to Greg, alert for the first sign of treachery.

Before running for Hayling Island to make the entrance of the creek he found it necessary to execute several maneuvers which took a good deal of time, explaining the necessity of them by the numerous shallows he had to avoid.

When at length he put the helm up and stood boldly into the creek on the half flood the wind swerved from behind, but presently a sharp bend in the narrow passage made the sails useless and the boats were ordered out to tow.

The brigantine emerged from the narrow gut of the winding creek into the broader waters at the village just as the bells of Bosham church ceased ringing for morning service.

The French captain was burning with suppressed excitement.

"Where is the manor house where my brother lives?" he asked, as Greg gave the wheel a turn and brought the Firefly round.

"There, yonder—back of the church," was the reply. "I've fetched you up right opposite to it—as near as I dare go. You'd best anchor here."

The French captain gave the necessary orders, and at once set about making his dispositions for landing his entire force, except a sufficient guard for the prisoners.

Though the landing entailed several journeys in the Firefly's boats, it was rapidly effected, and with Fournier at its head the party started for the manor house under Greg's guidance.

Only a hundred yards of marshy pasture land lay between the creek and the moat, but the young sailor lad led the Frenchmen a long slant up the meadows and back again before finally approaching their goal. The captain looked at him once or twice suspiciously.

"You don't want your men stuck in the mud," said Greg, and he pointed convincingly to a quagmire they were passing.

After half an hour's wandering to and fro in the meadows he led the party up to the bridge over the moat, and they entered the grounds of the manor house from the rear. As they filed round to the front, a group of men who were sitting under a tree on the lawn started on seeing the familiar uniform. A minute later Captain Fournier had embraced his brother and explained the situation.

The prisoners of war were in an ecstasy of delight at the prospect of, as one of them facetiously put it, being "brutally dragged from their parole," but on the captain proposing an immediate return to the boats, Camille waved his hand gayly in deprecation.

"Wait a brief time, my brother," he laughed. "The little god Cupid demands it, and we are quite safe from opposition here. There are not twenty able-bodied Britons in the place. Most of them are in church, and they are all unarmed."

"Ah, ah! you have been amusing yourself," said the captain. "Well, hasten and say your adieus to the fair one, for I am anxious to be gone."

"It is not a matter of farewell, nothing so dismal," replied the younger brother, complacently twirling his mustache. "The fair one is ready to accompany me whenever I take my departure, but unfortunately she is in church, and likely to remain there for another hour. I have heard that the priest of Bosham is a cleric of long wind."

"Write the lady a note, asking her on some excuse to leave the church," he said. "I have with me an English sailor who shall deliver it."

Camille scribbled a few lines on a leaf in his pocket book, folded it and handed it to his brother, who called Greg to him.

"You know this lady by sight?" he asked, pointing to the superscription.

The young sailor's face was as steady as a rock as he answered in the affirmative.

"Take it to her in the church, then, and return yourself immediately. If you do not return I will march my men to the church and fire upon the people," said Fournier.

Greg disappeared in the shrubbery which adjoined the churchyard.

Pushing open the door, he removed his cap and tiptoed reverently up the aisle toward the chancel, where Peggy Dempster was seated with the choir.

But without approaching the choir Greg ran quickly up the pulpit steps. Mr. Gillyflower turned upon him angrily, but on hearing the words which were rapidly whispered in his ear the vicar looked first startled, then shrewdly intelligent. His communication finished, Greg left the church as quickly as he had entered, with Camille Fournier's note still in his pocket, and without once looking at Peggy.

On the manor house lawn, where the French seamen made a picturesque group under the trees, Greg's return was hailed with acclamation by the officers—by the two Fourniers especially.

"What did she do when you gave her the note?" asked Camille eagerly.

"She just did nothing," was the unconcerned reply.

"You see, my dear Camille, she has changd her mind," said the captain. "Come, let us be off out of this."

"What matter so long as I gain my purpose?" retorted the lieutenant brutally. "No, take the others and sail away if you please. As for me, nothing will move me unless I can take the fair Mlle. Dempster."

Captain Fournier bit his lip, but gave in. At most it only meant waiting until the close of the service, which could not now be long deferred, and in the seclusion of the manor house grounds the presence of the landing party would,, in the meanwhile, remain undetected.

But when the minutes grew into an hour and a half, yet no signal was given by the man posted in the shrubbery to watch the church door, the captain began to fume and stamp with rage.

He finally threatened to turn the pretense of a forced abduction into a reality and carry Camille on board the Firefly whether or no.

"If you do that," said the lieutenant, "my first act on reaching France will be to demand of you satisfaction."

At last the elder Fournier's patience was exhausted.

"Fall in, men," he said to his crew. "We will put the cloture on this loquacious priest, and take the girl from under his nose. Perhaps that will satisfy you, ingrate?" turning to Camille.

"Excellently well," replied the lieutenant, and with the jaunty quickstep of France the column tramped into the shady churchyard, where the sonorous tones of Mr. Gillyflower were plainly audible.

"Peste upon the fellow," muttered the captain, telling off twenty men to accompany him and his brother into the church.

Greg, who had followed closely at his elbow, plucking him by the sleeve, said, quietly:

"It will be a long time before you see France again, captain. See there!" And, leading him to the churchyard wall, he pointed mockingly at the Firefly. The brigantine lay high and dry on the mud at her anchorage, and would not float again for ten hours at least.

For a moment the brave lad's life trembled in the balance. Then, with a bitter oath, the captain put up his pistol he had drawn.

"If you do the folk no harm you'll be made comfortable, I expect," said Greg, with a grin, for he had foreseen that, with retreat cut off, Fournier would dare no excesses. "You see, I remember how the tide would serve to-day and I timed so as to run you in at church time. I knew Peggy would be there with the choir, and that that spark would never move without trying to take her along. I allowed that by when the people came out the vessel would be hard and fast, but it was you who gave me the chance to tip the parson and hint to let 'em have an extra dose and send word to the volunteers from Chichester. Till you gave me that note I was getting anxious lest the brigantine find enough water after all. Parson must be about winded by now, but there are the drums of the volunteers. There's 400 of them, so you won't be disgraced by receiving 'em civilly."

So, after all, that was the kind of traitor Greg was. His chief reward lay in the removal of all the French prisoners—new as well as old—to safer quarters, as he had hoped from the first.

And Peggy said: "It would have been nicer of you to have given me that note, silly. You were never that foolish as to think I would have gone with him."

made in order to keep pace with changing conditions of the agriculture of the State. Many sections that were but a few years ago grain-producing are now becoming dairy centers. In 1888 there were less than six creameries in the State, but now there are eighty in operation. The work at present of the station will be to illustrate the best methods of work with the average conditions as they exist in the State. Illustrations how to go about selecting and rearing a profitable butter herd will be a prominent feature—a herd that will produce 300 pounds or over per cow, instead of the present low State average of 100 pounds per cow. It will also be the aim of the station in its every day work, and by means of accounts, to show how it is possible to carry a cow per acre instead of using four or five acres as is usually done. The more technical work will be with feeds and improved methods of handling and care of products. The dairy barn is fitted up with a number of kinds of stanchions, Newton cow ties, Bidwell stalls and the old-fashioned mangers, and many conveniences for preparing and handling feeds.—American Agriculturist.

A Homemade Windmill.

A windmill such as is portrayed below can be made by any ingenious farmer at a trifling expense. For an upright to place the windmill on, I use 6 by 6 inch elm scantling. Cut a 2-inch strip four feet long from the center and run it down on the cribbing of the well. Two bolts, a, a, were riveted through upright to cribbing. Two braces, b, of 2 by 4 inch scantling make the upright secure. To upper end of upright is bolted a piece of old pump piping about two feet long for the sucker rod c c to work through, as well as for the windmill to turn and face the wind. The crosspiece upon which the windmill works, d, contains a hole just large enough to allow it to turn easily on this pipe. The shaft from the windmill to pitman passes close at one side of this pipe. The tail or vane is put on the opposite side of the crosspiece to the fan and balances it. To prevent the main vane from holding the fan too straight to the wind in a storm, I placed a smaller vane, e, at the side. Strong winds press against the smaller vane, turning the fan out enough to prevent breaking. The crosspiece is 6 by 6 inches. At about one-third of the distance from the pipe to pitman is placed a standard, g, for a lever, f, to work on. These parts were made by a blacksmith. My windmill has been in operation over a year, and since placing the smaller vane, e, on the side, I have had no trouble with it; before then, a storm would break the leaves.—R. M. B., in Farm and Home.

Good Advice.

The habit of calling attention to defects about homes, by apologizing for them, is a bad one, and one that no self-respecting woman should follow. The following advice given to a young married woman who was visited by another older and more experienced one may be helpful to some of our readers. When the visitor rose to go the hostess came with her to the door, and out upon the piazza, which, however, looked a little dusty in the corners. "Oh, dear!" said the young wife, "how provoking the servants are! I told Mary to sweep the piazza thoroughly, and now look how dusty it is." "Grace," said the older woman, looking into the disturbed young face with kindly, humorous eyes, "I am an old housekeeper. Let me give you a bit of advice: Never direct people's attention to defects. Unless you do so they will rarely see them. Now, if I had been in your place and noticed the dirt, I should have said, 'How blue the sky is!' or 'How beautiful the clouds are!' or 'How bracing the air is!' Then I should have looked up at that as I spoke, and should have gotten you down the steps, and out of sight without your seeing the dust!" There is a good lesson here for many of us.

Benefits of Early Fall Plowing.

In all our experience we have never seen any but the best results from early fall plowing, while on the other hand we have often seen the ill effects of late plowing on the next crop. At one time we began the plowing of a field containing eighty acres while still engaged in stacking, the wet weather having interfered with the latter work, says a writer in the "Homestead." Plowing was continued at odd times till late in the fall, and the following year the entire field was planted in corn. During the summer the growing corn told unerringly of the difference in time of plowing, the crop being the best on the early plowed ground and the poorest on the late plowed. With our experience in plowing stubble ground for a crop of corn we would much prefer spring plowing to that of the late fall, the only thing to be said in favor of the latter being that work is not usually so pressing in the fall as in the spring, but early fall plowing is far better than either, whether for corn or small grain, and if the surface of the soil does become packed all the better for the crop. It will show its appreciation as soon as it secures a foothold.

Poultry Pointers.

When hens lay thin-shelled eggs they are in need of lime.

The roosts should be low, especially for large, heavy fowls.

Build the house ten by ten feet for ten fowls, and the yard ten times larger.

Ducklings are marketed at five pounds weight, which they attain in ten weeks.

Placing an old cock bird in a run of cockerels will prevent the latter from fighting.

Ten dozen eggs a year is the average estimate given as the production of the hen.

Thirteen eggs are considered a setting, though many breeders are now giving fifteen.

Better for the wife to earn her pin money with poultry than to take in washing or sewing.

In shipping live poultry it is poor economy to ship the best with the poorest. Grade them.

Don't forget to clean out the nests and put in new litter, for the lice are still with us. Better strew a handful of insect powder in the nest to help drive the enemy out.

Attention to poultry pays on the farm, and during these times, when country produce is selling at such low prices, there is no product on the farm that brings cash so readily as poultry and eggs.

Aim for the Top.

As long as the highest prices are paid for the best, the most enterprising farmers will spare neither pains nor expense to produce the best, and if their neighbors do not exert themselves to keep up, they soon will find themselves in the background. Our farmers must keep abreast of the times. They must think; they must read; they must study; they must experiment; they must exert their minds to the fullest extent to drag out from mother earth her secrets of fertility. Let them do it and she will reward them with fertile fields and good crops in abundance, and they will enjoy the richest blessings of the most satisfying and noblest occupation on earth. The wide-awake farmer who has studied up agriculture can always live as good as any other professional man, very often much better. For pure and fresh fruits, vegetables, butter, eggs and meat there is no one to compete with the farmer.—Practical Farmer.

Teach Boys How to Farm.

To make farm life a success and desirable, the farmer must teach his boys and girls that there is no other profession within the bounds of civilization as independent, honorable and ennobling as life on the farm. This growing practice of sending our boys to school to be educated for some other profession is making all our farm boys anxious to leave the old homestead and crowd into the cities; where every profession is overdone, and trickery the only door left open to the educated boy. It is not enough to teach boys how to farm; the foundation of success is in teaching them contentment on the farm.

Horticultural Hints.

Cut out the raspberry canes that have borne fruit this year.

So long as the pear pulls hard in taking off, it is not thoroughly ripe.

Cuttings of currant or gooseberry plants may be made this month.

Judge Emery, of Kansas, says "irrigation will double the life and product of any orchard."

Market gardening is a profitable business if the market is near. But it is a laborious business.

Celery should not be banked up, until within five or six weeks of the time when it is wanted for use.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

There Should Be More General Consideration for Others—The Simplest of Lives Give Opportunity for Noble Christianity.

Other People's Convenience.

WE ought to think of other people's convenience more than we generally do. The home is the place where this thoughtfulness should begin to be cultivated. One who comes late to breakfast admits that he is guilty of an amicable self-indulgence, but forgets that he has marred the harmonious flow of the household life and caused confusion and extra work. How often an important committee is kept waiting ten minutes for one tardy member, who comes sauntering in at last, without even an apology for causing perhaps fifteen men a loss of time that to them was very valuable, besides having put a sore strain on their patience and good nature. Every-day life is full of just such thoughtlessness, which causes untold personal inconvenience, and oftimes hurts the hearts of friends.

High and Worthy Ends.

These high and precious and holy gifts of God should be used for an end correspondingly high and worthy and holy. Such a high and worthy end is not difficult to find or to realize. It is not necessary to go out of our way in quest of something remarkable, unfamiliar or extravagant. This high and worthy end is secured in the lives of thousands of men and women who are engaged in the plainest and most ordinary routine of duties, duties of the home, duties of the farm, duties of the workshops or duties of the school room. The only indispensable condition for attaining to such an end is that of having a spirit of genuine love to God and love to man, a spirit of consecration, obedience and unselfish service, in one word, the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Such a spirit when properly possessed and applied will certainly elevate our lives to that which is truly high and direct them to that which is noble and worthy. And the end, the result of such a life will be the manifestation and enjoyment of the glory of God, the establishment of His kingdom, the triumph of the true and right and good, and the salvation and spiritual welfare of souls.

A Song of Gratitude.

A yellow breasted bird sits
Upon a swaying stalk,
And feeds upon rough burrs and seeds
Which daintier hunger mock.

He sings a ditty while he eats—
Song beautiful and low—
It makes the blood in this dull heart
Course faster in its flow.

It seems like a thanksgiving psalm
Chanted o'er scanty fare
By this wee, wondrous bird of God
Reverent as a prayer.

While all the time the summer rain
Beats on his dauntless breast,
But naught cares he, the rover free,
Who counts all for the best.

Then hush, my soul, thy dark complaint
O'er life's repeated ills;
Give thanks for mercies few and faint,
All is as heaven wills.
—Ram's Horn.

Gentleness.

Gentleness is love in society. It is love holding intercourse with those around it. It is that cordiality of aspect and that soul of speech which assures that kind and earnest hearts may still be met with here below. It is that quiet influence which, like the scented flame of an alabaster lamp, fills many a home with light and warmth and fragrance altogether. It is the carpet, soft and deep, which, while it diffuses a look of ample comfort, deadens many a creaking sound. It is the curtain which, from many a beloved form, wards off at once the summer's glow and the winter's wind. It is the pillow on which sickness lays its head and forgets half its misery, and to which death comes in a balmier dream. It is considerateness. It is tenderness of feeling. It is warmth of affection. It is promptitude of sympathy. It is love in all its depths and all its delicacy. It is everything included in that matchless grace, the gentleness of Christ.

Through Sheer Worldliness.

Some there are who are led astray by plunging too deeply into the sciences of the day without a proper philosophic training, but there are others who have suffered shipwreck of faith through sheer woldliness, mere dilettanteism, a vain desire to appear learned, although their only reason for infidelity is what George Eliot calls the "private right of laziness." To guard against this danger, let our young men, with or without mental culture, observe the practical duties of religion, choose well their friends and their books, trifle not with specious theories and glittering generalities; let not the loud, fatal cry for independence of thought and action tear them from the arms of their god.—Father McGinnis.

No Fear.

Years ago a train was rushing along on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at great speed. The passengers were anxious, because it was in the time of the war, and they were afraid that the enemy might tear up the tracks, or some other accident happen.

A bright little girl came towards a passenger and said, "Good morning," in a clear, sweet voice.

The gentleman asked her if she was not afraid to ride on the cars.

She said: "Sometimes, but I am not afraid this time."

"Why are you not afraid this time? Everybody else seems to be afraid. Besides we are running very rapidly."

"Oh, there is no danger at all, papa is running the engine."

Her father was the engineer, and she had such confidence in his ability to protect her that she felt perfectly secure and happy. When we have God to guide us, we have nothing to fear, for He is much better able to protect us than the engineer on the train was to take care of his little daughter.

A Traveling Philosopher.

There is a happy itinerant Methodist preacher in Georgia who takes the world as he finds it, and never complains of anything. Meeting a friend the other day the latter accosted him as follows:

"Well, Brother Brown, how's the world using you?"

"First class, sir, first class!"

"Nothing to complain of, eh?"

"Nothing at all, sir—nothing at all! The festival for the benefit of the new organ came out only $30 in debt; the fair for the new lightning rod was $20 behind and the watermelon party for the new bell was $10 short, but the parsonage didn't burn down until six weeks after the pound party—praise the Lord!"

The Master's Touch.

In the still air the music lies unheard;
In the rough marble beauty hides unseen;
To make the music and the beauty needs
The Master's touch, the sculptor's chisel keen.
Great Master, touch us with thy skillful hand;
Let not the music that is in us die!
Great Sculptor, hew and polish us; nor let,
Hidden and lost, thy form within us lie!
Spare not the stroke! Do with us as thou wilt!
Let there be naught unfinished, broken, marred;
Complete thy purpose, that we may become
Thy perfect image, thou our God and Lord!
—Bonar.

Living at Our Best.

Do not try to do a great thing; you may waste all your life looking for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive, for the glory of God, to win His smile of approval, and to do good for men. It is harder to plod on in obscurity, acting thus, than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and to do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and the ultimate recompense of Christ.

The Severest Test.

The severest test of manhood is never found in good times, but only in hard times. It is not the man who has success when others are doing well, but it is the man who keeps up his courage and struggles on when everybody else is wavering or going down who is the hero in the sight of God and men. It is an easy matter to make good time when both wind and tide are in one's favor, or when one is moving with the current; but it requires a character and skill and daring to make head in spite of opposing forces or to work successfully against the current.

Sin.

The Arabs have a fable that a camel once came to the door of a tent and thrust in its nose. Not being resisted, he thrust in his feet, and there being no hindrance he came half way in. After a while he came all the way in.

The Arab said to the camel: "This tent is too small for two."

"Then," said the camel, "you had better leave."

So sin comes into the heart of man farther and farther if it is not resisted, until it takes full possession.

Church and Clergy.

Archbishop Machray of Rupert's Land, Canada, and Primate of the Anglican Church, in Canada, is said to be the tallest bishop in the world.

The Missionary Baptist Church Association of Southern and Western Kentucky at Danville passed resolutions condemnatory of Dr. Whitsett of Louisville, declaring that he "was guilty of heresy in stating and believing that for some years immersion was a lost art in England."

Dr. Hayes C. French, a San Francisco physician, who has recently become an evangelist, has adopted a unique costume for the pulpit. "All my preaching," he says, "is done in knickerbockers and sweater. This is the uniform of the Young Men's Christian Association Cycling Club. The triangle on the breast and cap mean spirit, body and mind, the emblem of infinitude."

Preparations for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Rev. Dr. R. S. Storr's service as pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, go on. One of the pleasantest incidents in connection with this celebration, which will take place on Nov. 19, will be the presentation to him of a loving cup of solid silver, a gift from his ministerial brethren in the Manhattan Congregational Association.

The Most Rev. Sebastian Martinelli, Prior Provincial of the Order of Hermit Fathers of St. Augustine, who is now said to have been chosen as the successor of Cardinal Satolli, visited St. Augustinian Monastery at Villa Nova, Pa., in 1894. He is about five feet five inches in height, has dark eyes and dark hair, and intellectual countenance. He has a high reputation for learning, speaks English fluently, has been in close touch, with the Irish Augustinians in Rome, and is said to be fond of Americans. He lives in the Augustinian Convent of St. Monica, which is not far from St. Peter's in Rome.

HUMORS OF WHIST.

Remarks That Have Been Made Around the Table.

A good story is told of a lawyer in Chicago who considered himself a great authority on whist. He wrote a book on the subject, and sent it to a famous Milwaukee player for his opinion of it. In about a week the book was returned to him, with the following letter:

MY DEAR SIR—Your favor of the — inst., accompanied by your book, was duly received. I have read it very carefully. It seems to be a very good game, but I don't think it is as good a game as whist. Sincerely yours,

It is no unusual thing to hear a player at whist remark, after being berated by his partner for very bad playing, "Well, I play whist for pleasure." He does not stop to think that he gives his partner anything but "pleasure." Such players cause their partners many "un mauvais quart d'heure." It might be a great "pleasure" for a novice to play a duet on the piano with Paderewski. One can readily imagine how much "pleasure" Paderewski would find in the performance. If a man wants to play whist, he should study the books and familiarize himself with them before inflicting his play on a partner who knows anything of the game, or else devote his great mind to dominos.

It is related of one of there gentry that, after a hand at whist, his partner asked him, "Why in thunder didn't you trump that queen of clubs?" He naively replied, "Why, I only had one little trump." Sometimes, as in this case, the humor—unknown to the perpetrator—carries off the bad feeling engendered by his horrid mistakes and ignorance. It is so easy, if one would devote a little time and ordinary intelligence to the study of the game, to learn to play a fairly good game of whist.

Four players started a game of whist not long since, a noted wit being one of them. He was dealing and made a misdeal. He dropped his cards and burst into laughter. "That reminds me," said he, "of my dear old friend, Judge Peckham, father of the present judge. He was a great whist player of the 'old school' and had scant patience with a poor player. I was passing the cardroom one day and met one of the poorest players in the club coming out. 'Have you been playing whist?' I asked. 'Yes,' said he. 'Who was your partner?' 'Judge Peckham,' he replied. 'Did he pitch into you pretty strong?' 'No, indeed. He only made one remark. I was dealing and made a misdeal. The judge said, "Why, you fool, you don't even know how to deal!" This is the only remark he made during the entire game.' "—Washington Star.

A SAVAGE MARSUPIAL.

An Australian Mammal That Is a Whole Menagerie In Itself.

The so called zebra wolf of Australia is also called the native tiger; but, strange to say, it is not even a cousin to zebra, wolf or tiger, belonging to the same family as the kangaroo, the slow and gentle wombat and the sly old opossum—all those animals that carry their babies in their pockets.

The eyes, which are large, are furnished with a membrane, like the eyes of owls, and this is called the nictitating membrane. This is almost continually moving in the daytime, as the eyes are exposed to more or less of sunshine. Without this membrane the amount of light admitted through the large pupil would puzzle the zebra wolf.

The general color of the somewhat short woolly fur is grayish brown, a little inclined to yellowish. Across this ground color the black bands show up sharp and clear. These stripes are usually 14 in number, beginning just back of the shoulders, where they are narrowest, and growing broader and longer back of the haunches. The skins are in demand for lap robes and rugs, which gives an added reason for hunting the wearers.

Two zebra wolves were taken to the zoological gardens in London, where they flourished and raised a family. When they came, it was thought Great Britain would be too cold for them, but there seems to be no reason why they should not thrive even in Canada, as they have been known to live on the mountains of Tasmania, 3,500 feet above the sea level, where the ground is sometimes covered with snow for many weeks and frosts are severe.

Do you wonder that his name is slightly mixed? The marvel is that he is not named menagerie and done with it, for with his doglike face and short wolf ears, eyes like an owl, zebra stripes and a pouch like a kangaroo, his mixed pickle beastship could answer to almost any name you might wish to call him. When he becomes extinct, we can truly say we ne'er shall see his like again.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Nature's Noblemen.

Two self supporting gentlewomen were recently comparing their experiences of the past few years, and both declared that on the rare occasions when they had been treated uncivilly by persons of the other sex it had been by those who were known in the social world as gentlemen. George Meredith has made Diana of the Crossways to say:

"The English gentleman trades on his reputation. In a third class carriage no woman is unprotected."—London Sun.

At the Navy Yard.

"So this is the minie rifle?"

"Yes, mum."

"And that's the maxim gun?"

"Yes, mum. The minie-mum and the maxim-mum!"—New York Recorder.

The rosy fingered morn did there disclose her beauty, ruddy as a blushing bride, gilding the marigold, painting the rose, with Indian chrysolites her cheeks were dy'd.—Baron.

The poison dagger, an infamous weapon still in use among the aborgines of Brazil, is fashioned after the fang of a serpent.

Paper hangings, for use on walls, were introduced into Europe from the east in 1675.

Nothing can bring you peace but yourself. Nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles.—Emerson.

DIFFERENT FORMS OF SWORDS.

The Rapier, Cutlass, Saber, Yataghan, Scimiter and Claymore.

The rapier was in general use on the continent some years before it made its appearance in England, where, it must be said, it was received with scorn and ridicule, as being much too effeminate a weapon for any self respecting son of Mars to trifle with. The cavaliers of France, Spain and Italy, however, were adepts in the intricate science of sword play, and used it with a fatal subtlety. The cutlass, which we read about in Captain Marryatt's stirring tales, and in the thrilling stories of the exploits of pirates on the Spanish Main, was short and rather broad and flat in the blade, which had an exceedingly sharp double edge. The yataghan and scimiter bear the evidence of their oriental origin in their curved blades, and suggest the ancestry of the saber. The saber is the most important cutting implement of modern armies. It is distinguished from the sword proper by the single edged blade, which attains its greatest thickness at the back, and is grimly suggestive of the dire effects of a swinging cavalry charge. The schiavone—a notable sword of the Italian soldiery—carried a conspicuous guard, extending from the quillons to the pommel, formed of a lattice work of metal bands that resembled the plaiting of osiers in a basket. This basket hilted sword, as it was called, was so closely allied to the claymore of the Scotch Highlanders that they have frequently been mistaken one for the other.

The glorious epoch of the sword, however, was reached in the sixteenth century. Great manual skill and a thorough training in the arts were united in a marked degree in the artisans of this period, and gave to the products of the industrial arts a permanent value and beauty. In the shops of the metal workers this proficiency reached a rare excellence. War was the main occupation of kings, and civil and military pageants were the favorite pastime of royalty. The armorers, consequently, were in constant demand, and were untiring in their efforts to produce costly, brilliant arms and coats of mail.

Great artists devoted all the resources of their genius to the enrichment of the sword. No metal was too precious, no jewel too rare, no fancy too ingenious for its decoration. Hilts were incrusted with gems, set with medallions, carved, embossed, inlaid; scabbards of Spanish leather or Genoese velvet were wrought with gold and silver embroidery; blades of the finest steel were polished to a dazzling luster and engraved with inscriptions and arabesques. Every artifice that a fertile imagination could devise and cunning skill carry out was lavished upon the decoration of the beloved weapon.—Mary Stuart McKinney in St. Nicholas.

An All Night Scare.

Young Englishmen visiting the United States have as many absurd and amusing experiences as Americans have when in foreign countries. The Washington Star tells of an English traveler who had been assured that west of the Missouri river the entire country was infested with bears, some of which were so bold that they came into the towns.

He stopped in a Kansas village, and in the evening started out for a walk. The stores were closed, but the moon was shining brightly. He rambled about the place for a couple of hours, and started down the business street for the hotel. Suddenly he saw before him on the sidewalk a big bear, sitting on its haunches, with open mouth and paws extended, awaiting his coming.

In a moment he was on top of a porch, crying for help, but no one heard him, and the bear sat and watched him. All night long he staid there, trembling for fear bruin would climb the post, but comforting himself with the idea that it was too small to be used by a bear.

At daybreak some men came along, and one of them wheeled the bear back to the doorway with the remark, "I wonder who put that sign in the middle of the walk."

The tourist descended from the porch without detection, and had he not subsequently enjoyed the story so much that he told it himself it would never have been known.

Fog Horns.

In a communication to the French Academy of Sciences an explanation is given of some of the hitherto unaccountable phenomena pertaining to gor horns. It has been found in regard to acoustic signals, or sirens, that they are surrounded by a neutral zone in which the sound is not heard at the sea level—a zone more or less distant, according to the height of the siren on the coast—and it has a mean width of about 8,400 feet. On the nearer side of this zone the sound is of course heard perfectly, but when it is traversed the sound weakens gradually until it becomes scarcely perceptible, when it increases again, and, on the zone being left behind, the sound resumes its full intensity. Experiments have been made on this line with a steam vessel, by causing it to approach or recede from a lightship in different directions and in a straight line. In each course, according to the account published, the sound was deadened almost completely in a zone whose central line was about 15,000 feet from the siren.

Sound and Electricity.

A curious circumstance illustrating the difference in speed between sound, which travels through the air, and electricity, through wire as its guide and conductor, occurred in California. A certain powder works blew up in a town while a railway telegraph operator was telegraphing to another in a neighboring town. At the instant of the occurrence he telegraphed the news to the operator, who, 60 seconds afterward, heard the report of the explosion. He knew it had occurred by wire just one minute before he heard the report. Sound travels at about the rate of 1,140 feet per second, while electricity accomplished 186,000 miles in the same short period of time.

Thought of It Herself.

A friend of the Saunterer has a decidedly original little daughter. One day the teacher discovered her in hand to hand combat with a child of her own age.

"Don't you know you are doing very wrong?" said the teacher rebukingly, "and that such evil actions are caused by the promptings of the devil?"

"Well," was her answer, "maybe the devil did tell me to pull her hair, but I thought of spitting in her face all myself."—Boston Budget.

Application for Patent.

M A No. 303.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE. INDEPENDENCE, CALIFORNIA. October 19, 1896.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT P. REDDY, whose Post Office address is Crocker Building, Room 116, San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for 150 linear feet of the Driver vein lode or deposit, bearing gold and silver and other valuable metals together with the surface ground 600 feet in width, situated in Coso mining district, County of Inyo, State of California, and being designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot 44, T 19 S, R 40 E, M D M; said Lot No. 4 being described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at old notice monument which is a large mound of limestone and marble rocks on top of spur bears N 6 deg E; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E along line of lode descending N 17 deg 45 min W 2.00 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 50 ft in length. General course westerly 2.50 chs; mouth of tunnel 25 lks to left, 50 ft in depth; General course westerly; Mouth of tunnel 25 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course westerly 2.75 chs cross gulch 10 lks wide; course N 75 deg E; Ascending 4.89 chs 322.7 ft intersect south end line of Defiance Mine. Set post, 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D N L W at point of location as identified by claimant. Returning to notice monument previously described, thence S 17 deg 45 min E along line of lode, descending over broken spurs falling Easterly 11.36 chs 749.7 ft to original location monument. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D No 1, L N E; whence corner to sec. 10, 11, 14, 23 and 24, T. 19 S, R 40 E, M. D. M. bears S 10 deg E 5.00 chs distant.

EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at previously described corner at south end of lode; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E, descending South 72 deg 30 min W 10 chs cross ravine 5 lks wide; course S 40 deg E; ascend 3.45 chs, top of spur bears S 13 deg 45 min E; descend 4.51 chs 300 ft to original location corner. Set post, 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound, marked D No 2; thence deflecting 90 deg 15 min to right, N 17 deg 15 min W; ascending along west slope of ridge 7.00 chs, cross ridge bears N 51 deg W and S 55 deg E, and ascend along E slope of ridge 9.00 chs, incline shaft 75 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course northerly 13.00 chs to top of ridge and descend along top of ridge 16.25 chs 107.25 ft to original location corner which is a rock mound the same being the S W corner of the Defiance Mine and the S E corner of the Bernin Mine. The post having been destroyed I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, within the same mound, marked D on N E face, B on N W face and D No 3 on S E face. Thence deflecting 89 deg 45 min to right N 72 deg 30 min E, descending 3.34 chs prospect hole 20 lks to left, 4.30 chs 284 ft to post at North end of Driver Lode, previously described; 5.34 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 6.34 chs cross road N 20 deg W and S 20 deg E 7.50 chs; cross road N 20 deg W, and S 20 deg E 8.70 chs 574.2 ft to original location corner being the S E corner of the Defiance mine, which is a rock mound, post having been destroyed. I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, within same rock monument, marked D on the N W face and D No 4 on the S W face; I was unable to find monument at South end of Defiance Lode. Thence deflecting 68 deg 45 min to right, S 18 deg 45 min E 2.00 chs cross gulch 10 links wide, course East 4.00 chs, cross road bears N 30 W and S 30 deg E. 6.00 chs, tunnel 100 lks to right 6.50 chs, top of spur bears East 8.00 chs, cross road bears N 10 deg W and S 10 deg E 9.50 chs, cross gulch 10 lks wide, C N 70 deg E 11.50 chs, cross road bears N 60 deg W and S 60 deg E 12.00 chs, cross roads bears N 64 deg W and S 60 deg E 14.50 chs, top of ridge bears N 30 deg E and N 30 deg W, 16.30 chs 1076 ft, cross road bears N 72½ deg E and S 72½ deg W 16.40 chs 1103 ft, the point of location as identified by claimant falling at edge of road. I set witness post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, with rock mound, marked D No 5, W P S 18 deg 45 min E 10 lks distant. Thence from point for true corner at edge of road deflecting 91 deg 15 min to right, S 72 deg 30 min W 50 chs left road which bears S 30 deg W 3.00 chs, top of spur bears S 25 deg E 4.54 chs 300 ft to point of beginning. Containing an area of 14.45 acres.

The location notice of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's Office of Coso mining district at page 105, of Book D, of said records. Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Driver Mine or the surface ground thereof, are requested to file their claims in the United States Land Office, in the Town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, State of California, during sixty days of the publication hereof or they will be barred, in virtue of the provisions of said Statute.

The smoke of battle has cleared away and McKinley is elected President of the United States. Mr. Bryan made a gallant fight for free silver against the combined wealth of the world, and though defeated, has endeared himself to his supporters for his noble efforts. All patriotic Americans will join in the hope that the election of Mr. McKinley will accomplish all for the benefit of the entire nation that was claimed for him in the campaign. Of course the silver mining industry is dead, and that fact will work a great hardship upon this county. All the Inyo county farmer has to look to for sale of his products is the local market, and the greatest, indeed almost the only, consumer of local products is the silver miner. We are now compelled to seek other avenues for sale of farm products, otherwise the farmer cannot exist. Even when the sheep business was at its best the Inyo county farmer could not live on the market afforded him by sheep men alone. We must have something else, and what will it be? We have this condition actually before us and must rely upon the supporters of Mr. McKinley to provide some means of disposing of our produce—some market to take the place of that lost through the downfall of silver. Will they do it? We earnestly hope so.

The Randsburg District

Dave Holland and Arthur Smith returned to Keeler last Monday from a two week's visit to the Randsburg district. There are over one thousand people in the district and the town of Randsburg boasts six saloons, five stores and three restaurants. Lots in the business part of town were sold for ten dollars a front foot. Teams are coming in every day loaded with lumber and new buildings are being rapidly erected. The Rand mine is the most valuable in the district. The ledge is eighty feet wide and averages about $70 per ton from wall to wall. A shaft has been sunk 100 feet and the ledge maintains the same character. The St. Elmo mine is about six miles from the Rand. The ledge in this mine is not so large but the ore is richer. Ten tons sent to Selby worked $125 per ton, and seven sacks of selected ore went over $100 per sack. There are a number of other mines in the district that are paying well. Thirty stamps are constantly dropping but the milling facilities are totally inadequate to the ore supply. Reddy, Campbell & Metson have sunk a well 200 feet deep and have an almost inexhaustible water supply. They will erect a large mill and will most undoubtedly have one of the most valuable properties in the State. The fact that Randsburg will be a permanent camp is now beyond question. The business of the town is in the hands of Eastern people and prices on all kinds of supplies are at bedrock. There is absolutely no chance, however, for laboring men to get work, as only a very limited amount of ore can be milled. All the territory has been located for fourteen miles square so that there is little chance for a prospector.

J. I. LaGrange was down from Laws yesterday.

Dave Holland came up from Keeler yesterday morning.

Full official returns of the election will appear next week.

Board of Supervisors will meet next Monday as a Board of Canvassers.

Frank Andrews, of Bishop, has been in Independence for a couple of days.

Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz will return from her visit to San Francisco this evening.

It was reported yesterday that the price of silver bullion had fallen to 44 cents.

H. A. Cook will leave for Randsburg to-day, going on the Keeler and Mojave stage.

Miss Eugenie Meysan left for Los Angeles last Monday, going via Miller's Stage line.

The personnel of Board of Supervisors remains unchanged. All of the old members were re-elected.

J. J. Gunn will return to Mojave about the end of the week to resume mining operations at the Minnietta.

Mrs. C. De La Matyr and John Schober came down from Bishop yesterday on business in the Land Office.

Independence paid fifty dollars for the election bulletins while Bishop got the same service for twenty dollars.

ELECTION BULLETINS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5, 1896.

United Ass. Press and Washington dispatches quote Chairman Babcock, who says he has complete reports from 193 Congressional districts that have elected Republicans; 135 districts have elected Democrats or Populists and 28 districts in which returns are incomplete. These may all be classed as doubtful, with prospect that at least half of them may go Republican, which would make the total Republican membership in 55th Congress 207. It is safe to say that under no circumstances will membership fall below 200.

Incomplete returns from all but four counties in the State of Washington give McKinley 24,400, Bryan, 35,852.

Complete returns from all but six small counties in the State of Oregon give McKinley 38,911, Bryan 35,852.

Complete returns from 2,115 out of 2,577 precincts in California give McKinley 141,117, Bryan 134,194.

In Second Congressional district 387 out of 464 precincts give Johnson, Republican, 17,346, De Vries, Democrat, 22,385.

In Fifth Congressional district 201 out of 221 precincts give Loud, Republican, 19,220, Keliey, Democrat, 16,574 and Kinnie, Populist, 8,899. In Sixth Congressional district 303 out of 319 precincts give McLachlan, Republican, 22,912, Barlow, Democrat, 22,844.

In Seventh Congressional district 420 out of 485 precincts give Bowers, Republican, 18,142, Castle, Democrat, 18,064.

Summers, Chairman of Democratic State Central Committee of Kentucky, says Bryan has carried Kentucky by 2,000.

CHICAGO, Oct. 5, 1896, 5:25 p. m.

A Chicago dispatch says 106 precincts out of 297, in Kentucky, give McKinley 3,147 and Bryan 6,052; McKinley's plurality 95.

BOISE, Idaho.—Bryan electors probably have 12,000 majority. Democratic legislative ticket including Gunn for Congress. Dubois defeated for U. S. Senator, succeeded by Clagger, Democrat.

Returns indicate that McKinley has carried the following States: California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Indiana, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, N. Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia and Wisconsin—two hundred and sixty electoral votes and that Bryan has carried the following states. Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia and Washington—157 electoral votes—leaving in doubt Wyoming, Kentucky and North Dakota, twenty votes.

Complete returns from 25 counties in Kansas give McKinley 42,875, Bryan 42,766.

Chairman Mark Hanna just issued a statement in which he says McKinley has 265 electoral votes sure, and that he feels confident of 13 more in Kentucky, 3 in Wyoming and 11 in North Carolina which are in doubt.

California complete returns from 2,115 out of 2,577 precincts give McKinley 141,117, Bryan 134,134.

The Louisville (Ky.) Evening Times says, with 9 precincts missing in State, McKinley has a plurality of 763.

A dispatch from Chicago says that Chairman Jones of the National Democratic Committee has issued a bulletin this evening giving up fight and conceding McKinley's election.

A private dispatch from Chairman Afford of the Democratic State Committee to Chairman Robinson of the Inyo County Democratic Central Committee says: "We have undoubtedly carried California, but it is close. Guard returns every moment until official count. Have Democratic and Populist votes been totalized in your county?"

T. C. Boland visited the Randsburg district recently and expects to return soon. He thinks well of the camp and will invest in mining property there.

A. C. Van Fleet, John A. Leidy and Claude Inman came down from Laws yesterday and transacted some business in the Land Office to-day.

The doctors said I had Cancer of the most malignant type, and after exhausting their efforts without doing me any good, they gave up the case as hopeless. When informed that my father had died from the same disease, they said I must die, as hereditary Cancer was incurable.

"At this crisis, I was advised to try S.S.S., and in a short while the Cancer began to discharge and continued to do so for three months, then it began to heal. # The Sheriff of Siskyou.

By BRET HARTE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER I.

On the 15th of August, 1854, what seemed to be the entire population of Wynyard's Bar was collected upon a little bluff which overlooked the rude wagon road that was the only approach to the settlement. In general appearance the men differed but little from ordinary miners, although the foreign element—shown in certain Spanish peculiarities of dress and color—predominated, and some of the men were further distinguished by the delicacy of education and sedentary pursuits. Yet Wynyard's Bar was a city of refuge and comprised among its inhabitants a number who were "wanted" by the state authorities, and its actual attitude at that moment was one of open rebellion against the legal power and of particular resistance to the apprehension by warrant of one of its prominent members. This gentleman, Major Overstone, then astride of a gray mustang and directing the movements of the crowd, had a few days before killed the sheriff of Siskyou county, who had attempted to arrest him for the double offense of misappropriating certain corporate funds of the state and the shooting of the editor who had imprudently exposed him. The lesser crime of homicide might have been overlooked by the authorities, but its repetition upon the body of their own overzealous and misguided official could not pass unchallenged if they expected to arrest Overstone for the more serious offense against property. So it was known that a new sheriff had been appointed and was coming to Wynyard's Bar with an armed posse. But it was also understood that this invasion would be resisted by the Bar to its last man.

All eyes were turned upon a fringe of laurel and butternut that encroached upon the road half a mile away, where it seemed that such of the inhabitants as were missing from the bluff were hidden to give warning or retard the approach of the posse. A gray haze slowly rising between the fringe and the distant hillside was recognized as the dust of a cavalcade passing along the invisible highway. In the hush of expectancy that followed the irregular clatter of hoofs, the sharp crack of a rifle and a sudden halt were faintly audible. The men, scattered in groups on the bluff, exchanged a smile of grim satisfaction.

Not so their leader. A quick start and an oath attracted attention to him. To their surprise, he was looking in another direction, but as they looked, too, they saw and understood the cause. A file of horsemen, hitherto undetected, were slowly passing along the little ridge on their right. Their compact accouterments and the yellow braid on their blue jackets, distinctly seen at that distance, showed them to be an escort of United States cavalry.

Before the assemblage could realize this new invasion a nearer clatter of hoofs was heard along the highroad, and one of the ambuscading party dashed up from the fringe of woods below. His face was flushed, but triumphant.

"A reg'lar skunk, by the living hokey!" he panted, pointing to the faint haze that was again slowly rising above the invisible road. "They backed down as soon as they saw our hand and got a hole through their new sheriff's hat. But what are you lookin at? What's up?"

The leader impatiently pointed with a darkening face to the file.

"Reg'lars, by gum!" ejaculated the other. "But Uncle Sam ain't in this game! Wot right have they"—

"Dry up!" said the leader.

The escort was now moving at right angles with the camp, but suddenly halted, almost doubling upon itself in some evident commotion. A dismounted figure was seen momentarily flying down the hillside, dodging from bush to bush until lost in the underbrush. A dozen shots were fired over its head, and then the whole escort wheeled and came clattering down the trail in the direction of the camp. A single riderless horse, evidently that of the fugitive, followed.

"Spread yourselves along the ridge, every man of you, and cover them as they enter the gulch!" shouted the leader. "But not a shot until I give the word. Scatter!"

The assemblage dispersed like a startled village of prairie dogs, squatting behind every available bush and rock along the line of bluff. The leader alone trotted quietly to the head of the gulch. The nine cavalrymen came smartly up in twos, a young officer leading. The single figure of Major Overstone opposed them with a command to halt. Looking up, the young officer drew rein, said a word to his file leader, and the four files closed in a compact square, motionless, on the road. The young officer's unsworded hand hung quietly at his thigh. The men's unslung carbines rested easily on their saddles. Yet at that moment every man of them knew that they were covered by a hundred rifles and shotguns leveled from every bush, and that they were caught helplessly in a trap.

"One moment more," said Overstone, coming forward.

"Since when," said Major Overstone, with an affectation of tone and manner different from that in which he had addressed his previous companions, "have the Ninth United States cavalry helped to serve a state court's pettifogging process?"

"We are hunting a deserter—a half breed agent—who has just escaped us," returned the officer. His voice was boyish. So, too, was his figure in its slim, cadetlike smartness of belted tunic, but very quiet and level, although his face was still flushed with the shock and shame of his surprise.

The relaxation of relief went through the wrought and waiting camp. The soldiers were not seeking them. Ready as these desperate men had been to do their leader's bidding, they were well aware that a momentary victory over the troopers would not pass unpunished and meant the ultimate dispersion of the camp, and quiet as these innocent invaders seemed to be they would no doubt sell their lives dearly. The embattled desperadoes glanced anxiously at their leader. The soldiers, on the contrary, looked straight before them.

"Process or no process," said Major Overstone, with a sneer, "you've come to the last place to recover your deserters. We don't give up men in Wynyard's Bar. And they didn't teach you at the academy, sir, to stop to take prisoners when you were outflanked and outnumbered."

"Bedad, they didn't teach you, Captain Overstone, to engage a battery at Cerro Gordo with a half company, but you did it. More shame to you now, sir, commandin the thaves and ruffians you do."

"Silence!" said the young officer.

The sleeve of the sergeant who had spoken—with the chevrons of long service upon it—went up to a salute and dropped again over his carbine as he stared stolidly before him. But his shot had told. A flush of mingled pride and shame passed over Overstone's face.

"Oh, it's you, Murphy!" he said, with an affected laugh, "and you haven't improved in discipline with your stripes."

The young officer turned his head slightly.

"Attention!"

"One moment more," said Overstone, coming forward. "I have told you that we don't give up any man who seeks our protection. But," he added, with a half careless, half contemptuous wave of his hand and a significant glance at his followers, "we don't prevent you from seeking him. The road is clear. The camp is before you."

The young officer continued without looking at him: "Forward—in two files—open order. Ma-arch!"

The little troop moved forward, passed Major Overstone at the head of the gully and spread out on the hillside. The assembled camp, still armed, lounging out of ambush here and there, ironically made way for them to pass. A few moments of this farcical quest and a glance at the impenetrably wooded heights around apparently satisfied the young officer, and he turned his files again into the gully. Major Overstone was still lingering there.

"I hope you are satisfied," he said grimly. He then paused and in a changed and more hesitating voice added, "I am an older soldier than you, sir, but I am always glad to make the acquaintance of West Point." He paused and held out his hand.

West Point, still red and rigid, glanced at him with bright, clear eyes under light lashes and the peak of a smartly cocked cap, looked coolly at the proffered hand, raised his own to a stiff salute, said, "Good afternoon, sir," and rode away.

Major Overstone wheeled angrily, but in doing so came sharply upon his coadjutor, the leader of the ambushed party.

"Well, Dawson," he said impatiently, "who was it?"

"Only one of them d——d half breed Injin agents. He's just over there in the brush with Simpson, lying low till the soldiers cl'ar out."

"Did you talk to him?"

"Not much!" returned Dawson scornfully. "He ain't my style."

"Fetch him up to my cabin. He may be of some use to us."

Dawson looked skeptical. "I reckon he ain't no more gain here than he was over there," he said and turned away.

DELICACIES OF GREENLAND.

Whaleskin Is Considered a Great Gastronomic Luxury.

Greenlanders have no regular mealtimes, but eat when they are hungry. They seem able to go without food for a remarkably long period and also to eat at a sitting the most astonishing quantity. Among their principal dainties is the skin of different kinds of whales. They call it matak, and look upon it as the acme of deliciousness. It is taken off with the layer of blubber next to it and is eaten raw without ceremony. An arctic explorer, in his recent work, declares that he must offer the Eskimo his sincerst congratulations on the invention of the dish.

"I can assure you—the reader—that now, as I write of it my mouth waters at the very thought of matak, with its indescribably delicate taste of nuts and oysters mingled. And then it has this advantage over oysters, that the skin is as tough as india rubber to masticate, so that the enjoyment can be protracted to any extent.

"Of vegetable food the primitive Greenlander used several sorts. I may mention angelica, dandelions, sorrel, crowberries, bilberries and different kinds of seaweed.

"One the greatest delicacies is the contents of a reindeer's stomach. If a Greenlander kills a reindeer and is unable to convey much of it home with him, he will, I believe, secure the stomach first of all, and the last thing an Eskimo lady enjoins upon her lover when he sets off reindeer hunting is that he must reserve for her the stomach of his prey.

"It is no doubt because they stand in need of vegetable food that they prize this so highly and also because it is in reality a very choice collection of the finest moss and grasses which that gormand, the reindeer, has picked out for himself. It has undergone a sort of stewing in the process of semidigestion, while the gastric juice provides a somewhat sharp and aromatic sauce.

"Many will no doubt make a wry face at the thought of this dish, but they really need not do so. I have tasted it and found it not uneatable, though somewhat sour, like fermented milk. As a dish for special occasions it is served up with pieces of blubber and crowberries."

Dead as a Doornail.

"As dead as a doornail" at first seems utterly senseless, but becomes lively and picturesque when we remember that knockers were once universally used. Beneath the knocker, in order to prevent disfiguring the door, a large nail or bolt was driven. An impatient caller, waiting for the door to be opened, would frequently use the knocker with great force, and the irresponsiveness of the nail gave rise to this expression.

PILLOWS FOR THE PILLARS.

How Leading Church Attendants Were Rebuked for Drowsiness.

The Tyringham Gazette, one of the most interesting papers published in New England, tells about a practical joke which was played lately in the town of Richmond, Vt. Upon a certain Sunday morning the congregation of the Second Methodist Church were amused or horrified—according to the age and temperament of the different members—to observe three large white-covered pillows, such as are commonly used upon beds, in three pews. In each case the pillow was comfortably disposed at the head of the pew, as if to invite sleep, and in each case the customary occupant of the pew was notorious for sleeping in church. The three persons thus distinguished were very angry. One of them openly accused the pastor of contriving to insult him; the pastor in turn, or one of his adherents, threw out dark insinuations against the leader of the choir, who had lately been deposed—and in short the whole congregation were set by the ears.

If, indeed, it was the minister who did the thing he can hardly be blamed. It must be very exasperating, after one has sat up late on Saturday night to finish a sermon—I understand that ministers always postpone this work until Saturday—to have people sleep through the delivery of it. A particularly sad case of this sort occurred in a village with which I used to be familiar. The church was a small one, and upon the Sunday that I have in mind a distinguished person, a member of the United States Senate, was present. His visit to the town had been expected, and the minister, a young man who was considered to have an unusual gift of preaching, had made a special effort to prepare a discourse worthy of the occasion. He delivered the text and had proceeded some distance into his subject with much success. The great man listened attentively and once or twice he was thought to nod—we were all looking at him—as if in approval of the ideas advanced. But alas! as time went on, as the bees hummed more and more drowsily outside, as a little breeze sprang up and rustled the leaves of the maple trees amid which the church stood, the Senator's attention relaxed; at last his eyes closed, his jaws fell and he slumbered perceptibly. As luck would have it, the minister was at that moment approaching the climax of his subject. He stopped, took a few swallows of water, blew his nose, did everything that could be done to give the stranger time to wake, but all to no purpose. He was forced to resume his sermon in a crestfallen manner, nor did the great man arouse himself until the discourse was finished and the closing hymn had been given out.—Boston Transcript.

AFRICAN ETIQUETTE.

The Wisest Plan to Follow in Visiting the Big Native Chiefs.

In African travel it is always wise to visit the biggest chief in any part of the country. One can always learn from other chiefs at a distance who they are and something of their character. In approaching them, always send word of your coming, and get, if possible, information in advance of the feeling of the chief toward whites. Upon nearing the village, send on ahead to announce your arrival, and wait until your messenger returns with some of the villagers to escort you to their chief. Greet the chief civilly, and ask him to send one of his people, to show you a good place for your tent, if you decide to camp in the village, which I have done invariably in this country, though it is not always advisable in every part of Central Africa. When you have rested the chief will come to see you. Then state to him your business, talk frankly with him and explain plainly your needs, whether you want guides or to buy food.

I seldom stayed in a place more than one day, and generally the first night I called the chief privately into my tent, had a long talk with him, and gave him a present, consisting generally of a good cloth, four yards of Americani, four of wide blue, four of narrow calico, and about an egg-cup full of beads, and sometimes an empty bottle or two. Invariably I received next day the co-operation of the chief in every way, and also a big goat or sheep or bullock, and fifty or sixty pounds of flour. Sometimes I gave a small additional present before leaving. If the chief took a fancy to any particular thing, and I could spare it, I did so. Sometimes one wanted a sheath knife, and another a hat. Old Kambuldi was determined to have a shirt. He wanted a candle, matches and needles, which I gave him; and as I had previously given him cloth I suggested, as a feeble sort of joke, that, as he now had cloth and sewing materials and light, he might sit up at night and make a shirt. Immediately the old fellow replied: "It is the candle that is interfering with my success. Here, take back the candle and give me the shirt." I finally yielded, and gave him a much-patched garment, which satisfied him.—Century.

Clothes Hooks.

A practical innovation has been introduced in a Berlin restaurant, where the clothes-hooks are arranged in such a way that, after hanging a coat on them, they can be locked by means of a snap lock in the upper hook or hat-rack. Regular guests receive a key, while transient guests have to ask the waiter to return them their overcoats. Since the introduction of this patent hook, not an overcoat has been stolen in the place, while previous to that time considerable trouble arose both to the proprietor and guests because of sneak thieves. The new hook is very simple; the lower part of it is on a hinge, and the lock is attached to the upper arm, being out of harm's way.

WHY RICHARD CAYFORD LEFT THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS.

A Story in Which There Seems a Tinge of Fate—Mrs. Cayford Stricken With Paralysis, and Yet She Has Been Cured—The Residents of the Mission District Look Upon It as a Miracle.

From the Examiner, San Francisco, Cal.

Residents of the Mission District of San Francisco have for months been marveling over the peculiar case of Mrs. Anna Cayford the wife of Richard Cayford, who resides at 313 Seventeenth Street. Several years ago Mr. and Mrs. Cayford took up their residence in the Hawaiian Islands, where Mr. Cayford, who is by trade a blacksmith, applied himself diligently at his occupation, until at lenght he had, by reason of his hard work and frugality, placed himself and family upon a fair way to prosperity. He had begun to look forward to the enjoyment of a quiet, happy life upon the beautiful islands of the Pacific, and in his fancy had built for himself and his family a comfortable little home, nestled snugly among the deep and fragrant foliage of that distant land. His wife shared with him in the contemplation of the happiness that the future apparently had in store for them. She had arrived at the age at which rest and contentment count for so much in a woman's life, when she was suddenly stricken with nervous prostration. Her condition became very serious, and her physician advised her that she must leave the Islands if she wished to regain her health. Acting upon this advice, Mr. Cayford disposed of his business and removed to San Francisco. Mrs. Cayford improved slightly with the change of climate until July, 1893, when she was stricken by paralysis of the left arm and leg, and was entirely deprived of the use of those limbs, having to be carried about the house by her husband for a period of two months. She was treated for some time by a physician, but he was able only partly to relieve her. She was able to drag herself about the house, but there was no strength in either of the affected limbs.

It was while she was in this condition that she noticed in a paper the advertisement of Williams' Pink Pills. She determined to get a box of them and try them, thinking, as she said, that at least she could not be injured by them. Mrs. Cayford tells of the relief she experienced from the time she began taking the pills, and her story is told in such a plain, straightforward manner that it is given in her own words:

"When I first began taking Williams' Pink Pills," said Mrs. Cayford, "I had absolutely no strength in either limb of the left side of my body. The treatment of my physician had partly relieved the paralysis, but after he had applied all his remedies I was still in practically a helpless condition. Before I had taken one full box of the pills I began to feel a return of strength in the limbs that had been so long useless. Feeling reassured by the first effect of the pills upon me, I purchased a second box, and continued to take them until I had used six boxes, when the last trace of paralysis had left my body and I had regained the full use of my limbs. You cannot imagine how delighted I was when I felt that my old-time activity was returning. It reminded me of the days when I was so strong and healthy at my island home. I do not know what stronger testimony I could give as to the merit of Williams' Pink Pills than to say that they have restored me to such a degree of strength that I now do all my own work without the least inconvenience, which is as much as I ever did before I was stricken with paralysis. But that is not all. I almost forgot to say how the pills have relieved me of a certain hesitancy in speech, which has troubled me for years. My tongue used to become 'thick,' and I would lisp most dreadfully and could not help myself. I noticed that after I began taking the pills I could talk more easily, and finally I was entirely relieved of the lisping that affected my speech. I have taken the trouble to recommed the pills to an old lady who is afflicted with paralysis. I have not seen her since she began taking them, but her husband told me, just the other day, that she had been greatly benefited by them."

Mrs. Cayford's friends are amazed at her sudden recovery from such a severe paralytic stroke, and stand in wonderment while she repeats the story of her suffering and her cure.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are sold in boxes (never in loose form, by the dozen or hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or directly by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A PARENT'S WAIL.

Oh, me! Oh, my! Likewise Great Scott!
Into what woe is this I've got?
I've lately sent my boy to school,
That he might not grow up a fool;
And all the things I've told to him,
Some based on fact, and some on whim,
These days are coming back to me:
Alas, alas, that it should be!

I told him once that Washington,
Ere he his manhood had begun,
Once with a mutton-chop did hack
A cherry tree out at the back,
And that in falling down it hit
His father where he kept his wit;
He told it as 'twas told by me:
Alas, alas, that it should be!

And when his teacher said 'twas not
The way I'd said, the little tot
Got up and told her that he guessed
He'd take my word before the rest;
And while it might quite suit her whim,
She'd best not go at stuffing him;
His daddy knew about that tree:
Alas, alas, that it should be!

And one by one the tales I've told,
By which he's been so badly sold,
But which I told him all in fun,
Are proving false unto my son,
Who watches me with mournful eye,
Half hoping that I do not lie,
But losing faith, alas, in me:
Alas, alas, that it should be!

CAP'N TOM WOOLLEY.

Well, yes, sir, the young lady was a beautiful swimmer. Never seen a young lady as could swim out like she could. "Cap'n Tom 'Oolley," she'd used to say to me, "I just love the water." She come here every year. She said she never could take to anywhere like the coast of Cornwall. But after the last year she never come again. Seems as if Bill-o'-my-soul must have give her a distaste of the Cornish fo.k like.

Well, that's true what you say, sir—there ain't no sea anywhere like the sea here, in Cornwall. It breaks, as you may see it, all so green as emerald, round the stacks and skerries off Land's End and the Lizard. See it breaking yonder sometimes in fine white foam 'most as high as a lighthouse, round they granite peaks, and you wouldn't find nothing more beautiful, not if it was painted in oils by they artist gents at Newlyn. The Channel?—well, what's the Channel, come to think o' it, but a muddy river, in the manner of speaking, with the Seine and the Avon flooding it all with dirt and refuse? The North Sea?—no, nor the North Sea ain't much better, neither, through being filled with yellow clay by the mouths o' Thames and Rhine and Humber. I know 'em all, your 'eart, as I have sailed in coasting craft, man an' boy, this fifty year an' more, an' being bred myself at Lyme Regis in Dorset—an' a muddier sea yould wouldn't want nowheres than that, though it's me that says it as oughta't to say it, belying my own home, if I may make bold to put it so, which is as tidy a little town as any in the country. But the open Atlantic, where it rolls right in, all blue and green, and clear as crystal, on them Cornish rocks—why, there ain't no water like it, for pleasure of swimming, in the British Isles, not till a man comes round again to Caithness and Sutherland.

Our Joe—him as they calls the fisherman poet—he says it reminds him of a good woman's heart, it does. You look right down into the depths, as far as you see, and it's all transparent and it's all pure an' innocent. That's the sea, in Cornwall.

The young lady's name I was speakin' of was Noe. She was a Miss Pryce o' London; but through knowing o' her so intimate like, we always called her by her given name, Miss Noe. She was at home with the children, you see; and my missus was fonder of her than of any other folks as ever took our lodgings, same as she might be of your good lady, sir, begging your pardon. She was a fine built young woman, too, was Miss Noe. See her clamber up the rocks, you'd say she was a goat; see her swim agin the waves, you'd say she was a seal; see her tell the little ones stories by the rocks at nights, you'd say she was one o' these book writers, as it might be yourself, sir. Fine upstanding young lady, too, with a color in her cheek and a spring in her step, walking free across Mully moors the same as if they belonged to her.

Well, it wasn't long before we perceived Miss Noe was pretty good friends with a gentleman up to Brown's—Mr. Moore from Exeter. He was a nice young doctor come to Kynance for his holiday; and when them two went out walking together, with her father and mother hanging about like for company, as is the way with parents, a finer young couple you'd never set eyes on. At the end of a fortnight my wife says to me, "Tom," says she, "it ain't 'Mr. Moore' no more with our young lady; it's plain Alex. this morning. His name being Alexander, it was Alex. for short, as is the new fashion now, though when I was young it was all Alic or else Sandy.

"An' a good thing, too," says I. "For a young lady like Miss Noe had ought to marry one as is her natural equal," says I; not meaning in birth alone, as is a thing I don't hold with; nor yet in money, as there ain't no counting upon; but a fine upstanding young lady, to my mind, deserves to be married to a fine young fellow. Or where'd the country get its soldiers and sailors from?"

"And handsome couple they'll make," says my missus, being fond of Miss Noe.

Well, one of the days, Mr. Moore—that's Alex.—he went out swimming off the rocks by the cove; and Miss Noe, she was ashore sitting high on the cliff, reading a book or something. But every now and again my wife sees her raise her head and look out to sea anxious like, after the heads bobbing about like buoys in the water. At last up she jumps and runs down to the cottage, all breathless. I could see in a minute her heart was in her mouth. "O, Cap'n Tom," she says, "Cap'n Tom, do look out at Alex. He's swimming over there, an' it seems to me he's in some sort of trouble"—love having eyes as can see better'n a binocular.

Well, I gets down my telescope, an' I fixes it upon him. He was a mile out to sea—a black speck on the water. I gets him well fixed. Sure enough there he was throwing his arms up wild, and trying to make signs to the shore for help.

"Is it cramp?" says the young lady.

"Don't you believe it," says I; "there's a deal more nonsense talked about cramp in swimming than there need be. A man can't swim forever," says I. "Tired out; that's what I calls it," says I. And tired out Mr. Alex. was, sure enough, by the look of him.

"O, Cap'n Tom," says the young lady, "will you save him?" wringing her hands in a way that might melt a stone—let alone a Christian.

I was half way down to my boat by that time.

"Save him?" says I; "is it saving of him? Bless your heart, if he warn't no friend of yourn at all—as man to man—I'd save him. Bill-o'-my-soul," says I, seeing Bill on the shore, "come an' help me," says I. "There's a gentleman drowning."

"Drowning?" says Bill, running down and putting out. "Come on!" says Bill; "I'm with you!" His name being Bill-o'-my-soul, along of his having been such a favorite when he was young with all the young women.

Well, we put off and rowed, Bill taking one of the sweeps—as is our name for them long oars—and me the other. After a while it struck me we wasn't heading outward. I looked up and saw, and we was most turned toward shore again. I'd pulled the boat around on Bill—which I didn't understand, he being then a stronger man nor me to pull—not but what, when I was in my best days, I'd have pulled a boat against any man in England.

"Bill," says I, sharp, "you're not a-pulling."

He looks up at me rather odd. "Mate," he quiet like, "I'm no fool. Now, what are you a-rowing for?—the young fellow or the money?"

"Pull, pull, man!" I shouts out. "Pull, pull, I tell you! The gentleman's drownding—Miss Noe's young gentleman!"

He pulls a stroke or two, quite feeble. His heart wasn't in it. Then I loses my temper.

"Bill-o'-my-soul," says I, "am I cap'n of this here craft, or are you? For unless you pull harder—I don't want no strong language here; but as sure as my name is Cap'n Tom 'Oolley, I'll wring your ugly neck for you!"

He holds up his sweep, and says he, "O, is that your game?" says he. "An' do you propose to compensate me?"

It flashed right across me what he meant. "Bill, you blackguard," says I, "do you mean to tell me—and a man there a-drownding? Have you no common humanity," says I, bristling up, "that you'd think of five pound afore a fellow creature?"

"Five pound is a good bit better nor thirty bob," says Bill, looking up at me, sullen-like.

"Well, sir, I'll say it to your face, though your own father is a County Councilor, I always thought that one as bad a law as the county could make. But law it is, all the same; and there ain't no helping it. It's £5 reward for bringing in a dead corpse, an' it's only thirty bob for bring a man alive as you save from drownding.

"Bill-o-my-soul," says I, raising my sweep, being that angry with the man that I'd have knocked him over the head as soon as I would a rat, "will you row, or shall I brain you?"

Just at that minute my eyes went towards the shore; and if there wasn't Miss Noe, not wringing her hands now, but plunging into the sea, clothes and all—though a lady with skirts—an' swimming for dear life out to the boat to help me.

I up with my voice an' shouts: "Come along, Miss Noe! You puts the men to shame! Blessings on you for a brave girl!" She was swimming that splendid!

Well, I rows towards her, and helps her aboard into the boat; and in she jumps, all dripping, but taking no more notice of it, bless you, than if water was a feather bed to her. And she seizes the oar Bill-o'-my-soul wouldn't work; and she cries out to me, agonized like: "Row on, Cap'n 'Oolley, for heaven's sake, row on; Alex. is a-drownding!"

Well, I wasn't going to carry a supercargo, as you may say, to weight the boat, not yet a passenger for nothing. So, to lighten the burden, I just ups with Bill-o'-my-soul and I clasps un round the waist, being a older man nor him, but, heaven be praised, a strong one. He was took by surprise too much to struggle. An' I heaves un over afore he knowed where he was, and makes a Jonah of him. He come up spluttering, being the worst swimmer for a seafaring men as ever I met with. "There," says I, hitting out at him with the blade o' my sweep; "see how you like it yourself," says I. "There's £5 a-goin' beggin' for whoever pulls out your ugly corpse, for nobody ain't going to trouble about you living." And off we two rows, Miss Noe in her dripping clothes, and leaves Bill there, to sink or swim, accordin' as he was minded.

A quarter o' a mile out we comes up to a sailing boat. Wind was nor-east, or might a been a p'int nearer east, mayhap; and a sail before the wind could bear straight down upon where Mr. Alex was drownding. Miss Noe, she stood up and calls out to the men: "Over yonder!" she cries, showing the way with her hand. "Quick, quick; he's drownding!"

In a second they sees, and without one word off they goes, luffing that sudden I wouldn't 'a believed it if I hadn't seen it; and they flies before me half a gale over in the direction of the gentleman. Well, he was done up for swimming through not having another kick left in him, as you may say, but he was able to float on his back and might have floated an hour more, mayhap, if so be as the chill of the water didn't numb him and send him to the bottom. They come up to him and pulled un in. I could see them a-pulling of him, but whether it was thirty bob or five pounds' worth I couldn't rightly make out for certain.

"Is it alive or dead?" says the young lady.

"Well," says I, "he do look rather limp," says I, "as is natural when you've been lying so long in the water. But I think it's alive. Anyhow, we'd better row back and get your things dried, miss."

"O, no," says she, crying. "I can't go back till I know. Cap'n 'Ooolley," says she, "we must row on and meet them."

Well, I didn't quite like it, owing to the gentleman perhaps having nothin' on, which Miss Noe hadn't thought of. Still, this being a matter o' life and death, where such things can't be allowed to count, I rows on to meet them.

About a hundred yards off I stands up and shouts so as she shouldn't understand, "Is it a five-pound job, mate, or a thirty-bobber?"

And the young gentleman himself lifts himself up in reply, with one of the fishermen's jerseys on an' a sail wrapped round un, and he shouts at the top of his voice, waving his hand, "Alive, alive, Noe!"

I wanted to turn then, but, bless you, there wasn't no keeping back that young lady. Afore I knowed where I was at the sound of his voice, she's stood up in the boat and jumped off the seat and was swimming for dear life again to the sailing boat, where her young gentleman was a-sitting.

He was most dead when she got there. He'd just had strength o' mind to hold up till he could shout to her, and then he falls back numb-like and white as death, till they gets him ashore again. There Bill-o'-my-soul was standing, spluttering and shivering, looking blue with cold, and saying as how I'd done him out o' five pounds, or anyways thirty shillings, through throwing of him overboard. They took the young gentleman up to his lodgings and gave him the regular thing—hot blankets an' such an' brandy—an' by the end o' the day he was pretty well right again. But the young lady, she didn't so much as ketch a cold with it, an' afore they left this place him and her was married. An' when Bill-o'-my-soul come to hear that her father and mother wanted to give ten pounds apiece to the men in the boat an' me he was just that mad you could 'a heard his language five houses off, and not choice language, either.—Cassell's Magazine.

Had the Last Word.

The train-boy had a bad eye and a most unmelodious voice. His yell sent a shudder through the entire car. It was, as a matter of course, the fate of the irritable man to select this particular train for his journey. Every time the train-boy howled he jumped and looked at him with an expression of reproach which gradually became malignant and then ferocious.

"P-e-e-a-c-h-e-s! A-a-a-a-p-l-e-s! Chee-y-u-u-u-ing gum!" he vociferated, as he pushed the front door shut with a slam after holding it open long enough to fill the car with smoke and cinders. He was just about to repeat his cry when he came to the nervous man's seat.

"Want any p-e-e-e-a-c-h-e-s, a-a-p——"

"Shut up, will you!" exclaimed the nervous man. "What do you mean by keeping up that infernal racket?"

"Does that bother you, mister?"

"Of course it bothers me. Every time you come along you whoop into this car till it feels as if it were going to split."

"You mean this left ear that's next to the aisle?"

"Yes, I mean my left ear."

"Don't you worry, mister. I'm sorry you didn't mention that before. We're the most accommodatin' people in the world on this road. All you have to do is to say you don't like something and we make other arrangements right away. I'll have the whole thing fixed up for you in no time at all."

"How are you going to fix it?"

"I'll go out and get the brakeman to come an' turn yer seat around so ye kin ride the other way. That'll bring yer right ear ter the aisle an' give yer left one a vacation."

And for the remainder of the trip the only one of the two who spoke was the boy who yelled with even more animation than before:

"P-e-e-a-c-h-e-s! A-a-a-p-l-e-s! Chee-y-u-u-ing gum!"

TOPICS OF THE TIMES

Great Britain's trade in tea is being rapidly transferred from China to India and Ceylon.

Smokers of Kansas City have taken up the stogie habit, and cigar dealers are complaining of a reduction of their profits.

Cartridges tested by the Roentgen rays to show that they have been carefully loaded are offered for sale by a London gunsmith.

"To Be Let or Sold" is the melancholy legend that disfigures the approaches to Somersby Old Hall, Lincolnshire, where Tennyson was born.

Viennese society women have taken to swimming in public in the Danube to the great delight of the populace, which watches them from the quays.

Algiers is becoming an important coaling station, many English, German and Belgian steamers preferring it to Gibraltar and Malta, as more central.

Mombasa island, on the African east coast, has just been connected with the mainland by a railroad bridge 1,700 feet long, built in three months and a half.

It is proposed to substitute bamboo for ashwood for the lances of English cavalry regiments, as the ash is said to be brittle and not to be trusted in actual warfare.

Only two minutes are required for the blood to course through the heart, thence to the lungs, back to the heart and then through the entire body and return to the heart.

Having a motherly disposition, a fifteen months old Jersey heifer, owned by Frank Casterline of Bazetta, O., adopted a pig, and continues to bestow best attentions upon it.

Opium persistently makes its way into the city prison of Oakland, Cal., and all the efforts of the authorities have failed to prevent the "fiends" among the inmates from getting it.

Date vinegar, which has been made and used by Arabs for years, has recently been put on the English market. Englishmen who have used it say that it is far superior to any other vinegar.

All the street railways of Monterey, Mexico, have been bought up by a local capitalist, who will equip them with electricity and give the city what, it is said, will be the first electric roads in Mexico.

Boy housemaids have been lately proposed in England as substitutes for the incompetent British servant girls. It is argued that what Chinamen and Hindoos can do Englishmen can do equally well.

In front of the First National bank of Seattle a man got into a row with his wife's divorced husband. The latter was proving himself an able fighter when the twice-wedded woman took a hand and came off best.

A French antitobacco society has petitioned the chamber of deputies to enact a law forbidding schoolboys and postoffice clerks to smoke cigarettes and punishing tobacconists who sell smoking materials to children.

Italian soldiers continue to desert into France in order to avoid service in Africa. Since the beginning of July sixty deserters have arrived at Nice. Among them was a doctor of laws, who was also a corporal in a regiment of bersaglieri.

In the public schools of Japan the English language is required by law to be taught. The brightest and most ambitious of the young men in the open ports are all eager to learn English as a passport to wealth, position and employment.

An old man, one of nine persons in Peter Peterson's house near Grafton, N. D., when a cyclone came down on it, tried to hold the door from blowing in, and the next minute found himself, still clinging to the door, forty feet away in the field.

This year's performances of "The Nibelungen Trilogy" at Bayreuth has resulted in a considerable deficit, which it is hoped will be made up by the "Parsifal" performances next year. The membership of the Richard Wagner society has fallen from 8,000 to 3,000.

Ivy is to be planted at the root of Bob Toombs' oak on the campus of the University of Georgia. The tree is associated with an escapade of General Toombs in his college days. A granite coping is to be built around the base of the trunk to preserve the tree as long as possible.

In the last three months there have been over 500 burglaries in New York City. This is an increase of nearly 200 over the same period last year. The police seem to have been more active this year than last, making 221 arrests in the three months, as compared with 151 last year.

A ring owned by a lady in Wellfleet, Mass., and lost by her twenty years ago, when she was a little girl, was found in the sand a few days ago by a little nephew visiting at her house, who was playing out of doors. The ring was in perfect condition and as bright as though recently worn.

A box containing £10 worth of coppers fell off a dray in Northumberland avenue in London the other day when the street was crowded, scattering the coins in every direction. There was a rush for the coins, but when a policeman asked for the money to be delivered up there was a general compliance, and, on counting it, the whole £10 was found, without a copper missing.

At the foot of a tree uprooted by a storm near Hamilton, Ala., a hunter found the skeleton and clothes of a man, and upon examining the skirt saw that he had uncovered a murder. The garment was pierced by several bullet holes. It was in the moonshine neighborhood, and the conclusion was formed that the huntsman's find revealed the fate of a too diligent revenue officer.

Another method of preserving timber has recently been tried. It consists in dissolving in naphtha the heavy oils and waxes left after the distillation of petroleum, and forcing the solution into the seasoned timber in the same manner as in creosoting. The timber is then heated, when the naphtha evaporates and is recovered in a cooling chamber, while the waxes, etc., remain behind in the wood, waterproofing it.

The biggest rope ever used for haulage purposes has just been made for a district subway in Glasgow, Scotland. It is seven miles long, four and one-half inches in circumference and weighs nearly sixty tons. It has been made in one unjointed and unspliced length of patent crucible steel. When in place it will form a complete circle around Glasgow, crossing the Clyde in its course, and will run at a speed of fifteen miles an hour.

That now almost obsolete musical instrument, the lute, is about to be revived in Italy, a society being in process of formation in Florence for the purpose of encouraging an appreciation of it. This will be known as the Societa del Luito, and its inauguration will be celebrated by a grand concert, in which several leading Italian musicians will take part, including Signor Mascagni, who is, moreover, composing a new piece for the occasion, entitled "The Apotheosis of the Lute."

According to Chambers' Journal, Egypt is at present the most active and aggressive competitor in the onion trade. The trade with Egypt for onions is now so important that four lines of steamers are engaged in the traffic, bringing consignments from Alexandria to Liverpool, Hull and London. The Egyptian onion is a handsome and useful vegetable, and by selecting the best strains of seed the quality tends, year by year, to improve. So excellent in quality are these onions that efforts are, it is said, being made in other countries to raise onions from Egyptian seed.

The bishop of North Dakota's idea of a cathedral car is being adopted in unexpected quarters. Four such cars for purposes of evangelization are now used by the Baptist denomination in this country. What is more amazing is that a church generally considered so unprogessive as the Greek church has one running in Russia. The trans-Siberian railway, also, which crosses the most dreary regions of the Caucasus for 1,500 miles, has five such cars on its line. Each car carries two priests, who celebrate the holy sacrament daily in the villages through which the road passes.

Persons who think that the humorists do violence to the facts when they poke fun at the western affection for whiskers should write for particulars to Cynthiana, Ky., where the fashion of going clean shaven has recently made progress. Parting with the mustache is something the community has been unable to forgive, and complaints abound there about the plain lip, the furrowed lip, the long lip, the short lip, the broad lip, the narrow lip, the oleaginous lip and even the "harelip, cowslip, tulip and the rosette"—whatever that may be—which obtrude themselves on an unprotected people.

An epigrammatic correspondent hits off some of the chief watering places in the following fashion: "When you go to Newport you take letters of introduction, when you go to Long Branch you take clothes and when you come to Saratoga you bring your appetite. For this is first and last a place to eat. We disguise the fact by a thousand ingenious circumstances; we pretend to drive in the afternoon, we pretend to play cards in the evening, but what we really do is to drink digestive waters and appetizing cocktails and when we are not eating we think of what we have eaten and what we are going to eat."

The Joke Executioner.

One of New York's comic weeklies has for many years had an old man on its staff, whose duty it is to see that no old jokes are accepted. He has a remarkable memory, and nearly every week he "kills" something which has passed muster with the younger editors. He knows the files of his paper thoroughly, and not infrequently when a stolen sketch or an old joke is submitted he can name the month and year when it was first printed. Long years of mirth killing have left their mark in the deep furrows that line his face. It has made him suspicious of everyone, and particularly of writers of jokes and comic artists. This man has passed his whole life in New York, employed at the unending task of exposing fakers. He said to a friend not long ago that old jokes haunted his sleep and made life a burden, but it is his boast that none of them has ever worked its way into his paper.

How to Care for the Bean Crop-Barn Cisterns Better than Wells—Wonderful Work of Bees—Removing Unfruitful Trees—Farm Notes.

Bean Harvesting.

Beans are planted any time in June after the ground has become thoroughly warmed and corn planting is out of the way. The soil should be rich, well drained, well plowed, thoroughly pulverized, and kept free from weeds until the crop has matured. Caring for the crop after it is done growing requires much skill and painstaking attention. Formerly, and even to-day where beans are raised on a small scale, the bunches were pulled by hand and placed in piles until thoroughly dried out. To-day large growers use machines for cutting off the plants. A puller is shown in Fig. 1. Two rows are pulled at the same time. The horizontal knives run just beneath the surface of the ground and cut off the stems. The tops are brought close together by the rods above the knives. They can then be easily gathered up with a fork and placed in the shock. Allow the shocks to remain in the field until thoroughly dried. The shocks after thorough drying can be placed in a stack or a hay mow. Care must always be exercised to prevent much packing while being stored, otherwise molding will ensue. Avoid tramping by placing a board for the operator to stand upon. When ready thresh, using a bean thresher. Small lots are beaten out with a flail, and cleaned by means of a hand fanning mill.

After threshing it pays to pick out the broken beans, also the discolored ones. Especially is this true where the crop is raised for seed. This may be accomplished by spreading out upon a white-covered table and removing the trash and defective beans. A number of machines have been invented for expediting this work, one of which is shown in Fig. 2. The beans to be picked are placed in the hopper. A force feed passes them regularly through the hopper into the perforated cylinder, where they are freed from dust and trash. They then fall upon a white canvas belt which is moving slowly toward the operator. While on this canvas, the discolored and broken specimens are easily seen and removed. The perfect beans remain until they fall into the spout provided to convey them to a sack or other receptacle. For large quantities there are machines upon the market run by steam or horse power.

Winter and Summer Prices of Eggs.

Always in the fall the price of eggs goes up, partly because the supply decreases then, and also because with cool weather those who prepare eggs for keeping in winter have more confidence and begin to buy extensively. We have often wished that no method had ever been discovered for preserving eggs. Then the winter price would be always what it costs to produce eggs in winter. Both the egg producer and the consumer would then be better satisfied. It really discourages the use of eggs to buy some and have them plainly a trifle stale, not changed enough as the dealer will tell you to hurt them. The truth is that an egg not perfectly fresh is an abomination. If only such were sold in market there would be better prices all the year round. But in such weather as we had in August an egg will spoil from the natural heat of the atmosphere in two days, so that it will not be fit to use. The refrigerator must be used more in keeping eggs, not to chill them, but to cool the temperature around them.

Removing Unfruitful Trees.

In every orchard there will be found some trees which are an injury to the farmer every year they remain in their present position, producing nothing themselves and lessening the product of neighboring trees. All old orchards need more fertility and also more room for each tree to ripen and perfect its fruit. Removing trees that have for years cumbered the ground, taking room that might be worth something if it were out, is often the best way to restore orchards to productiveness.

Wonderful Work of Bees.

Bees must, in order to collect a pound of clover honey, deprive 62,000 clover blossoms of their nectar. To do this the 62,000 flowers must be visited by an aggregate of 3,750,000 bees. Or, in other words, to collect its pound of honey one bee must make 3,750,000 trips from and to the hive. The enormous amount of work here involved precludes the idea of any one bee ever living long enough to gather more than a fraction of a pound of nectarine sweets. As bees are known to fly for miles in quest of suitable fields of operation, it is clear that a single ounce of honey represents millions of miles of travel. It is no wonder that these industrious little insects have earned the reputation of being "busy" bees.

Curing Corn Fodder in Cock.

When corn fodder is cut while the weather is still dry it will cure in better shape and with less loss if put up in small cocks rather than in stooks. The reason is that as days shorten and nights rapidly lengthen there is not sunlight and warmth enough in the daytime to cure the stalks as rapidly as they should be. In the cock the stalks will heat, bringing the temperature up to 100 or more, night as well as day. If a little dry straw is thrown on the cock so as to absorb the moisture at night, when the outside cold air condenses it, the stalks below it will come out green looking, yet slightly softened from the heat to which they have been subjected. Stalks thus cured will be eaten much more readily than stalks that have dried up by being exposed in stooks to drying winds. All farmers have noticed that in winter it is the corn stalks that have been heated and even molded in the mow that will be preferred by cows to stalks that have been dried in the wind and without the heat needed to soften the outer shell of the stalk. The moist stalks are also more nutritious, as in drying out the carbon in them turns into woody fibre, nearly indigestible. In putting up the cocks they should be small, so as not to heat too much and blacken the stalks. For the same reason they should not be left long before being drawn to the barn or mow.

Awnings for Country Homes.

Awnings let in the light but keep out the sun's heat, affording just the conditions needed in summer. Blinds keep out heat, but make a room dark and gloomy. Awnings may easily be made at home, this plan being easily carried out. A three-eighths inch iron rod is bent by a blacksmith into the form shown, and this is supported by screw eyes in the window case and wires extending from the outer corners to the top of the window case, hooks being placed there. These hooks also support the top of the awnings, eyelet holes being made in the cloth.

FRAME FOR AN AWNING.

Barn Cisterns.

It is bad for stock to depend on water drawn from wells near barnyards, as it is sure after a term of years to become contaminated. In all such cases a barn cistern with a filter at the outlet through which the water is drawn offers better security of pure water than can be had from water taken from a well. Some care must be taken to prevent dust and dirt being washed into the cistern from roofs. After threshing especially, and in the fall when leaves are flying, the eave trough should be frequently cleaned so that as little dirt as possible be washed into a well. An average barn roof will in a year catch water enough to winter the stock that will usually be fed in the barn.

Coming of Autumn.

Autumn wandered through the woodland
Touching with his wand each tree;
Summer stood reluctant, crying,
"Bring my beauties back to me."
But the maple leaves grew crimson,
Ripened fruit hung everywhere;
And the harvester spoke, smiling,
"Autumn's charms are full as fair."

Summer, weeping, wrung her fingers,
Then gleamed forth the golden rod—
Asters by the laughing brooklet
Give new beauty to the sod;
Mother Nature viewed the picture,
Smiled as fell the first white frost—
Sweetly said, "The summer's beauty
Will return, for naught is lost."

The Pig Pen.

Crowd the young porkers that you wish to turn off in December.

Keep hog cholera out. It is not safe to depend upon knocking it out.

It is possible, by cleaning out the pen once or twice a week, and disinfecting it with lime to keep the place in a sweet, presentable condition.

Away with the idea that winter made pork does not pay. Men that are prepared for such work often claim the greatest profit from winter feeding.

Never allow the permiums won by the sire and dam to dazzle your eyes when looking at the pig. Size up the pig first, then his pedigree, and the reputation of the ancestry last.

Prof. Henry, of the Wisconsin Experiment Station, finds that cabbages have a good deal of value—more than potatoes and turnips—as a swine feed; especially in the first part of the fattening period.

The Stock Yards Company at Chicago is building the largest swine quarters in the world. It covers fifty acres and will accommodate 200,000 swine guests at one time, in all the luxury their tastes require.

BRYAN TO THE BIMETALLISTS.

LINCOLN, Nebr., Nov. 6.—William J. Bryan this afternoon gave out the following statement to the bimetallists of the United States:

Conscious that millions of loyal hearts are saddened by temporary defeat, I beg to offer a word of hope and encouragement. No cause ever had supporters more brave, earnest and devoted than those who have espoused the cause of bimetallism. They have fought from conviction and have fought with all the zeal which conviction inspires. Time will prove whether they are right or whether they are wrong. Having done their duty as they saw it they have nothing to regret.

The Republican candidate has been heralded as the advance agent of prosperity. If his policies bring real prosperity to the American people those who opposed him will share in that prosperity. If, on the other hand, his policies prove an injury to the people generally those of his supporters who do not belong to the office-holding class or to the privileged classes will suffer in common with those who opposed.

The friends of bimetallism have not been vanquished; they have simply been overcome. They believe that the gold standard is a conspiracy of the money changers against the welfare of the human race, and until convinced of their error they will continue the warfare against it.

The contest has been waged this year under great embarrassments and against great odds. For the first time during this generation public attention has been centered upon the money question as the paramount issue, and this has been done in spite of all attempts upon the part of our opponents to prevent it. The Republican convention held out the delusive hope of international bimetallism, while Republicans labored secretly for gold monometallism. Gold-standard Democrats have publicly advocated the election of the Indianapolis ticket while they labored secretly for the election of the Republican ticket. The trusts and corporations have tried to excite a fear of lawlessness while they themselves have been defying the law. And American financiers have boasted that they were the custodians of National honor, while they were secretly bartering away the Nation's financial independence.

But in spite of the efforts of the administration and its supporters, in spite of the threats of money-loaners at home and abroad, in spite of coercion practiced on corporation employes, in spite of trusts and syndicates, in spite of an enormous Republican campaign fund and in spite of the influence of a hostile press, bimetallism has almost triumphed in its first great fight. The loss of a few States, and that, too, by very small pluralities, has defeated bimetallism, but bimetallism emerges from the contest stronger than it was four months ago.

I desire to commend the work of the National Committee who had the management of this campaign. Co-operation between the members of different political organizations is always difficult, but it has been less so this year than usual. Interest in a common cause of great importance has reduced friction to a minimum. I hereby express my personal gratitude to the individual members, as well as the executive officers of the National Committee of the Democrats, Populist and Silver parties for their efficient, untiring and unselfish labors. They have laid the foundation for future success, and will be remembered as pioneers when victory is at last secured.

No personal nor political friend need grieve because of my defeat. My ambition has been to secure immediate legislation rather than to enjoy the honors of office, and therefore defeat brings to me no feeling of personal loss.

Speaking of the wife who has shared my labors as well as for myself, I desire to say that we have been amply repaid for all that we have done. In the love of millions of our fellow citizens so kindly expressed; in the knowledge gained by personal contact with the people, and in broadened sympathies we find full compensation for whatever efforts we have put forth. Our hearts have been touched by the devotion of friends, and our lives shall prove our appreciation of the affection of the plain people, an affection which we prize as the highest reward which this campaign has brought.

In the face of the enemy rejoicing in its victory let the roll be called for the next engagement, and urge all friends of bimetallism to renew their allegiance to the cause. If we are right, as I believe we are, we shall yet triumph. Until convinced of his error let each advocate of bimetallism continue the work. Let all silver clubs retain their organizations, hold their meetings and freely circulate silver literature.

Our opponents have succeeded in this campaign and must now put their theories to the test. Instead of talking mysteriously about "sound money" and "an honest dollar" they must now elaborate and defend a financial system. Every step taken by them should be publicly considered by the silver clubs.

Our cause has prospered most where the money question has been longest discussed among the people. During the next four years it will be studied all over this Nation, even more than it has been studied in the past. The year 1900 is not far away. Before that year arrives international bimetallism will cease to deceive. Before that year arrives those who have called themselves Gold-Standard Democrats will become bimetallists and be with us or they will have become Republicans and become open enemies. Before that year trusts will have convinced more people that a trust is a menace to private welfare and public safety. Before that year arrives the evil effects of a gold standard will be even more evident than they are now, and the people will then be ready to demand an American financial policy, for the American people will join with us in the immediate restoration of free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation.

W. J. BRYAN.

Passengers on west-bound overland trains of Central Pacific Railroad are respectfully notified that during the excursion season, commencing May 1st and closing October 1st, a delightful trip to LAKE TAHOE can be enjoyed (losing but one day in their journey) by taking the Express train of the Virginia & Truckee Railroad, leaving Reno at 7:10 a. m., arriving at Carson City at 8:25 a. m., where well-equipped stages leave promptly for Glenbrook, Lake Tahoe, connecting with Lake Tahoe steamer for Tahoe City, there connecting with Moody & Co.'s stages for Truckee, arriving same evening where connection is made with west-bound passenger train of Central Pacific Railroad. Through tickets, Reno to Truckee, by above route, for sale at Ticket Office, Reno, $5.00. East-bound passengers can leave Truckee early in the morning (Through Tickets for sale at Stage Office in Truckee) make the trip over the above described route, arriving at Reno same evening.

VIRGINIA CITY & THE COMSTOCK

Passengers may also take train mentioned as Reno for Virginia City, 52 miles, where an entire day may be pleasantly and profitably spent examining the famous Comstock Mines (now being worked to a perpendicular depth of 3,100 feet) with their massive hoisting and pumping machinery. Returning, see Time Table above Round Trip Tickets for sale at Ticket Office Reno. aug21-tf

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

Bryan will be elected in 1900.

Hon. A. R. Conklin, Superior Judge of Kern County, was defeated by J. Mahon for re-election to that position.

The young people indulged in a few hours dancing in Mairs' dining room last Saturnay night by way of celebrating McKinley's election.

J. J. Morton came up from Keeler last Saturday morning to see his new boy. To say that he was about the best pleased man in town is putting it mildly.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J Gunn and their little daughhter left Independence last Monday for the Minnietta mine, near Modock. They expect to remain there several months.

Mr. G. H. Burton, the Upholsterer, is stopping for the present at the Independence Hotel, where he is prepared to do all work in his line in a No. 1 manner. Mr. Burton is a resident of Bishop and is making a visit to Independence to introduce his work. He is a skilled workman, having worked for the California Furniture Co. for five years and the Los Angeles Furniture Co. for three years. He will call on our citizens and show them samples of coverings. Old furniture upholstered and made better than new.

Randsburg Booming.

A stage line has been put on from Kramer on the Atlantic and Pacific to Randsburg, a distance of 26 miles, and the company is now selling tickets from Los Angeles direct to the mines by way of Barstow.

George Barton has bonded his mine to a Los Angeles firm, who will work it for all it is worth.

Now that the largest part of the people have moved to the flats and have turned the tide of building to that part of camp, they have become tired of climbing the hill to get their mail or to buy a stamp, and are doing all they can to have the postoffice moved.

Lots in the best part of camp have been reserved for a town hall, jail, etc. Why not lay out a park while you are at it?

Many rumors are afloat to the effect that the Butte mine has run out and that it will no longer pay. But such is not the case. Twelve men are kept at work both night and day, and the mills cannot keep the ore off the dump. The company are negotiating for a 20-stamp mill which will be put in motion as soon as possible.

W. P. Watson & Co., owners of the Walkover group of mines near Garlock, will put a force of men to work upon the 15th. They have some valuable property, which they intend to improve. They have also purchased a 40-stamp mill which they expect to have in running order by Christmas.

Los Angeles parties are placing a 20-stamp mill in Cow Wells and will have it ready to run by the 15th.

The four-stamp mill in Garlock has been sold to a gentleman from Cripple Creek, who will enlarge and improve it at once.

The Butte Mining Company have laid out a town site, which will be known as Butte City and will place the lots on the market in a few days.

Randsburg, the coming mining camp of America, is still on the boom, and hundreds of people are headed that way. Dozens of teams can be seen daily taking out hay, lumber and other supplies, while the stages are loaded every trip. A great many lots have been taken up and store rooms are being built. Lumber sells for $50 a thousand as fast as it can be taken in. The camp now contains about 700 people, 4 general merchandise stores, 7 saloons, a drug store, blacksmith shop, restaurants and feed yards by the dozen.

All the large mines are being worked and a great many of the small ones. B. J. Anderson made a strike that will go $150 to the ton. Ramey, Stephenson & Co. are working the King Solomon, an extension of the Butte, which is clearing them $130 to the ton. Ashford Bros. have struck the same lead which they claim will go at least $100.—Californian.

Mr. Ed. Rose is preparing for a house warming, we presume. Mr. W. Hines has been delivering wood at Mr. Rose's modest cottage just above Aberdeen.

Mr. Montague is at the Fort harvesting his corn crop, with the assistance of Mr. S. Tapman. AURORA.

Dr. T. A. Keables, who has been elected Assemblyman to represent the 60th district is thoroughly qualified to fill the duties of said office. Mr. Keables made a square fight, single-handed and alone. He canvassed the whole district and made many friends during his campaign, he will upon entering his duties next winter be first and foremost for this district. Mr. Keables will prove a credit to the people and those who sent him there will never be given an opportunity to regret their kind and appreciated act.—Bodie Miner.

J. W. Kaerth, C. E. arrived from San Francisco on Wednesday evening. Mr. Kaerth went to Big Pine to-day to join Mr. Hanson, who is making a public survey of lands situated between Big Pine and Independence. When the work is completed here the force will be divided and one of the crews will go to the Randsburg country.

That Sinking Feeling.

A good story is being told on one of Louisville's most prominent homeopathic physicians. Several days ago a young woman called at his office, and after discoursing on all the topics of interest of the day settled down to tell him her ailments. Among other things she said that she was greatly annoyed with a sinking feeling. The physician prepared a little bottle of pills and gave them to her, with minute directions as to how they should be taken. The woman again began to talk, and after many vain efforts to get her out she started for the door. She had just opened it when she turned and said, "Oh, doctor, what shall I do if these pills do not cure me?" "Take the cork," he retorted. "They tell me that's good for a sinking feeling." And he called the next patient into his private office.—Louisville Post.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

CHAPTER II.

The cabin of Major Overstone differed outwardly but little from those of his companions. It was the usual structure of logs, laid lengthwise and rudely plastered at each point of contact with adobe, the material from which the chimney, which entirely occupied one gable, was built. It was pierced with two windows and a door, roofed with smaller logs and thatched with long half cylinders and spruce bark. But the interior gave certain indications of the distinction as well as the peculiar experiences of its occupant. In place of the usual bunk or berth built against the wall stood a small folding camp bedstead, and upon a rude deal table that held a tin washbasin and pail lay two ivory handled brushes, combs and other elegant toilet articles, evidently the contents of the major's dressing bag. A handsome leather trunk occupied one corner, with a richly caparisoned silver mounted Mexican saddle, a mahogany case of dueling pistols, a leather hatbox locked and strapped, and a gorgeous gold and quartz handled ebony "presentation" walking stick. There was a certain dramatic suggestion in this revelation of the sudden and hurried transition from a life of ostentatious luxury to one of hidden toil and privation and a further significance in the slow and gradual destitution and degradation of these elegant souvenirs. A pair of silver boot hooks had been used for raking the hearth and lifting the coffee kettle. The ivory of the brushes was stained with coffee. The cut glass bottles had lost their stoppers and had been utilized for vinegar and salt. A silver framed hand mirror hung against the blackened wall. For the major's occupancy was the sequel of a hurried flight from his luxurious hotel at Sacramento—a transfer that he believed was only temporary until the affair blew over and he could return in safety to browbeat his accusers, as was his wont. But this had not been so easy as he had imagined. His prosecutors were bitter, and his enforced seclusion had been prolonged week by week until the fracas which ended in the shooting of the sheriff had apparently closed the door upon his return to civilization forever. Only here was his life and person secure. For Wynyard's Bar had quickly succumbed to the domination of his reckless courage, and the eminence of his double crime had made him respected among spendthrifts, gamblers and gentlemen whose performances had never risen above a stagecoach robbery or a single assassination. Even criticism of his faded luxuries had been delicately withheld.

A figure darkened the doorway.

He was leaning over his open trunk—which the camp popularly supposed to contain state bonds and securities of fabulous amount—and had taken some letters from it when a figure darkened the doorway. He looked up, laying his papers carelessly aside. Within Wynyard's Bar property was sacred.

It was the late fugitive. Although some hours had already elapsed since his arrival in camp and he had presumably refreshed himself inwardly, his outward appearance was still disheveled and dusty. Brier and milkweed clung to his frayed blouse and trousers. What could be seen of the skin of his face and hands under its stains and begriming was of a dull yellow. His light eyes had all the brightness without the restlessness of the mongrel race. They leisurely took in the whole cabin, the still open trunk before the major, and then rested deliberately on the major himself.

"Well," said Major Overstone abruptly, "what brought you here?"

"Same as brought you, I reckon," responded the man almost as abruptly.

The major knew something of the half breed temper, and neither the retort nor its tone affected him.

"You didn't come here just because you deserted," said the major coolly. "You've been up to something else."

"I have," said the man, with equal coolness.

"I thought so. Now, you understand, you can't try anything of the kind here. If you do, up you go on the first tree. That's rule 1."

"I see. You ain't pertickler about waiting for the sheriff here, you fellers."

The major glanced at him quickly. He seemed to be quite unconscious of any irony in his remark and continued grimly, "And what's rule 2?"

"I reckon you needn't trouble yourself beyond No. 1," returned the major, with dry significance. Nevertheless he opened a rude cupboard in the corner and brought out a rich, silver mounted cut glass drinking flask, which he handed to the stranger.

"I say!" said the half breed admiringly. "Yours?"

"Certainly."

"Certainly now—but before, eh?"

Rule No. 2 may have indicated that references to the past held no dishonor. The major, although accustomed to these pleasantries, laughed a little harshly.

"Mine always," he said. "But you don't drink?"

The half breed's face darkened under its grime. "Wot yo're givin us? I've been filled chock up by Simpson over thar. I reckon I know when I've got a load on."

"Were you ever in Sacramento?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"Last week."

"Did you hear anything about me?"

The half breed glanced through his tangled hair at the major in some wonder, not only at the question, but at the almost childish eagerness with which it was asked.

"I didn't hear much of anything else," he answered grimly.

"And—what did they say?"

"Said you'd got to be took anyhow. They allowed the new sheriff would do it too."

The major laughed. "Well, you heard how the new sheriff did it—skunked away with his whole posse before one-eighth of my men. You saw how the rest of this camp held up your nine troopers and that sapheaded cub of a lieutenant, didn't you? You wouldn't have been standing here if you hadn't. No. There isn't the civil process nor the civil power in all California that can take me out of this camp."

But neither his previous curiosity nor present bravado seemed to impress the ragged stranger with much favor. He glanced sulkily around the cabin and began to shuffle toward the door.

"Stop! Where are you going to? Sit down. I want to talk to you."

The fugitive hesitated for a moment and then dropped ungraciously on the edge of a campstool near the door. The major looked at him.

"I may have to remind you that I run this camp, and the boys hereabouts do pretty much as I say. What's your name?"

"Tom."

"Tom? Well, look here, Tom! D—n it all! Can't you see that when a man is stuck here alone, as I am, he wants to know what's going on outside and hear a little fresh talk?"

The singular weakness of this blended command and appeal apparently struck the fugitive curiously. He fixed his lowering eyes on the major as if in gloomy doubt if he were really the reckless desperado he had been represented. That this man—twice an assassin and the ruler of outlaws as reckless as himself—should approach him in this half confidential way evidently puzzled him.

"Wot you wanter know?" he asked gruffly.

"Well, what's my party saying or doing about me?" said the major impatiently. "What's The Express saying about me?"

"I reckon they're throwing off on you all round. They allow you never represented the party, but worked for yourself," said the man shortly.

Here the major lashed out. A set of traitors and hirelings! He had bought and paid for them all. He had sunk $2,000 in The Express and saved the editor from being horsewhipped and jailed for libel. Half the cursed bonds that they were making such a blanked fuss about were handled by these hypocrites, blank them! They were a low lived crew of thieves and deserters. It is presumed that the major had forgotten himself in this infelicitous selection of epithets, but the stranger's face only relaxed into a grim smile. More than that, the major had apparently forgotten his desire to hear his guest talk, for he himself at once launched into an elaborate exposition of his own affairs and a specious and equally elaborate defense and justification of himself and denunciation of his accusers. For nearly half an hour he reviewed step by step and detail by detail the charges against him, with plausible explanation and sophistical argument—always with a singular prolixity and reiteration that spoke of incessant consciousness and self abstraction. Of that dashing self sufficiency which had dazzled his friends and awed his enemies there was no trace. At last even the set smile of the degraded recipient of these confidences darkened with a dull, bewildered disgust. Then, to his relief, a step was heard without. The major's manner instantly changed.

"Well," he demanded impatiently as Dawson entered.

"I came to know what you want done with him," said Dawson, indicating the fugitive with a contemptuous finger.

"Take him to your cabin."

"My cabin! Him?" ejaculated Dawson, turning sharply on his chief.

The major's light eyes contracted, and his thin lips became a straight line. "I don't think you understand me, Dawson, and another time you'd better wait until I've done. I want you to take him to your cabin and then clear out of it yourself. You understand? I want him near me and alone."

Dawson was not astonished the next morning to see Major Overstone and the half breed walking together down the gully road, for he had already come to the conclusion that the major was planning some extraordinary reprisal against the invaders that would insure the perpetual security of the camp. That he should use so insignificant and unimportant a tool now appeared to him to be quite natural, particularly as the service was probably one in which the man would be sacrificed. "The major," he suggested to his companions, "ain't going to risk a white man's skin when he can get an Injin's hide handy."

The reluctant, hesitating step of the half breed as they walked along seemed to give some color to this hypothesis. He listened sullenly to the major as he pointed out the strategic position of the Bar. "That wagon road is the only approach to Wynyard's, and a dozen men along the rocks could hold it against a hundred. The trail that you came by over the ridge drops straight into this gully, and you saw what that would mean to any blanked fools who might try it. Of course we could be shelled from that ridge if the sheriff had a howitzer or the men also knew how to work one, but even then we could occupy the ridge before them." He paused a moment and then added: "I used to be in the army, Tom. I saw service in Mexico before that cub you got away from had his first trousers. I was brought up as a gentleman—blank it all!—and here I am."

(To Be Continued.)

FEARLESSNESS OF IGNORANCE.

Illustrated by a Tourist Who Insisted Upon Going Into a Crater.

Capt. Basil Hall tells one of those stories which are always coming up to prove that the man who knows nothing about a danger is the one to fear it least, and to neglect a salutary obedience toward those who have trodden a path before. The incident was narrated by an old guide at Vesuvius.

"A few years ago," said Salvatore, "I came up the mountain with a party of gentlemen, one of whom insisted on going not only around the cone, as we are doing now, but actually into the crater, though I told him that such an adventure was attended with more danger than the thing was worth.

"'Pooh! Pooh! Danger?' said the pig-headed gentleman. 'What do I care for danger? Am I not a soldier? Why, man, I have faced the foe before now! Lead the way, I'll follow.'

"I merely said that to face a human enemy and to face an active volcano were two very different things.

"'Are you afraid to go?' he asked.

"'I don't much admire it,' I answered; 'but as I think I know how to evade the danger when it comes—having been at the work for nearly half a century—I'll go into the crater if you are determined upon the adventure. Only I warn you again; the danger to an inexperienced person is very great.'

"'Well! Well!' he called impatiently, 'come along!' And away we went, he flourishing his stick like a sword, while I only shrugged my shoulders.

"'Now, sir,' I said to him, 'the only plan by which we can hope to accomplish the expedition in safety is to be perfectly steady, and if a shower of stones comes about our ears to stand as cool and collected as if nothing were happening. I hope we may not have any while we are in this awkward place, but if we should be so unfortunate, mind, your only chance is to stand fast and look forward. It requires good nerves, so brace them up!'

"'Oh, nerves,' said he, skeptically. 'Is that all? You shall see.'

"So away we went, climbed the lip of the cup, descended into the fearful abyss, and though half choked with the fumes, saw all we wished to see. We were on our return when the mountain roared like thunder, the ground shook, a furious eruption took place, and myriads of stones were shot a thousand feet into the air.

"'Now, signor, mio,' I called, 'stand your ground and make good use of your nerves! Look! Be steady, and you may yet escape.'

"But the man who had faced mortal foes quailed before the powers of nature. He looked up as he was bidden; but when he saw a cataract of fire falling on his head, the courage of which he had boasted forsook him, and incontinently he fled.

"For my part, I was too much afraid to fly. I never saw such a shower of stones, and I wonder we were not both demolished. As it was, my companion had not run far before he was struck down by these missiles.

"One of them broke his leg and another stunned him, and I had enough to do to get him out of the cone on my shoulders. Much work we had to take him to Naples, where the hotel keepers and the Italian doctors between them had the plucking of this precious pigeon for the next six months."—Youth's Companion.

No Salts.

This is a story that Charles Henry Webb—I dare say you've read Mr. Webb's exquisite verses in the current Harper's—tells of a Western experience of his. He happened to meet an old acquaintance in San Francisco a few years ago, and as there was grand opera in the city just then, Mr. Webb took the young daughter of his friend to hear "Faust." The girl was just out of a convent, and had never been in a theater in all her life before. As the curtain rose Mr. Webb handed her a pair of opera glasses. The girl looked at them for a moment. Then she raised them to her dainty nose, sniffing at first one side and then the other.

"Why," she said, as she handed the lorgnette back to her companion, "you ain't got any salts in them."—Washington Post.

A Legend Spoiled.

The Napoleonic legend tells how Napoleon, while Moscow was in flames, found time to draw up a decree organizing the Theater Francis, says the Paris "Messenger." Alas the story is not true. The French national archives have recently been overhauled, and it transpires that Napoleon was in Poland when he received the decree ready to be signed. He there signed it and sent it back to Paris, but in the margin wrote the following: "To be forwarded when the army will be at Moscow. It is His Majesty's intention that the decree should be dated from that town." The archives did not say whether the decree was sent to Moscow or not, but it was certainly not drawn up there.

Want Singing Anvils.

"It is not generally known," observed a prominent blacksmith recently, "that nearly all of the anvils used by blacksmiths in this country are made by one firm in Brooklyn, N. Y. All kinds of substitutes have been invented and put on the market, but after using them the blacksmith generally goes back to the wrought iron anvil, which is hand made. There are plenty of cast iron and steel anvils for sale, but they find but little favor from blacksmiths, who prefer an anvil that sings.

Leo's Cutting Rebuke.

Leo the Thirteenth, while filling the office of Nuncio at Brussels, was deeply offended, while dining out, by a baron who passed him a snuff box on the lid of which was enameled a feminine figure en diskabille. Admirably controlling his annoyance, his future holiness replied: "Very pretty! Is it your wife?"

"And when was it?" she asked tenderly, "that you made up your mind to propose?" He blushed and faltered, and tried to say that it was on a summer night, when she looked radiantly beautiful in the pale moonlight. As a matter of fact, it was one morning when the boarding-house coffee was exceptionally weak; but how could he tell her that?—Puck.

JEFFERSON WAS THE MAN.

In Catskill the Famous Actor Taken For the Original Old Rip.

Joseph Jefferson relates the following interesting incident:

"There is in the village of Catskill a Rip Van Winkle club. The society did me the honor to invite me to act the character in their town," said Mr. Jefferson. "I accepted, and when I arrived was met by the president and other members of the club, among whom was young Nicholas Vedder, who claimed to be a lineal descendent of the original Old Nick. I was taking a cup of tea at the table in the hotel," continued Mr. Jefferson, "when I was attracted to the colored waiter, who was giving a graphic and detailed account of the legend of the Catskill mountains to one of the boarders who sat nearly opposite me.

"'Yes, sah,' said the waiter, 'Rip went up into de mountains, slep' for 20 years, and when he come back here in dis berry town his own folks didn't know him.'

"'Why,' said his listener, 'you don't believe the story's true?'

"'True? Ob course it is! Why,' pointing at me," said Jefferson, "'dat's de man.'

"When I got to the theater," said Mr. Jefferson, resuming the story, "I could scarcely get in, the crowd was so great about the door. During the scene in the last act, when Rip inquires of the innkeeper, 'Is this the village of Falling Water?' I altered the text and substituted the correct name, 'Is this the village of Catskill?' The people in the crowded house almost seemed to hold their breath.

"The name of the village seemed to bring home the scene to every man, woman and child that was looking at it. From that time on the interest was at its full tension. Surely I had never seen an audience so struck with the play before.

"There was a reception held at the club after the play, and the president was so nervous that he introduced me as Washington Irving."—San Francisco Call.

Former Knights of the Road.

The dissolution of the monasteries had greatly increased vagrancy in the sixteenth century. Rich abbeys, like that of Reading, employed large numbers of workmen and servants, who when their masters had fallen into evil case were thrown upon a heartless world and took to robbery for a livelihood. The hospitia of the monasteries in the good old days always provided food and a bed for weary travelers, of whatever rank they were, and needy wanderers sorely felt the loss of their kind hosts. The rich courtiers grabbed the church's lands and wealth, and the poor folk followed their example by grabbing whatever they could lay their hands on. Consequently there were in these parts "a great stoare of stout vagabonds and maysterless men (able enough for labour), which do great hurt in the county by their idle and naughtie life." The unfortunate persons who were robbed could claim compensation from the inhabitants on the hundred in which the robbery took place. This old law was as ancient as the time of our great Berkshire king, Alfred; for who is ignorant of the fact that when gold bracelets were hung up by the roadside on account of the enforcement of this law and the fear of the vengeance of the hundred no one dared to remove them?

But when these highway robberies on Maidenhead thicket were so frequent, the burden of making compensation fell somewhat heavily on the inhabitants of the hundred of Benhurst. In one year they paid as much as £255 for robberies committed on unfortunate wayfarers. Therefore a special act of parliament was passed in 1597 in order to relieve the inhabitants from their burdens.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Greeks and Romans had no weekf until they borrowed this division os time from the east. The Greeks divided the month into three equal periods; the Romans into three very unequal—the kalends, ides and nones.

THE GLORY OF THE MOONLIGHT

Love and sorrow watched at midnight
While the firelight fell and faded.
Not a single lamp was burning,
And the last great bard of England,
Smiling on his mourning children,
Waited, like a saint transfigured,
In the glory of the moonlight.

Only from the outer shadow
Breezy murmurs, sweet and solemn,
Stirred the stillness of his chamber;
But he heard ethereal voices,
To the great harps of the cedars,
Chanting softly through the window,
In the glory of the moonlight.

Wrinkled, old and hoary-headed
Lay the king of all the singers:
But the bloom of heaven was on him,
And the eyes that watched him wondered,
And the hearts that loved him worshiped,
For the peace of God had found him,
In the glory of the moonlight.

Stream and forest, sea and mountain,
All their scenes of grief and gladness,
All his country's grand traditions,
Had a voice that night to mourn him;
And the farewells of all nations
Followed, sighing, where he vanished
In the glory of the moonlight.

Like a star he rose in beauty,
Like a sun he shone in splendor;
Shone through afternoon to evening
Every hour serener, sweeter,
Till the midnight dreaming o'er him
Left his cloudless soul translated
In the glory of the moonlight.

Dead, but cloudless still, we know him
In the memory of his manhood,
In the music of his verses;
And his radiant fame is hallowed
To the gaze of men forever,
And his triumph smiles immortal
In the glory of the moonlight.
—Theron Brown.

A SUMMER GIRL.

Mrs. Mason sat and watched the girls in a furtive sort of way. In fact, it might have been called a rude sort of way if it had been anybody else but Mrs. Mason, widow of the late Col. Hannibal Mason, of the United States army. That interesting fact, in addition to her own excellent pedigree as one of the Baltimore Stanleys, prevented Mrs. Mason's doing anything rude, of course, though she had been sitting on the hotel gallery for quite an hour, with her embroidery hoops in her lap, looking over her glasses at the young woman and young man who sat side by side, leaning over the banisters.

As to the man, he was Mrs. Mason's son, Stanley, a good-looking enough young fellow, with fair, smooth hair, which he parted in the middle; a pair of blue eyes that had a look of his mother's in them, and a mouth that needed developing. He was a youngish sort of a man, with an air of the college student about him still. The girl was a well-known summer type. There were tints about the roots of the yellow hair that gave evidence of a prehistoric existence, when it had been mud-colored instead of blonde. Her round cheeks had a shade more color in them than seemed necessary. Her lips were full and rosy and parted when she laughed, which is to say often, over teeth perfectly even and milky white. She wore a grass linen bicycle suit, a pink shirt waist, with white collars and cuffs, and a four-in-hand tie. Now and then as she talked she tapped the banister with the pointed toe of her tan boot in a way that showed an unnecessary length of the leggings that incased her slender ankles.

It was after a particularly vigorous tap of this kind and a little louder burst of laughter than usual, in which her son joined in a boyish, unrestrained sort of way, that Mrs. Mason got up and strolled slowly down the gallery toward them, carrying her embroidery hoops in her hand and looking well over her glasses far out to sea.

"Say, you aren't a bit nice this morning and I don't like you—so there!"

"Sure?"

"Sure," and she tapped the banisters and laughed again.

That is what Mrs. Mason heard as

ON THE HOTEL GALLERY.

she walked up, and when she put her slim, white, blue-veined hand on her son's shoulder she caught a gleam of what had been a wink on the girl's face and a sort of shame-faced bravado on his.

"So you aren't going out on your wheel?" the girl said, getting up and shaking out her skirts with her hand.

"No," Stanley drawled; "too hot."

"Sure," said the girl, with a significant laugh, "or it will be afterwards. Well, so long."

Mrs. Mason stood and watched the girl over her glasses as she walked noisily across the board veranda and disappeared down the steps.

"Don't you think you are wasting your time, Stanley?" she said, putting her hand on her son's shoulder again.

"Oh, don't bother, mother," he said, but he did not look up at her. "A fellow has to have a little fun."

"But what about the girl?" she went on, and this time she stroked his fair, smooth hair.

"Oh, that is a good one," Stanley laughed, as he threw back his head and turned his face up to his mother. "But don't you lose any sleep over her. She's a summer girl, you know."

The rolling of the rubber tires was inaudible on the asphalt beneath, but a moment later there was the quick ting of a bicycle bell, and the girl lifted her grass linen cap as she sped on toward the board walk. Had she heard? Stanley wondered, and he bit his smooth lip and wished he might run away after her and find out; but his mother's hand was on his arm.

"What did you say her name was?"

"Oh, Maloney," he said; "Birdie Maloney."

"Maloney," Mrs. Mason said, and her tone spoke volumes. "Birdie Maloney!"

Meantime Miss Birdie Maloney was wheeling away on her high grade bike, her rosy cheeks burning a deeper red and her heart beating a rapid tattoo beneath the tight folds of her pretty pink waist.

"Only a summer girl!" she said, and there was a sparkle of merriment in her voice. "Well, we shall see."

What Miss Birdie "saw" makes no difference just now, perhaps, but what Mrs. Mason saw that evening and the next morning, and, in fact, every evening and morning thereafter, was just Miss Birdie's self and Stanley dancing together, wheeling together, walking together, rowing together and bathing together. There was an odd sort of fascination about the girl that made her popular in the hotel. She danced well and sang well catchy sort of airs that smacked of the roof garden and the concert hall.

The guests had eyed her suspiciously at first, and said the half-old-maid, half-widow-looking individual whom she called aunt and who might have been her mother, had a snappy sort of air about her, as if she were accustomed to giving change at a ticket window. But, by and by, some of the less ultra relented and said Miss Birdie might be quite nice after all, and she certainly was very pretty. The majority of seashore people are not over particular, and the summer girl is seldom more than a vitascopic sort of creature, a life-size reproduction of a young woman who can flirt or dance or tip the wink, maybe, but who passes off of the canvas at the end of the season, going nowhere in particular, never to reappear. But Mrs. Mason was not the ordinary sort of a seashore visitor, and to her Miss Birdie Maloney was not quite the ordinary summer girl. Rather was she a siren who was likely to get her son into all manner of trouble, if she didn't go the extreme length of actually marrying him.

Mrs. Mason was a lady and she could not help showing it. But also she could not help showing just a shade more haughtiness of manner than usual when she passed Miss Birdie and her snappy, ticket-punching aunt in the hotel corridors or on the board walk, and there was a spirit of perversity in the girl that made her toss her yellow head more saucily at such times and smack her pretty gum-chewing lips more audibly.

In the meantime Stanley's mouth was developing. There was getting a little firmer set to the corners of it and a little stronger look of his mother in his blue eyes.

Birdie told him one evening that he was getting to be quite a man. They were sitting alone in the little pavilion on the fishing pier. The lights of Asbury Park gleamed behind them and straggled in faint rays far out to sea, where now and then a spark showed where a yacht lay at anchor. Just below the breakers surged and dashed, throwing their salt spray quite up into their faces.

"Of course I'm a man," Stanley said, catching the girl's hand and bending toward her. She laughed softly, and her pink waist over her heaving bosom rose and fell quite close to his shoulder.

"I am a man," he went on, "and I love you."

He had said that before. She waited a moment.

"And I want you to marry me, Birdie—honestly I do."

A long breath surged through Miss Birdie Maloney's relaxed nostrils and parted lips.

"Sure?" she said softly.

"Sure," he answered, and he took her hand in his and his lips brushed her face.

Miss Birdie let her hand rest in his a moment, and then somehow she got his hand in hers.

"So we are engaged?" she said very gently.

"If you will only say so, Birdie," and there was more than a spark of manliness in the boy's tone.

"And if I do, how is it to end? What will your mother say?"

"I don't care what she says," Stanley broke in. "I want you for my wife—honestly I do."

Miss Birdie was twirling the diamond on his little finger. It had been his mother's ring. But a moment later he had slipped it off, and when they got back to the hotel that night it was Miss Birdie's finger and not his that wore it.

Miss Birdie sat very demurely through breakfast the next morning. Mrs. Mason, who was opposite her at table, thought for the first time that there was almost an air of refinement about the poise of her head, but as they left the table the girl rose, too, pushing her chair back with downcast eyes. A moment later she had slipped her arm through Stanley's, and, looking into Mrs. Mason's face in a way that was quite innocent and almost sweet, she said: "I thought you would like to be told the very first one—Stanley and I are engaged."

She had spoken quite gently, but in a voice that was audible to the whole tableful. A hush fell over the dining room, and those who heard, wondering what Mrs. Mason would do, saw her turn to her son, and heard her say quite clearly:

"From this day forth you are no son of mine." Then a moment later she had lifted her proud head and swept by Miss Birdie Maloney as if she had been the dirt beneath her feet. But the girl was no whit disconcerted. Twirling the ring upon her finger so that the diamond flashed conspicuously, she too passed out with an air as lofty almost as Mrs. Mason's own.

The scene had not been a pleasant one. Only the gossips were glad of the episode. There were some who heard what passed who said they admired the girl's spunk, and that she was serving the old lady right; there were more, men, those who had tolerated Miss Birdie themselves, who pitied the proud woman, whose pride had been trampled in the dust by the girl's audacity. No; it had not been a pleasant scene; but before night everybody in the hotel knew of it, of course.

Mrs. Mason had not appeared at luncheon; but at dinner she came down as proud and stately as ever; but there were circles about her eyes and lines about her mouth that had not been there before.

Miss Birdie and Stanley led the german that evening, and the girl contrived to make it an ovation, and congratulations were showered upon them. Mrs. Mason, from her patroness' chair, saw and heard nothing. She sat as if carved from stone; but the heaviness of her heart was almost beyond bearing.

The next morning Mrs. Mason was sitting alone on one of the benches on the board walk. She had gone up to Eighth avenue that she might avoid the crowd. The water was cold and there was a heavy sea on, and fewer bathers than usual were in the surf. By and by even those few came in, hurrying to the bath house or sitting on the sands, cold and shivering.

Suddenly there was a cry for help, that last faint, feeble cry of the terror-stricken, that is like no other note ever uttered, and which pierces like a sword thrust the ear of the hearer. The bath-

"I MEANT WHAT I SAID. I HAVE GIVEN HIM BACK TO YOU."

ers on the sand and the idlers on the board walk hurried to the water's edge, calling and shouting, and presently someone called: "It is Stanley Mason. See, there beyond the last post!"

Mrs. Mason sprang to her feet with a wild cry that rang out above the tumult and above the surging of the billows at her feet.

"Save my child!" she cried; "save my child!" The mother's heart had spoken.

But his case was almost hopeless. Far out beyond the ropes she could see the boy struggling with the breakers. Would no one go to his rescue? The crowd was few and all were timid. "Call the bathing master," they shouted, and people ran hither and thither. But it was a long way to the guards' station, and nobody did anything.

Once, twice, the boy had gone under.

"Oh, save my child!" and the mother ran across the sands until the water dashed about her waist, reaching her arms out across the waves.

God! Would no one go to him?

Suddenly, through the thick of the crowd, someone was pushing. It was a girl in a grass linen bicycle suit and a pink shirt waist. She had stripped off her leggins and her tan boots and tossed off her jacket and her hat, but that was all. A moment later she sprang into the surf and swam out arm over arm in long, sweeping strokes.

"Come back, for God's sake, or you will be drowned," some one shouted, but the girl did not swerve.

The people on the shore held their breath, but the girl kept on, and when at last a big white cap broke and scattered at their feet they saw Miss Birdie Maloney swimming into land, bringing Stanley along with her.

"I have brought you your son," she said a moment later, as she laid the boy's limp body at his mother's feet. There was a touch of defiance in the girl's voice, but the flood-gates were opened in the mother's heart and she held out her arms and threw them around the girl. There was no pride then in the tearful mother's eyes; no scorn in the poise of her fine gray head. Miss Birdie's look of defiance faded before the softening picture, and without a word she slipped away, leaving the mother with her son.

That afternoon Miss Birdie heard a gentle rap on her door and opened it to see Mrs. Mason standing without.

"I wanted to speak to you," said Mrs. Mason, looking about her at the tumbled room. Drawers and trunks were standing open and the bed was piled with dresses. There were evidences of packing all about.

"I have come to ask you to forgive me," said Mrs. Mason, putting her slim white hand on the girl's shoulder.

"Oh, you needn't do that," Birdie said.

"But I want to do it," Mrs. Mason went on. "I want you to forgive me. I have misunderstood you, perhaps. I have not been quite just to you, but I love my son; he is all I have in the world."

"Yes," the girl said.

"You love him, too, perhaps," his mother said. "You have promised to be his wife. You have risked your life for him."

"I have promised to marry him. I have risked my life for him," the girl repeated slowly. Then suddenly she broke into a short laugh that was not pleasant to hear. "I have risked my life for him! What is that to do? What is my life worth? What is my life worth to such as you—you who have scorned me and trampled upon me? I hadn't meant to do anything about it, but since you have come, I may as well tell you. If you had acted differently I shouldn't have done what I did. If you had treated me once—just once—as if I were anything but dirt beneath your feet, I shouldn't have made you suffer as I did. But I couldn't help it. It made me mean. I never thought I was mean before, but you made me so, and I just wanted to see your proud head humbled. But I am satisfied. I took your son away from you, but I have given him back to you. I meant what I said this morning down on the beach. I have given him back to you."

"What do you mean? That you will not marry him? That you do not love him?"

Mrs. Mason's heart stood still with hope, though her pride had been humbled.

The girl laughed again, a hard, cold laugh, that had no mirth in it.

"You love him," she said, "and yet you know no more about love than that? I love him well enough to have risked my life for him, you said. That was nothing. I love him better than that. I love him well enough to go away and never let him see me again. I know I am not fit to be his wife. I know that some day he will be the man you want him to be. Then I shall not be fit for him. And this morning, there on the beach, when you put your arms around me, I knew what I should do. I came back to the hotel and wrote a letter to Stanley. He will get it to-morrow, with the ring I made him give me. By that time I shall be where he can never find me. I love him well enough for that, but he shall never know it."

"God help me, but love like that makes you fit to be his wife," Mrs. Mason said, reverently.

The girl smiled. "You had better go back to him now," she said wearily. "But you won't give me away? The people in the hotel will say you have bought me off and you must let them. That won't hurt me." She waited a moment. "Stanley will say I was only a summer girl, after all. Well, no matter; he'll get over it by and by, and perhaps I have helped to make a man of him." The girl's voice quavered.

"Will you let me kiss you before I go?" asked Mrs. Mason.

The next day, as Stanley lay propped up among the pillows longing for the strength to get up and out to find Birdie, the bell boy came and brought her note to him. The ring tumbled out of the envelope as he opened it. What he read was this:

"Well, so long, Stanley. You've been a first-rate beau and made me have an awfully good time, but of course you understand you were only a summer boy. Good-by. BIRDIE."

There were tears in his eyes when he tossed the note into his mother's lap, and he turned his face to the wall to hide them. There were tears in hers, too, but deep down in her heart there was rejoicing that her son was restored unto her scatheless, and she kept her promise.

Loading Fodder Made Easy.

Low wagons are a great convenience, greatly lessening labor in filling silos, hauling fodder, manure, etc. A number of low frames to be attached to ordinary wagons have been illustrated in these columns during the past year. F. N. Buckingham, of Iowa, describes in American Agriculturist the fodder loader shown. It has been used in Iowa with very satisfactory results. The timbers a a are the hayrack supports on a wagon high or low. The loader is attached at b b, by means of a long bolt; c is a 2x4 which extends under the wagon and has a sharp iron point at d; e is attached to the loader at e e e by means of a long bolt forming a hinge joint. The shock is laid crosswise, and no matter how large the shock, when the team starts, the iron point d catches in the ground and throws the loader up over the wagon, dropping the fodder on the rack. Two or three shocks can be put on at once. The loader is left on the field. Make of material sufficiently strong to hold the number of shocks put on each time.

NOVEL FODDER LOADER.

Clip the Queen's Wings.

From long experience in managing an apiary, we have come to the conclusion that clipping the queen's wings is a decided advantage. No swarms will then escape to the woods. The owner can go from home, attend church, without having his mind disturbed with thoughts of losing swarms in his absence. It is better to do this than run the risk of losing excellent queens and swarms. The bees will never leave for good if the queen does not accompany them. This, of course, has reference to first swarms, as second swarms may issue at any time, with a young queen fully fledged, like Minerva from the head of Jove, ready for flight and legitimate business. These latter can also be prevented by opening the hives after they have cast swarms, examining carefully the combs and cutting out all queen cells, but one in each hive. If this is done no second swarm will issue.—Colman's World.

Floating Fence.

An excellent water fence is shown herewith. Some short cross logs support one, two or more lengths of stout rails that form the bottom of the fence. Holes are bored in these, in which upright stakes are driven to support the upper rail. The lengths of fence are chained together. The outer log is anchored up-stream and down-stream with sufficient length of chain to permit the rising and falling of the fence. This plan is splendid for tide water rivers, and good wherever the rise is not likely to be so sudden as to wash it away.

SECURE FLOATING FENCE.

Do Away with the Swill Barrel.

Because a hog will eat anything is no reason why it should be either offered or allowed to eat decayed, odorous and unclean food. It is expected that ultimately the hog will be eaten by ourselves or some one who would like to be as squeamish about taking anything that is unclean into their systems. There ought to be no such thing as a swill barrel, holding for weeks and even months a compound of sour milk, dish washings and other refuse from the kitchen or table. There is no reason why the daily product of swill should not be eaten as soon as made. Every day's neglect to dispose of it lessens its value, besides the danger which every neglected swill barrel is to the health of all in the house, or even in the neighborhood.

System on the Farm.

In every department of labor the essential to success is a systematic method. System is especially needed in farm work, because thrift of so many living things is in the power of the farmer. There should be a regular hour for feeding stock. Animals soon learn the hour for their meals when given regularly, and are impatient of delay. Bawling, bleating or squealing for an hour before each meal does not hasten the development of fat in calves, lambs or pigs. At other times the food is given too soon, the animal not being hungry and not prepared to make the best use of it. There should be a certain hour at which to begin feeding in the morning and a time at which to quit feeding at night, or rather evening, for we don't believe in feeding after dark except in the shortest December days. The farmer who feeds his stock by lantern light during spring and fall months will be apt to get crops in late and pick corn till holidays. The family meals should not vary ten minutes from the specified time, neither should the men ever keep meals waiting. Children should be off to school on time, neither too late or too early. They will be more apt to have their lessons on time if everything is regular at home. The work is so much easier to do when every one knows his time and place; life is pleasanter and happy times come oftener. System preserves health, for we know that worry kills more persons than disease.

Poultry Pointers.

Buckwheat is fattening; when fed sparingly is egg producing.

Sell the culls as soon as possible, in order to save feed and give more room.

Do not set the drinking vessels too low; if you do the fowls will scratch dirt into them.

Let the nests be in a dark place. The hens like it better, and are less liable to acquire the habit of egg eating.

Fowls left to select their food, doubtless would take seeds, insects and grass. We should come as near as possible supplying these preferences.

If your hens lay soft shelled eggs it is because there is not enough lime in their food. Feed them grit—gravel, oyster shell, plaster or ground bone.

There is considerable difference between selling eggs for 10 cents and 25 or 30 cents a dozen, consequently it will pay to pack them in salt. Salt is cheap, and packing eggs in it does not destroy it.

Captain Heaton, the well-known English game fowl enthusiast, once paid $500 for a black-red game cockerel, and the results proved the purchase to have been one of the best investments he ever made. The bird formed the foundation of his now famous flock.

The Van Deman Strawberry.

Some years ago an enthusiastic strawberry grower, realizing that a new strawberry was needed to take the place of the Wilson and Downing as a fertilizer and at the same time prove a healthy, productive, firm market berry, sowed a lot of Crescent seed crossed by Captain Jack, Sharpless and Crystal City. Of these but two proved valuable, one, named the Van Deman, and which was a Capt. Jack cross, and the Lady Jane, a Sharpless cross. The Van Deman showed signs of superiority the first season, and for several seasons since has given very satisfactory results in many extensive commercial berry fields. It has been tested in twenty-seven States and with generally favorable results.—Farm and Home.

WELL-TESTED BERRY.

Horticultural Hints.

Fresh lime for snails.

The nicer the appearance of fruit the better the price.

If plums are to be shipped long distances forward by express.

Apples are selling in the State of New York at 60 cents per barrel.

The first year after the tree is planted is the time to prune and shape the tree.

How much did the garden contribute to the support of the family this summer?

Don't haul your fruit to market in a lumber wagon, but use a strong spring wagon with a large platform. It saves your fruit from mashing.

If you mix windfalls with picked fruit they will detract from the fine qualities of your fruit, from the prices and worst of all, from the excellence of your reputation. Keep them separate.

If the ants are cutting the leaves off your fruit trees fasten a wisp of loose cotton around the stem of the tree between ground and the first branch; the ants tangle in this and can't climb over it.

In packing fruit for shipment no purpose is served by ventilation other than the escape of moisture. The contact of fresh air hastens decay. Have the package on the outside as dry as possible.

Just after the gathering of fall apples prices are usually low; better profit would be obtained if they could be held until the early winter months. Let them be sorted and stored in a perfectly dry room, with a very low temperature.

Queerly Worded.

The following piece of English composition is vouched for by the Christian Register, the signature alone being changed. It was copied from a notice posted on a Massachusetts building:

NOTICE.

Tenants should be careful not to throw cigars or lighted matches about. Otherwise, they may set fire to the building, and oblige

A FOOT-RACE FOR FREEDOM.

A Christian Lad Gives the Victory to a Greek Slave.

The amphitheater was enormous. All around the oval sandy level of the arena the seats rose, tier after tier, and from them eighty thousand spectators were looking down in eager expectation. Cyril hardly saw them, although the Emperor himself was there, and all the splendid array of the richest people of Rome itself, with kings and nobles and chiefs from all the world tributary to Rome. For one moment he was thinking and he was listening. He and Apollos were side by side, in the foremost rank, and he heard the Greek boy murmur:

"Mother—father—my brethren and my sisters—if I win not their freedom, I hope Tallienus will slay me!"

Cyril did not turn to look at him, for he was thinking:

"The first prize or the quarries—I must win, or I shall not be with Jesus of Nazareth when he enters Jerusalem."

The trumpet sounded again from near where the Emperor sat, and the racers were off, all together. Not one of them but was a good runner, and there were several smaller prizes; but the race was little more, after all, than an occasion for gambling to the dissipated, corrupt, idle populace of Rome. It was evil, evil, evil, like all the other games of the Roman circus!

A splendid runner was Apollos, and he shot ahead with a great bound that called forth plaudits from the spectators. Close behind him, quickly, came several others, but before the runners were a third of the way around the arena one of these tripped and fell, and another fell over him.

"They will be scourged!" thought Cyril. "More than half the rest are behind me now. But the pace is too fast at the beginning."

Several more were shortly compelled to slacken their pace and Cyril passed them; but still, away in the front, with an elastic, springing step, the tall young Greek kept the lead.

"The Greek will win!" growled Valerianus to Crispus, who sat beside him. "The Greek is twenty paces ahead of thy Gallican. I will send him to the galleys!"

"Only ten paces now," said Crispus, calmly, after a few minutes. "O noble Valerianus, it is the last circuit that tells."

Just then the runners came nearer, and Valerianus was silent until they had passed. The race included one more complete round of the arena.

"All are out of the race but those two," muttered the noble Roman. "I shall lose half my fortune if that Jewish boy fails me. What! See—they are abreast! Bacchus! My Jew is winning!"

Not yet. There was still a long race before him, but he and Apollos ran side by side, and the circus rang with the loud applause of the multitude.

Other runners were not far behind, but it seemed evident that the first prize was between these two. Until that moment, Cyril had had no thought but of winning if he could; but suddenly he cast a swift glance at the face of Apollos. It was somewhat pale instead of flushed, and Cyril saw a look of terror, almost of agony, in his eyes.

"He is breathing with difficulty," thought Cyril, "and I shall beat him! But—he and his family will be slaves forever if I win!"

Cyril was ahead now, and the plaudit sprang out again.

"Thy sestertia are safe," said Crispus to Valerianus.

"I will slay that Greek!" hissed Tallienus.

Cyril heard a gasping cry as Apollos put forth all his remaining strength, for they were nearing the goal.

"I can give him his freedom!" flashed into the mind of Cyril. "They may slay him—or me. Shall I?"

Then it was as if he heard certain words—but in truth he only remembered— words he had heard the Master say long ago, upon the mount in Galilee. Cyril could not have told his thought, but in the next moment he spoke in Greek to Apollos:

"Win thou, Apollos! Jesus of Nazareth has bidden me to set thee free!"

Cyril had to slacken his speed, for the Greek was beginning to falter.

One moment more, and they were over the line, with Apollos the winner by only half a pace.—St. Nicholas.

Prehistoric Horse of the Rockies.

Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, of the American Museum of Natural History, in the Century describes the remarkable fossil remains that are found near Bridger Lake in the Rockies. He says:

If we leave the lake shore, and pass into the drier upland, we discover the clever little four-toed horse, swift, alert, intelligent. He is, to use the modern measure, only four hands, or sixteen inches, high, so he would not reach the knee of the Uintathere, and could be devoured at one sitting by the Patriotelis. His limbs are as slender as pencils. His large eyes are much farther forward than in the horse. He could readily hide among the taller stalks, and it is possible that he had the beginning of protective stripes imitating reed shadows upon his neck and mane. In his hair and coloring, however, we pass into pure conjecture. His well-worn chisel-shaped front teeth indicate that he was already a cropper or browser, and the evident secret of his triumphant persistence over his ponderous contemporaries is that he learned to browse just about the time that grasses began to appear.

Henry Labouchere, the world-famous editor of the London Truth, has treated the case of the Castles in a most remarkable manner, when the very mild and even sympathetic expressions of other prominent English journalists are considered. The cable dispatch gives a digest of the page and a half which Mr. Labouchere devotes to the case. He says he does not believe in kleptomania, for it only seems to attack the rich. He regards the case as remarkable for the many articles stolen in Vienna which passed the Custom Houses on the way to England without exciting the surprise of the inspecting officers. This is the caustic manner in which the English writer concludes his review of the case:

"On the morning of Mrs. Castle's sentence, a seamstress and a governess were sentenced at the same session, to nine and six months hard labor for stealing a fur necklet, and neither had been previously convicted. The governess fainted at the sentence. No medical experts testified that they were kleptomaniacs; no eminent counsel suggested that they would suffer in health by confinement; no one pitied them, and no one signed a petition to the Home Secretary to shorten their sentences. What matters how a poor, fainting and friendless governess, or a half-starved seamstress, suffer? Give them hard labor, and plenty of it. What if their health is injured? Let them die. Let Mrs. Castle out of prison, Sir Matthew White Redley; she has moved in the best circles, and she has no need to steal; but do not reduce the sentences of the seamstress and governess by a single day. The best circles know them not. They are poor and helpless; which, in the opinion of all self-respecting persons, is in itself a crime."

The Supreme Court, which is now in Sacramento, has given Durrant two weeks more in which to present his argument for a reopening of the case, in order that he may be able to file briefs. The motion on which the continuance was granted was made by Attorneys Deuprey and Dickinson, who backed it with affidavits that an agreement with Attorney General Fitzgerald and lack of time were responsible for the failure to file the brief in Los Angeles. The Attorney General has made no objection to the request of Durrant's counsel and it will in time be allowed. This will delay the decision on the appeal until at least next fall—two years from the close of the trial. The Durrant case should prove a wholesome lesson to the people of California. It is a brilliant example of how not to do it. It is a pity that our admiration of English promptness in court business does not find expression in imitation.

Governor Budd says: "The suggestion that the mining interests of the country should be represented in the Cabinet by a Minister is timely. I believe Congress ought to create a Cabinet position of that character. Agriculture is now represented in the Cabinet, and the mining industry of the United States should have equal recognition. An act of Congress is all that is needed to establish the proposed office. The duties of the Minister might be extended to a control or supervision of the whole coinage system of the Government.

On March 4th, 1897, the Senate will comprise 38 Gold Republicans, 8 gold Democrats, 10 silver Republicans, 25 silver Democrats and 10 Populists. It is expected that Kyle will go back to the Republicans, and give them 2 majority. The House will comprise 218 Republicans, 118 Democrats and 24 Republican-Populists.

Olney has a chance to make ten-strike on the Cuban question before he goes out of office.

DIED.

SMITH.—At Keeler, Nov. 15, 1896, William C. Smith, a native of New York, aged 51 years.

Rumors hymeneal are in the air. 3

J. H. Dehy was down from Laws this week.

Ed. Schober of Bishop was in town this week.

The weather continues glorious, thanks to McKinley's election.

Mr. E. H. Edwards and wife of Lone Pine were in town Tuesday.

Nathan Gilbert, of Deep Spring valley, was a visitor at Independence yesterday.

Charlie Robinson is engaged hauling ore for Julius Schroder from Mt. Kearsarge

Gilbert Christie, J. W. Murphy and Mat McDonald left about a week ago for Coso Springs.

Rudolph Schober arrived from Bishop with his big team on Wednesday, and started on to Mojave Thursday.

Miss Etta Naylor is acting agent at the Dayton office during the absence of W. W. Collin in Hawthorne.—Times.

Miss Nellie Reynolds, who has been visiting in the vicinity of Bishop for the past month, returned last Monday.

John Keegan and G. W. Brady have gone to Coso Springs in hopes that the baths there may eradicate all signs of Rheumatism.

Mrs. Julia Welch and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Cynthia Welch, of Laws were in town this week on land office business.

Sheepmen are taking their flocks south, on their way out of the county. They are in hopes that the new administration will boom their business.

Do you play whist? If not, get in and learn, but remember that the first rule is, whist, whist! If you want to make a woman do hard penance set her at a game with this rule before her in big letters.

In a recent letter from Dr. T. A. Keables, he says he expects to visit our county shortly for the purpose of investigating the needs agricultural, etc., of our country, in order to bring them before the coming session of the Legislature.

P. W. Bennett, Esq., accompanied by Mrs. Bennett, leave Independence tomorrow for Los Angeles. Mr. Benaett intends to visit Randsburg on the way down and find out what the prospects of the new camp are. The numerous friends of Mr. and Mrs. Bennett view their departure with regret, and join us in wishing them well in their new home.

William Smith, brother of Arthur Smith, was stricken with apoplexy last Friday. He was taken ill at Modock, but was brought to Keeler as soon as possible. Though medical aid was secured immediately, the stroke proved fatal and he died Sunday evening. The deceased was an old-timer and has been interested in the mines of the county for fifteen years past. He was 51 years old.

The Independence base ball nine have received a challenge from the Bishop nine to play at Bishop on Thanksgiving day for a purse of $25. Our boys are eager to try their luck with the Bishop boys, but their Captain, George Naylor, is working at the Reward mill and cannot take the few days off that would be necessary if the boys went to Bishop. The game, if it ever transpires, will be an interesting one.

From Aberdeen.

Mr. Chas. Walter and Mr. Irv. Mulholland were hunting quail among the black rocks. The birds undoubtedly had a narrow escape.

Mr. J. W. Callaway with a force of men has been to Waucoba for a supply of fuel.

Mr. Will Hines is assisting Mr. J. Erwin of Fish Springs on his farm at that place.

AT MAZOURKA.

In company with J. C. Roeper we made a trip up Mazourka canyon yesterday. Upon reaching the foot-hills near Citrus evidence of the prospectors presence were seen. This country has been known to contain mineral for upwards of forty years. In the early 60's the thriving town of San Carlos was situated about three miles north of Citrus, nothing but the foundations now remaining in evidence of its former site. From this town the prospector radiated in all directions, and the hills for miles around are burrowed out with prospect holes. On some of the claims tunnels have been run to considerable length and shafts sunk many feet in depth. Except some desultory assessment work, however, there has been no quartz mining in the district for years. The formation where the ledges have been sought for is blue lime and the mineral contained is lead and silver. Were those metals as valuable as they were twenty years ago a large number of men would be at work there now. Further up Mazourka a slate formation comes in and in the ravines and gullies cutting through it placer gold has been found in paying quantities. There is no water, however, except for domestic purposes, and the ground is worked with dry-washers. The two best claims are the Bonanza gulch, from which about $20,000 has been taken out, and the Laberge & and Pobst gulch. A force of five men are at work on the latter claim. The pay dirt is about four feet from the surface and is in a strata of gravel about two feet thick lying on the slate bedrock. The waste dirt is scraped off with dump scrapers, leaving the "pay" to be run through the machine. The gulch will average about twenty feet wide on the bottom. While at the camp two small "runs" were made, probably forty shovelfuls of dirt being washed, from which about four dollars was taken out. This claim pays very regular, averaging about twenty dollars per day to the man for each working day. They still have about four hundred yards of virgin ground. M. Laprairie and George Thorpe are sinking a shaft in the main canyon a short distance above the water barrels and at a point where the Bonanza gulch opens into it. All of the best paying gulches open into the main canyon, and it is thought that good pay will be found on the slate bedrock of the canyon. About a mile below the shaft referred to J. C. Roeper and E. Robinson sunk to a depth of 125 feet without reaching bedrock, when they were compelled to stop because of reaching water. Where Laprairie and Thorpe are sinking, the walls of the canyon are not so precipitous, and it is thought that they will strike bedrock at about 100 feet. There are a few other partties scattered through the hills, but we did not run across any of them. The best pay is found in soft shale and fine dust of decomposed slate. The gold has a molten appearance, and seems to have been deposited by chemical action. There is strong reason to believe that a rich quartz lead will be found somewhere in that region, though the country is so broken up in surface that it may be covered to a great depth.

Thanksgiving Proclamation.

President Cleveland has issued the following Thanksgiving proclamation:

The people of the United States should never be unmindful of the gratitude they owe to the God of nations for His watchful care, which has shielded them from disaster and pointed out to them the way of peace and happiness; nor should they ever refuse to acknowledge with contrite hearts their proneness to turn away from God's teachings and to follow with sinful pride after their own devices. To the end that these thoughts may be quickened, it is fitting that on a day especially appointed we should join together in approaching the throne of grace with praise and supplication.

Therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the 26th day of the present month of November, to be kept and observed as a day of thanksgiving and prayer throughout our land. On that day let all our people forego their usual work and occupation, and assembled in their accustomed places of worship, let them with one accord render thanks to the ruler of the universe for our preservation as a nation and our deliverance from every threatened danger; for the peace that has dwelt within our boundaries; for our defense against disease and pestilence daring the year that has passed; for the plenteous rewards that have followed the labors of our husbandmen; and for all other blessings that have been vouchsafed to us. And let us, through the mediation of Him who has taught us how to pray, implore the forgiveness of our sins and a continuation of heavenly favor.

Let us not forget on this day of thanksgiving the poor and needy and by deeds of charity let our offerings of praise be made more acceptable in the sight of the Lord.

Witness my hand and the seal of the United States which I have caused to be hereto fixed. Done at the City of Washington, this fourth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and twenty-first.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President.

Crazed by Liquor.

Last Sunday Mr. F. McIver and Mr. Wells Barnes brought to the County Jail Samuel Harris, who was evidently suffering from delirium tremens. It seems that Harris had been on a protracted spree since before election day. He left here a few days after election going to Lone Pine, Keeler and Darwin. Last Saturday evening he returned to Mr. McIver's ranch, which is on Eastside and near the Hirsch mine, where Harris had formerly been employed, and requested that he be given blankets to make a bed. His request was complied with and he was furnished a bed. Early in the morning the men on the place were awakened by Harris' ravings, who was snarling, growling and barking like a dog, and was perfectly wild. He was soon overpowered and brought to town. After being placed in the jail he continued to growl and bark, and when food was given him he would grab it with both hands and eat it as ravenously as a half-starved beast. It was nearly impossible to get him to take medicine, as he imagined that every one was trying to poison him. Tuesday morning, during one of his paroxysms, he in some manner procured a small pocket knife and tried to cut his throat. He succeeded in cutting an ugly looking gash under his chin and to the left of his throat and dangerously near the jugular vein. As soon as he commenced to bleed freely he called lustily for help and gave up the knife with which he attempted his own destruction. The guardian angel of the drunkard hovered over him, for with the aid of Drs. Woodin and Blair, who put a few stitches in his neck, he soon rallied, and seems but little worse for his attack upon himself.

Time Will Tell.

Mr. Sharkey, rejoicing in the invigorating breezes that pour in across the ocean and flood his training quarters with ozone, expresses and no doubt feels perfect confidence in the result of his coming meeting with Mr. Fitzsimmons. It is a joyful thing to be young and strong and unlicked. But the sports—those experienced, well-balanced and cold-blooded gentlemen who make their living by sizing up coming events upon which there may be a difference of opinion among the public, are going to put their money upon Fitzsimmons, and the outlook is that when the gong taps on the night of December 2d, the betting will be 10 to 3 on the freckled phenomenon from the antipodes. The experts concede Sharkey's courage, strength and youth, and yet they are of the private opinion that before four rounds have been concluded Sharkey will not be able to tell the difference between a sailor and a marine. Such is the high estimate put upon the New Zealander's experience, skill and peculiarly good equipment. He is also credited with courage, which is more than some of Sharkey's prominent opponents have proved to have.—S. F. Report.

Woman Suffrage in Utah.

A Salt Lake dispatch of November 8th says: Martha Hughes Cannon is the first woman who was ever elected to a State Senate in America. She lives in Salt Lake City. She is a Mormon and she is a Democrat. She ran against her husband in the same district, and she beat him into the State Senate of Utah by a neat little majority of 4,000 votes. She believes in woman suffrage, she believes in polygamy, and she most heartily disbelieves in the prohibition of intoxicating liquors. She is called the fourth wife of Angus M. Cannon. Mr. Cannon is a leading elder in the Mormon Church, and he stands in the first order of precedence for appointment as one of the twelve apostles. He has four wives living in neighborly communion. None of the four, however, has the least legal claim on the man whose name she bears.

THE MAN OF MODERATE MEANS.

How at Last He Became a True Expert In Patches on Shoes.

"I thought I was a connoisseur in patches," said the man of moderate means, "for I had four patches on each shoe. I used to laugh as I looked at them and fancy that I might almost call myself an expert. But, alas, as I soon discovered, I was scarcely more than an amateur.

"In the course of time a new crack developed in one of my shoes, in the upper, crosswise of the shoe and about midway between the sole and the top or highest point of the shoe. At the same time a patch along the welt on the same side started loose, and I took the shoe to the shoemaker. He had put other patches on my shoes in the most perfect manner, and he had always treated me when I came for a new patch with the same politeness as though I had come each time for a pair of new shoes.

"He looked the shoe over, and said he would make one patch to cover both places, the place along the welt and the new crack in the top. This was obviously the thing to do. It would make one patch instead of two, and so would look better, and, with its greater area and wider distribution of the wearing strain, it would last longer than two smaller patches. So he put it on that way; running along the welt and then making a turn and running up to cover the crack in the top.

"As I looked at the new L shaped patch I realized how limited my previous knowledge of patches had been. I had had many patches, but they had been but commonplace, just plain, ordinary patches, but as I looked at the new patch—and looking down at my shoes I saw in them (and in the near future, if I would keep them in repair) the prospective need of other patches, alphabetical and geometrical—I knew that I was now in a fair way to become an expert indeed."—New York Sun.

Too Vague on One Point.

"Your story is a little vague at one point," said the publisher, and the young woman naturally wanted to know the whereabouts of the alleged vagueness.

"Where you say," exclaimed the publisher, "that 'she, defeated in argument, had no recourse but to woman's most effective weapons against the tyrant man.' Now, do you refer there to tears or flatirons?"—Liverpool Mercury.

KONGO CANNIBALS.

DESCRIBED BY A MISSIONARY WHO KNOWS THEM WELL.

Their Appetite For Human Flesh Illustrated by Scenes That Father Allaire Has Witnessed—A Life That Is Constantly Beset With Dangers.

Father Allaire, missionary apostolic to the French Kongo, was recently in France to order a small iron steamboat to be used in visiting the mission stations, and was persuaded while there to contribute to Le Correspondant an account of his work and its field. The courageous fathers of the French Catholic missions in Africa visit regions hitherto scarcely known to white men, and, living habitually far beyond the bounds of the new African civilization, have peculiar opportunities of studying unmodified savage life. Father Allaire has been for ten years in the French Kongo, and for the last six years at Liranga.

His home station of Liranga is surrounded by cannibal tribes, and not only has he time and again declined hospitable invitations to take part in a cannibal feast, but more than once he has discerned among his neighbors a hankering after his own flesh.

"You are wrong," said a cannibal when the father turned in disgust from an offer of human flesh. "You should taste it, and after that you'd never turn away; it is so good."

A cannibal, bearing aloft a bloody human head, said to the father:

"That is the head of one you knew well. We ate him three days ago. He was delicious. You should have come earlier so as to have a taste."

Cannibalism is a veritable passion with some of the father's black neighbors. Rescued slaves tell him, and he believes it, that there are in the interior chiefs who eat no flesh save that of girls and boys from 10 to 16 years of age. He made a journey up the Kongo to the land of the fierce Bondjos, strangers to him, with the hope of buying children out of slavery and taking them back to the mission station. When he reached Ngomboc, an agglomeration of six or seven large cannibal villages, he was constantly saluted with the words:

"Sell us children. We will buy, but not sell them."

The cannibals had evidenntly heard of his mission, and the journey was in vain. When he was about to return, a chief invited him to anchor opposite a village, saying:

"Show your goods there, and my people will fetch down the slave children to sell."

The father accepted the invitation, climbed with difficulty the steep embankment, more than 30 feet high, upon which stood the fortified village, and entered the place with an interpreter and a few followers. Sixty savages surrounded the priest, and he and the chief went through the famous form of blood brotherhood, each making a slight wound in his arm and permitting the outflowing streams of blood to mingle. The father then discovered that there were no women or children in sight, and that the points of spears were trembling behind the houses. The chief suddenly demanded gifts for himself and all his men.

There was silence in the village, while the blacks babbled ceaselessly in the sun, and the lances peeped out here and there from behind the huts. The father answered that he would be glad to pay handsomely for any slaves that should be brought to the beat. At this the chief seized his left hand and bade him begone. When the father was ready to make the steep descent of the bank, he saw a stalthy giant just ready to lance one of the men from the steamboat. His left hand still grasped by the chief, the father aimed his uncharged rifle at the negro below, and the latter, dropping his weapon, drew back.

The next instant the chief had pushed the father over the bank. He lay stunned for a second, but rose unhurt to find the savage lancers attacking his own men, and the latter casting themselves into the river for safety. Quickly loading his rifle, he turned upon the attacking party, but at sight of the loaded weapon the negroes fled. Once on the boat the father found that none of his men was wounded. One, the black interpreter, was missing, and he was soon discovered making ready to storm the village. He declared that with two rifles the missionary party could sack the place, and was disgusted when the father refused to undertake the task.

"It is curious," said the interpreter, "that when these people were making ready to eat you you are unwilling to be revenged on them."

He then explained that as the missionary party clambered up to the town the negroes were vowing to have the goods as presents or by force, and that when the cannibal chief took the priest's hand the savage said significantly to his men:

"It is well; he has no skin and his hand is fat."

Father Allaire says that slavery in his part of Africa is not a thing of constant blows. Its worst feature is the possibility of human sacrifice at the death of a slave owner. The slave at ordinary times may go and come as he will, subject only to the possibility of being resold or of being called to be sacrificed in order that a dead master may have slave company in another world. Slavery is worse for children than for adults, and in parts of the French Kongo children are used as money. A pirogue is spoken of as worth so many slaves. Slave children pass through the hands of as many as 20 chiefs. A native law makes a thief caught in the act the slave of his captor, and it is not unusual for men to expose valuable things, and then lie in ambush to capture and thus enslave any one that yields to the temptation to steal the article exposed. Young children are seized and enslaved when found alone, and African mothers, who are most tender of their little ones, guard them with great care.

A Household Hint.

Winks—I've got a new way of sifting coal at my house.

Binks (with languid interest)—Have you?

Winks—Yes. I used to have the man pick out the good pieces of coal from the sifter and throw the rest away. Now I have him pick out the cinders and burn the rest.

Binks—Well, what difference does that make?

Winks (proudly)—Oh, about two tons a year.—Somerville Journal.

PEACE ON EARTH.

This is once more enjoyed by the rheumatic wise enough to counteract their progressive malady with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. No testimony is stronger than that which indicates it as a source of relief in this complaint. It is also eminently effective as a treatment for kidney trouble, dyspepsia, debility, liver complaint and constipation. Use it with persistence for the above.

The Knife He Wanted.

The Worcester Gazette tells this story on the authority of John E. Russell, whose father was a manufacturer of cutlery: Having occasion to travel on the Mississippi river occasionally, the latter became very well acquainted with the captain of one of the steamers. One day the captain asked Mr. Russell if he would make a knife for him. "Why, yes; what kind of a knife?" was the answer. "I want a good stout handle with a spring in it, so the blade won't give," explained the captain. "I'd a little rather have the blade ground on both edges. And I don't want one of those crosspieces, or guards, or whatever they call them. I want a knife I can stick into a man and twist it and when I pull it out it won't catch on his blamed galluses."

Is a blood disease and only a blood remedy can cure it. So many people make the mistake of taking remedies which at best are only tonics and cannot possibly reach their trouble. Mr. Asa Smith, Greencastle, Indiana, says: "For years I have suffered with Sciatic Rheumatism, which the best physicians were unable to relieve. I took many patent medicines but they did not seem to reach my trouble. I gradually grew worse until I was unable to take my food or handle myself in any way; I was absolutely helpless. Three bottles of S.S.S. relieved me so that I was soon able to move my right arm; before long I could walk across the room, and when I had finished one dozen bottles was cured completely and am as well as ever. I now weigh 170."

The Sheriff of Siskyou.

By BRET HARTE.

The man slouched on by his side, casting his surly, furtive glances from left to right as if seeking to escape from these confidences. Nevertheless the major kept on through the gully until reaching the wagon road they crossed it and began to ascend the opposite slope, half hidden by the underbrush and larches. Here the major paused again and faced about. The cabins of the settlement were already behind the bluff. The little stream which indicated the "bar," on which some perfunctory mining was still continued, now and then rang out quite clearly at their feet, although the bar itself had disappeared. The sounds of occupation and labor had at last died out in the distance. They were quite alone. The major sat down on a bowlder and pointed to another. The man, however, remained sullenly standing where he was, as if to accent as strongly as possible the enforced companionship. Either the major was too self absorbed to notice it or accepted it as a satisfactory characteristic of the half breed race. He continued confidently:

"Now, look here, Tom! I want to leave this cursed hole and get clear out of the state. Anywhere—over the Oregon line into British Columbia or to the coast, where I can get a coasting vessel down to Mexico. It will cost money, but I've got it. It will cost a lot of risks, but I'll take them. I want somebody to help me—some one to share risks with me and some one to share my luck if I succeed. Help to put me on the other side of the border line by sea or land, and I'll give you $1,000 down before we start and $1,000 when I'm safe."

The half breed had changed his slouching attitude. It seemed more indolent on account of the loosely hanging strap that had once held his haversack, which was still worn in a slovenly fashion over his shoulder, as a kind of lazy sling for his shiftless hand.

"Well, Tom, is it a go? You can trust me, for you'll have the thousand in your pocket before you start. I can trust you, for I'll kill you quicker than lightning if you say a word of this to any one before I go or play a single trick on me afterward."

Suddenly the two men were rolling over and over in the underbrush. The half breed had thrown himself upon the major, bearing him down to the ground. The haversack strap for an instant whirled like the loop of a lasso in the air and descended over the major's shoulders, pinioning his arms to his side. Then the half breed, tearing open his ragged blouse, stripped off his waist belt and as dexterously slipped it over the ankles of the struggling man.

It was all over in a moment. Neither had spoken a word. Only their rapid panting broke the profound silence. Each probably knew that no outcry would be heard.

For the first time the half breed sat down. But there was no trace of triumph or satisfaction in his face, which wore the same lowering look of disgust as he gazed upon the prostrate man.

"I want to tell you first," he said, slowly wiping his face, "that I didn't kalkilate upon doin this in this yer kind of way. I expected more of a stand up fight from you—more risk in gettin you out of that hole—and a different kind of a man to tackle. I never expected you to play into my hand like this, and it goes against me to hev to take advantage of it."

"Who are you?" said the major pantingly.

"I'm the new sheriff of Siskyou." He drew from beneath his begrimed shirt a paper wrapping, from which he gingerly extracted with the ends of his dirty fingers a clean legal looking folded paper. "That's my warrant. I've kept it fresh for you. I reckon you don't care to read it. You've seen it afore. It's just the same as t'other sheriff had—what you shot."

"Then this was a plan of yours and that whelp's escort?" said the major.

"Neither him nor the escort knows any more about it than you," returned the sheriff slowly. "I enlisted as Injun guide or scout ten days ago. I deserted just as reg'lar and nat'rallike when we passed that ridge yesterday. I could be took tomorrow by the sojers if they caught sight of me and court martialed. It's as reg'lar as that. But I timed to have my posse under a deputy draw you off by an attack just as the escort reached the ridge. And here I am."

"And you're no half breed?"

"There's nothin Injin about me that water won't wash off. I kalkilated you wouldn't suspect anything so insignificant as an Injin when I fixed myself up. You see Dawson didn't hanker after me much. But I didn't reckon on your tumbling to me so quick. That's what gets me. You must hev been pretty low down for kempany when you took a man like me inter your confidence. I don't see it yet."

"That's my warrant."

He looked inquiringly at his captive, with the same wondering surliness. Nor could he understand another thing which was evident. After the first shock of resistance the major had exhibited none of the indignation of a betrayed man, but actually seemed to accept the situation with a calmness that his captor lacked. His voice was quite unemotional as he said:

"And how are you going to get me away from here?"

"That's my lookout and needn't trouble you, major, but seeing as how confidential you've been to me I don't mind tellin you. Last night that posse of mine that you 'skunked,' you know, halted at the crossroads till them sojers went by. They had only to see them to know that I had got away. They'll hang round the crossroads till they see my signal on top of the ridge, and then they'll make another show agen that pass. Your men will have their hands full, I reckon, without huntin for you or noticin the three men of mine that will come along this ridge where the sojers come yesterday—to help me get you down in the same way. You see, major, your little trap in that gully ain't in this fight. We're the other side of it. I ain't much of a soldier, but I reckon I've got you there, and it's all owing to you. I ain't," he added gloomily, "takin much pride in it myself."

"I shouldn't think you would," said the major. "And look here! I'll double that offer I made you just now. Set me down just as I am on the deck of some coasting vessel, and I'll pay you $4,000. You may have all the glory of having captured me here and of making your word good before your posse. But you can arrange afterward on the way to let me give you the slip somewhere near Sacramento."

The sheriff's face actually brightened. "Thanks for that, major. I was gettin a little sick of my share in this job; but, by God, you've put some sand in me. Well, then, there ain't gold enough in all California to make me let you go. You hear me? So drop that. I've took you and took ye'll remain until I land you in Sacramento jail. I don't want to kill you, though your life's forfeit a dozen times over, and I reckon you don't care for it either way, but if you try any tricks on me I may have to maim you to make you come along comf'able and easy. I ain't hankerin arter that either, but come you shall."

"Give your signal and have an end of this," said the major curtly.

The sheriff looked at him again curiously. "I never had my hands in another man's pockets before, major, but I reckon I'll have to take your derringers from yours." He slipped his hand into the major's waistcoat and secured the weapons. "I'll have to trouble you for your sash, too," he said, unwinding the knitted silken girdle from the captive's waist. "You won't want it. You ain't walkin, and it'll come in handy to me just now."

He bent over, and passing it across the major's breast with more gentleness and solicitude than he had yet shown secured him in an easy sitting posture against the tree. Then after carefully trying the knots and straps that held his prisoner he turned and lightly bounded up the hill.

He was absent scarcely ten minutes, yet when he returned the major's eyes were half closed. But not his lips. "If you expect to hold me until your posse comes, you had better take me to some less exposed position," he said dryly. "There's a man just crossed the gully coming into the brush below in the wood."

"None of your tricks, major."

"Look for yourself."

The sheriff glanced quickly below him. A man with an ax on his shoulder could be seen plainly making his way through the underbrush not a hundred yards away. The sheriff instantly clapped his hand upon his captive's mouth, but at a look from his eyes took it away again.

"I see," he said grimly. "You don't want to lure that man within reach of my revolver by callin to him."

"I could have called him while you were away," returned the major quietly.

The sheriff, with a darkened face, loosened the sash that bound his prisoner to the tree, and then lifting him in his arms began to ascend the hill cautiously, dipping into the heavier shadows. But the ascent was difficult, the load a heavy one, and the sheriff was agile rather than muscular. After a few minutes' climbing he was forced to pause and rest his burden at the foot of a tree. But the valley and the man in the underbrush were no longer in view.

"Come," said the major quietly, "unstrap my ankles, and I'll walk up. We'll never get there at this rate."

The sheriff paused, wiped his grimy face with his grimier blouse and stood looking at his prisoner. Then he said slowly:

"Look yer! Wot's yer little game? Blessed if I kin follow suit."

For the first time the major burst into a rage. "Blast it all! Don't you see that if I'm discovered here—in this way—there's not a man in the Bar who would believe that I walked into your trap—not a man, by God, who wouldn't think it was a trick of yours and mine together."

"Or," interrupted the sheriff, slowly fixing his eyes on his prisoner, "not a man who would ever trust Major Overstone for a leader again."

"Perhaps," said the major unmovedly again. "I don't think either of us would ever get a chance of being trusted again by any one."

The sheriff still kept his eyes fixed on his prisoner, his gloomy face growing darker under its grime. "That ain't the reason, major. Life and death mean much more to you than they do to me in this yer game. I know that you'd kill me quicker nor lightnin if you get the chance. You know that I'm takin you to the gallows."

"The reason is that I want to leave Wynyard's Bar," said the major coolly. "And even this way out of it will suit me."

The fruit-growers of the Willamette valley are quite generally coming to the conclusion that peach roots are not a good foundation for prune trees. There are some growers who are still firmly in favor of peach roots but they are in a small minority. Fort Willamette valley where the soil is generally cold and wet the Myrobolan stock gives better satisfaction. Experiments are also being made with other plum stocks which promise well.

WHEN DEATH IS REAL.

Tragic Fatalities that Have Occurred Upon the Stage.

The recent calamity on a London stage in which an actor actually killed a fellow player in the scene where he was supposed to run him through with a dagger has brought to light numerous former occurrences of a similar character.

The great Roman actor Roscius, enacting Atreus, was so carried away that he fell upon a slave and killed him on the spot. Farquhar, in Dryden's "Indian Emperor," wounded a fellow actor so dangerously that he was said to have died from his wounds. In Stockholm, early in the sixteenth century, an actor who was playing Longinus in "The Mystery of the Passion," was so realistic in his playing that he pierced the mimic Christ so severely that his death on the cross was actual. Many years ago, an Italian artist named Lombardi, playing in "Antigone," had to turn his sword from his father's breast to his own, and did it so certainly that he fell dead.

Upon the opening night of the production of "Michael Strogoff" in London, in 1881, Mr. Charles Warner, in the title role, was set upon by the villain of the piece, and in the duel with daggers which ensued Mr. Warner was badly wounded. Barry Sullivan once attacked Richmond in "Richard the Third" with such vehemence that his opponent's sword was struck from his hand and a serious accident barely averted. The elder Baron, a French actor of note, performing in "The Cid" of Corneille, had to kick a sword out of his path and in so doing punctured his foot; the matter was trifling at first, but later on gangrene set in and the player died. Charles Kemble, at one time playing Macbeth to Mrs. Siddon's Lady Macbeth, flung away a goblet with such violence that it shattered a chandelier above the great Sarah's head. That lady bore it without flinching, however. At the dress rehearsal of "The Huguenots" at Paris several years ago, the famous tenor Nouritt, in pretending to jump from a fourth-story window, injured himself so that the piece had to be delayed for a week. At the final rehearsal of "Faust" the original Mephistopheles, Balanque, contrived to wear a pair of diabolical red wings. With these outspread, he rose from a trap in the first act, and, by touching a spring, these later became the conventional cloak. But the spring behaved badly, and the actor's face was horribly lacerated by the fluttering whalebone ribs, over which the cloth was arranged.

Deaths from sudden and unknown causes are frequent on the stage, and it has generally seemed that the passing of the actor's soul has always been at some moment when his words were particularly applicable to the circumstance. Not long ago Federici was playing "Faust" in Melbourne, and just after he uttered the last word before his descent to Hades he gave a sigh and fell dead. At this actor's funeral, as the venerable clergyman finished saying "In the midst of life we are in death," he fell lifeless. Paterson died while preparing Claudio for execution in "Measure for Measure," saying of life "a breath thou art." Cummings, as Dumont in "Jane Shore," expired with a quotation for God's mercy on his lips, and Palmer, as manager and actor, died as he exclaimed, "Oh, God! God! There is another and a better world!"

A Texas Swing.

Mr. R. B. Zimmerman, of Warren, has what is probably the highest swing in Texas. The frame is made of pine logs seventy-eight feet long, which are set in the ground eight feet, making the swing seventy feet high. The cross piece is six by six inches, heart, and is fastened to the top of the upright pieces in such a way as to be as strong as if the frame was all of one piece. On the north side of the swing is a pole forty-two feet high, at the top of which is a pulley. The person who wishes to swing is strapped in, if he or she desires, and then takes hold of one end of the rope, the other end of which is run through the pulley and fastened to a team of horses. The horses are started off and the swinger is pulled to the top of the pole. When the top is reached he drops the rope and is at once launched into space, sometimes going as high as 100 feet on the opposite side from the pole. One turn at the swing is generally enough to satisfy one for that evening. Since the erection of the swing Mr. Zimmerman's house has become a resort every evening for the young people of Warren, and parties frequently come from Hyatt and other neighboring towns to enjoy an evening in "the swing."—Dallas News.

Norway Spruce.

The Norway spruce has been disseminated throughout the world. It has been a matter of interest to endeavor to find fine specimens of this tree in its native habitat, but the search has been in vain. Nowhere do they attain the size or the beauty that we have them in America. In regions where the timber has been cut, we do not expect much in the second growth, but there are immense tracts from which the lumber cannot be removed to any market; but there the trees merely look old without having attained great size or remarkable beauty. The Norway maple is very fine, but nowhere better than it is seen in America. Quite singularly, its foliage is largest and finest in the far North. The birch is found everywhere, and is the only tree in the more northern regions. The northernmost forest in the world is said to be one on the Lofoten Islands. The North Cape region is treeless. But nowhere does the birch attain the size we sometimes see on our side of the Atlantic.—Cor. Albany Cultivator.

Facial Resemblances.

Senator Daniel, of Virginia, who was the temporary chairman of the Democratic National Convention, bears a striking facial resemblance to the late Edwin Booth, the actor. The lithographs of Thomas W. Keene, the tragedian, would serve for pictures of Willam J. Bryan, though the back part of Bryan's head very closely resembles that of Wilson Barrett, the English actor.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A War Reminiscence.

SCENES AT HATCHER'S CREEK AND PETERSBURG RECALLED.

John B. Scace Speaks to a Reporter of Stirring Scenes—Escaped with a Slight Wound, But, Like Other Veterans, Has Suffered Since—A Story That Reads Like a Page From History.

From the Albany, N. Y., Journal.

When one encounters in print the life story of some scarred veteran of the civil war, a feeling of admiration and sympathy is the certain result. Accustomed though we are to tales of heroism and suffering in everyday life, there is something peculiarly attractive about these old war records, serving, as they do, as a sacred passport to the heart of every true American. Thousands found their rest on the field of carnage or in the hospital, but their comrades, when the struggle was over and the victory won, returned to their homes and began anew the battle of life.

John B. Scace, the widely-known contractor and building mover of Albany, N. Y., has had an unusually interesting life, and when seen by a reporter recently at his home, No. 15 Bradford Street, told of his many experiences and adventures while serving under the old flag in the late war. Although having endured all the hardships and privations of life in the ranks, Mr. Scace bears his more than half a century of years with an elastic step and a keen mind, taking an active interest in private and public affairs.

Mr. Scace is a member of Berkshire Lodge, No. 52, I. O. O. F. He enlisted in the army in 1862, in Company A, Forty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, serving under Col. W. F. Bartlett, First Brigade, First Division, Ninteenth Corps, with which he paritcipated in some of the hottest battles of the war, including Port Hudson, Donaldsonville and Plain Store, where he was wounded. His time being out, he was discharged, but soon re-enlisted as sergeant in Company A, Sixty-first Regiment, Masachusetts Volunteer Infantry. He was in the battle of Hatcher's Run, the fight about Petersburg and the battle of Sailor's Creek.

After his honorable discharge, June, 4, 1865, Mr. Scace returned to Albany and settled down once again to his business and social interests. He has resided in the city ever since. It would seem that now, of all times, his peace and happiness would have been uninterrupted. Such was not to be the case, for four years ago, while engaged in superintending the raising of the immense smokestack of the Albany Electric power house, the lever of a loosened windlass struck him a heavy blow across the back. The effect of the blow was not at first apparent, he being able to leave his bed in a few days. But the worst was to follow, for without warning he was seized with sciatic rheumatism in all its virulence. Untold agony followed.

Said Mr. Scace, "I could not sleep for the pain. No one will know the tortures the rheumatism gave me. I don't know how I lived during those days. I became litle more than skin and bones, and it seemed like life didn't have anything but suffering in it. Cures? I tried every so-called rheumatic cure that was ever invented.

I gave all of them a good trial before I stopped taking them. My friends and neighbors recommended remedy after remedy that they heard of, but my rheumatism went on just the same. Well, after I had almost had the life tortured out of me, I came across a newpaper account of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I thought I might as well add another name to the list as not, so I ordered some of my druggist.

"I tell you, I was glad in those days to hear of anything that could give me any hope at all. Yes, I got them, and before I had taken two boxes that pain began to leave me. Why, I couldn't understand it. I couldn't imagine myself being cured. But before I had taken a half-dozen of those boxes I was cured. The suffering which had made my life almost unbearable for so long had disappeared. I was a new man.

"I began to get strong. I picked up in flesh, and I went back to my business with all the vigor and vim of a young man. I think everyone who knows me will tell you what it did for me. Pink Pills is the grandest medicine ever discovered, and if my recommendation will do it any good I want you to use it. I hope others will hear of it and be benefited as I have been. Everyone should hear of it. I can't say too much for them," Mr. Scace exclaimed, enthusiastically, in conclusion.

This is but one of the many cases in which Pink Pills have taken such a beneficent part in the history of humanity.

Mr. Scace is now enjoying the fruits of an unusually large business managed solely by himself, and covering almost the entire eastern portion of the State.

Mr. Scace is also an ivory carver of marked ability, which he follows solely for his own pleasure. Many little trinkets, carved by the light of the camp-fire, attest his skill in this direction.

Far from being solicited to recommend the curative which had taken such a load of misery from his life, in his gratitude his praise for it is unstinted and unceasing. And from his own statement one may easily see that when he does cease to sing its virtues, it will be to answer the last mustering in.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N.Y.

"We turned about and went on a long tack," narrated the old sailor, "and——." "Too bad," exclaimed the sympathetic cyclist; "were you able to repair your tire?"

ME AN' JIM.

Me an' Jim jes' kinder agree;
I stick by him and' he sticks by me.

Never was much thet I could do,
But somehow'r other he sees me through.

Never did talk much, afore or sence,
'Bout it, but there's a coincidence.

Somehow'r other—can't jes' make out—
That brings him 'roun' when there's trouble about.

Lots o' others thet like me, too,
Hard to say what they wouldn't do;

Hard to say what they wouldn't share
When there was plenty, and some to spare.

But, somehow'r other, when you're hard hit,
Seems they don't happen to hear of it.

An' there was a woman once, an' she
Kinder believed that she keered for me;

'Lowed thet she loved me becoz we'd ben
Goin' together so long; but when

Plans were a-makin' to go through life
Settled an' easy as man and wife.

Suddenly foun' thet she'd rather go
'Long with another she didn't know.

So, it set me to studyin': Love is meant
For them as don't meet with no accident.

Or mebbe them as ken pick an' choose
In the crowd where they've got no friend to lose.

While the feelin' a man has for a man
Don't fool itself with a better plan

Or come to grief through a thinkin' spell
Thet we're too much alike to match right well.

An' thet's the reason thet I perpose
To tie to Jim to the very close.

Fact o' the matter, we're fond o' him,
'Coz you know you can always count on Jim.

A FAIRY OMNIBUS.

I think everybody gets a touch of romance some time in their lives. The green glade of olden days is probably replaced by a busy street, your armor-clad knight by a city man in a frock coat and silk hat, your distressed damsel is a practical, level-headed, energetic little typewriter, perhaps; the actors are changed, the scene is changed, but, believe me, the element of romance is just the same as it was in the days of chivalry.

Now, I dare say you would scarcely believe that a bald-headed, middle-aged, stout old solicitor like me—getting every day more engrossed in business, and more and more apt to be a tiresome liver—was ever sufficiently "interesting" to play the part of a modern knight-errant.

Let me tell you all about it and how it ended. It's commonplace enough. I know, and I dare say most of you have gone through something similar, but if it does nothing else it may, perhaps, serve to stir up pleasant memories.

I had nearly completed my articles, and was reading hard my "final," when one morning the firm told me to go to a client who was ill and take instructions for her will.

She was an old maiden lady living in Paddington, and our people had transacted all her business for her something like forty years.

It was a wet day; one of those days that we get from time to time in London, when you feel as if you would like to go to bed and not get up again until things have changed.

Holborn was like a little river, and the traffic slopped and splashed along in a way that made you feel damp even to watch.

I stood on the curbstone waiting for a chance to cross without being smothered with mud, when I noticed a girl standing near me. She, too, was trying to cross.

It was very funny to see her. She was evidently from the country, and didn't at all understand the London traffic. Three times she started, and three times she turned back in despair.

I watched her with interest. There was an amusing expression of good-tempered misery on her face; she was pretty—very pretty, and daintily dressed, and—well, I seized my opportunity like an articled clerk who is worth his salt is bound to do.

"Excuse me," I said, raising my hat, "but I think you want to cross the road?"

She looked rather startled.

"I think I shall get on all right," she answered, "if you would kindly tell me where to start."

"Suppose we try together? Give me your arm."

She did not give me her arm. I took it and we started on our pilgrimage. In and out of cabs and omnibuses I guided her safely, until we got to about the middle of the road, which, as you know, is very wide opposite Furnival's inn.

Suddenly she limped and gave a funny little hop.

"I'm very sorry, sir," she said, laughing, "but—I'm afraid my shoe has come off. It stuck in the mud."

I looked around. Sure enough, a few yards behind us was a shoe lying in the mud, looking very lonely and getting terribly wet.

"Can you stand here for a moment," I said, "while I fetch it?"

I left her there, standing on one foot, with the tip of a little stockinged toe just touching the ground to steady her.

A cab driver who happened to pass found the situation amusing and said so candidly, but I'm proud to say I managed to keep a grave face. The shoe was such a small one that I marveled how a human being could ever get it on, much less get it off again.

Now, a saint from heaven can't put a lady's shoe on her without seeing her ankle. I didn't try to. I thoroughly enjoyed that little ankle and lingered over the task with becoming solemnity in spite of the weather.

At last we were ready to start again.

"It was very kind of you not to laugh at me," she said, with a little blush; "I must have looked very silly, standing there on one foot."

"You looked very charming," I said, with a young man's bluntness.

I landed her safely on the path and she thanked me.

I asked her if I could be of any further service. She thought not. She only wanted to get into a Paddington bus, and then she would be quite safe.

Now, I wanted a Paddington bus, but I didn't say so. As soon as one came up I stopped it, put her inside, and went on top myself.

Perhaps you will think me quixotic for going outside in such miserable weather? Well, I believe you would have done the same thing after all. You see, I was afraid she might think I was pestering her if I followed her inside. It looked rather like taking advantage of a trifling service, and I was at that age when a man would rather have rheumatic fever than sacrifice the good opinion of a pretty girl.

Things are different now—I'm a married man.

But, bless your heart, you can't escape destiny by getting outside an omnibus. I hadn't been up there three minutes, the rain had only just begun to soak through the knees of my trousers and trickle down my legs, when the conductor came up with a significant grin on his face.

"If you please, sir," he said, "there's a young lady inside wants to speak to you."

I climbed down the ladder with which buses in those days were furnished.

There she sat in the corner, half smiling, half blushing. There was nobody else inside.

"Won't you get wet if you go outside?" she said.

"I was afraid you might think I was a nuisance," I answered.

"I guessed as much," she said frankly. "But it would be a very poor return for your kindness if I drove you into consumption."

I think that upon the whole that was the most delightful bus drive in my experience. The conversation flowed in a torrent, and I believe we exchanged as many confidences and opinions in half an hour as some people do in a lifetime. It was wonderful. It was like touching by accident the hidden spring of some secret door, which opened into a new atmosphere, a new fairyland. We were more like old friends than change acquaintances, and it seemed as if neither could tell the other too much. Points of agreement were noted eagerly. We had read the same books, visited the same places, and wherever we turned there was new ground for sympathy.

She had only been in London a week, and had not visited any place of amusement. I wondered if I could find a chance here of pushing my advantage, and approached the subject with delicacy and caution.

But at this point it seemed that the mutual confidence stopped, for she declined to understand my tactics, and remarked that her time was too fully occupied to go about much.

Only too soon we had reached the place where I had decided to alight. We shook hands warmly, and thanked each other rather vaguely and nervously, and then I found myself once more on a nasty, wet London pavement.

I had had a glimpse of fairyland, but it was only a glimpse. I was back again in the practical, uncomfortable world, with a living to be earned and a will to make.

The gates of fairyland were closed, for, like a donkey, I had omitted to find out the fairy's name and where she lived.

It seemed impossible to bring one's mind back to the legal subtleties of will making, but it had to be done, and I trudged heavily on my way to our client's house, finding to my infinite disgust that I had got out of the omnibus much sooner than I need have done.

Imagine my surprise when, on reaching the house, and being shown into the dining room, I found there the heroine of the lost shoe.

That settled it.

I felt that heaven had decided I was to marry that young lady, and I formed the pious intention then and there of giving heaven every possible assistance, and made such a delightful hash of her aunt's will that it required some six or seven visits to put matters straight.

Curiously enough, though, from the moment we met in the house, her friendliness ceased. Every time I came she was more cold and distant, and I was almost in despair. The conversation, which had flowed so merrily in an uncomfortable omnibus, seemed impossible over the dining room fire, and she refused to go beyond the most commonplace civilities.

She calmly ignored that drive, which I had found so delightful, and treated me with ordinary politeness, due to the representative of her aunt's solicitors.

The position grew desperate, because I couldn't continue to make blunders over the old lady's will forever. Already the firm had reprimanded me for stupidity, though, to be sure, the old lady herself bore with me with wonderful patience and good temper.

The crisis came.

It was my last visit about the will, which was now ready—absolutely correct—and the dear old creature had approved of every word of it.

It only required to be executed. She said she would like her niece and me to be witnesses, and as she was much better and able to get up we assembled solemnly in the library. But she was a funny old character and scouted the idea of solemnity, ringing the bell for the servant to bring up some champagne so that we might drink "success to her will!"

I'm thankful to say that, though I was by this time helplessly in love with the niece, I had sufficient presence of mind to say: "Success to the will and may it never have to be approved!" which pleased her immensely and before I left I was invited to dinner the following Sunday.

From that moment things went pretty smoothly, though it was only last evening that, in talking over our courting days in the far away past, my wife explained the meaning of her extraordinary coolness to me.

It seems that when, after the drive in what she is pleased to call the "fairy omnibus," I walked into her aunt's dining room, she quite recognized that I must be her destiny, and so with feminine perversity she felt called upon to struggle against fate as much as possible.

"But you ought to be very thankful to me for one thing," she added; "it was I who—but never mind."

"Nonsense," I said. "Go on; we are too old-fashioned to be romantic any longer."

"Well," she said, "it was I who suggested you should be invited to dinner."

Which just shows what contradictory creatures women are.—Household Words.

STRANGE LABORATORY IN PARIS.

Established in the Catacombs Under the Jardin des Plantes.

Deep in the bowels of the earth a curious laboratory is about to be established in the Jardin des Plantes. Under the gardens run some old galleries of the catacombs, which have not been opened in 100 years. The laboratory which is to be established in these galleries will give an opportunity to study the effect of obscurity upon animal life. Everyone has heard of the fish without eyes in the cave of Kentucky and other freaks which exist in dark wells and such places. These facts are of great importance in studying the evolution of man and species, but so far no researches upon the subject have been carried out by scientists.

Down in the deep galleries of the catacombs it is always pitch dark and fish ponds will be dug in the solid rock and stocked with fish to study the effect of the obscurity upon them and their offspring. Animals will also be kept down there for the same purpose.

A good deal of trouble and some danger was experienced in opening up the galleries, which have for so long been closed. The temperature 200 feet below the surface is chill and damp, while the gases which have accumulated in 100 years made it a ticklish undertaking to descend. These galleries undermine almost the whole of Paris and its environs, being used as catacombs and also for growing mushrooms. Under the Jardin des Plantes they have never been used since the stoneworkers left them in 1779. They are very narrow and one has to stoop in going through them. In some places the roof has fallen in, but most of the galleries are dug out of solid rock and will last for all time. The laboratory will be the only one of its kind in the world and the savants who have undertaken experiments will throw new light upon the doctrine of evolution.—New York Press.

Like a Boy.

The son of a down-town merchant was found crying when his father returned home the other night, as that gentleman told a Washington Star reporter this morning.

"What's the matter, Tommy?" asked the merchant.

"I had a fight with Charlie," was the tearful reply.

"Well, you ought not to fight. It served you right to get whipped, I guess," said the father.

"But I didn't get licked. I licked him," sobbed the boy.

"Well, what are you crying about, then?"

"Why, if I had let him lick me he couldn't hurt. And I never thought about that, so now I have to fight his big brother, about my size, and I can lick him, and I'm going to, because I'm mad at him; then I've got to fight the biggest brother, and he's three sizes bigger than me, and won't I catch it." And Tommy refused to be comforted.

Best to Postpone It.

"When we are married, dear Lucy," said the poor man's son to the rich man's daughter, "our honeymoon shall be passed abroad. We will drive in the Bois, promenade the Prada, gaze down into the blue waters of the Adriatic from the Rialto and enjoy the Neapolitan sunsets, strolling along the Chiaja."

"How delicious!" she murmured. "But, John dear, have you money enough to do all this? For pa says I mustn't expect anything until he dies."

John's countenance underwent such a change that she could not help asking him if he felt ill.

"No, darling," he answered, faintly; "I am not ill; I was only thinking we had better postpone our marriage until after the funeral."

How the Fish Know.

Young Fish—There's a hook with a nice worm on it.

Old Fish—Keep away from that.

Young Fish—Why?

Old Fish—There isn't any fashion plate reflected in the water this time. That hook belongs to a freckle-faced boy with a ragged straw hat. He is fishing for fish, not for fun.—Hartford Times.

There are so many lazy men that prizes should be given to those who work.

The Poppy Land Limited Express.

The first train leaves at 6 p. m.
For the land where the poppy blows;
The mother dear is the engineer,
And the passenger laughs and crows.

The palace car is the mother's arms;
The whistle, a low, sweet strain;
The passenger winks and nods and blinks,
And goes to sleep in the train!

At 8 p. m. the next train starts
For the Poppy Land afar,
The summons clear falls on the ear—
"All aboard for the sleeping car!"

But what is the fare to Poppy Land?
I hope it is not too dear.
The fare is this, a hug and a kiss,
And it is paid to the engineer!

So I ask of Him who children took
On his knee in kindness great,
"Take charge, I pray, of the trains each day
That leave at six and eight.

"Keep watch of the passengers, thus I pray,
For to me they are very dear,
And special ward, O gracious Lord,
O'er the gentle engineer."
—Edgar Wade Abbot.

No Larger than a Toy.

The little daughter of Israel Hunton, a farmer of Orange County, Ohio, has one of the queerest pets ever seen—a 2-year-old horse that measures only thirteen inches high.

This strange midget pony is regarded by many as one of the most remarkably interesting bits of horse flesh in the land; certainly the tiny horse is the smallest equine on earth.

Dot, as the midget is called, has a remarkable history, for, unlike other dwarfs of her race, she is the offspring of an ancestry of ordinary, every-day horses. Both her father and mother were horses of the usual size and appearance, and so far as is known there is no reason for Dot's extremely small stature.

CARRIES IT IN HER ARMS.

When born Dot was not much larger than a kitten, and had to be fed by her owner from the beginning. Great care was given the tiny colt in the effort to raise her, and now she is full grown, almost perfectly formed and vigorous in health, but only as big as a full-grown Newfoundland dog.

Offers of large sums have been made Mr. Hunton by museum and circus managers for Dot, who is, of course, much wanted for exhibition purposes. These have all been refused, because Mr. Hunton's daughter is so much attached to the family pet that he has not been able to secure her consent. Being wealthy himself, it is probable that those who wish to see the tiniest horse on the globe will have to see it on the farm of its owner.

A Boy's Composition.

In a public school in New England the teacher thought she would give out natural history subjects as subjects for compositions. In this way she teaches them English orthography and natural history all at once. The commonplace subject "Ants" was given to a bright boy who said he knew all about it. This is the result of his efforts:

"Ants"—There is many kinds of Ants My ant Mary Jane is one of these kind. She is genlly good natured and when she comes to see My Mother she brings me five cents worth of penuts and tells me Why James how you've growed but when I go and see her and dont only just wawlk on the Carpit without Cleening my boots she is orfly mad.

Ants like to give you Advice and scold at you like everything but their Hart is in the Wright Plaice and once I found a Antsh nest in the woods I poked it with a stick and a Million Ants run out after me and Crawled up Inside my Pants and Bit me like Sixty.

I forgot to say that my Ant Martha lives in Main she has a boy of Just about my Alge and He can stand on his Hed Five minits and how Do you suppose he can Do it.

Art of Making Silhouettes.

Even in these enlightened days, when the art of photography has advanced so very near to perfection, there are still some old-fashioned people who cling with fondness to these silhouettes. One great thing in their favor is that the least clever among us may, with a little patience and a steady hand, find in them a pleasing recreation and soon become adroit in their execution. But there may be some of our young readers who scarcely know what a silhouette is, and such unenlightened persons we will endeavor briefly to instruct in the almost forgotten art. A few sheets of drawing paper, a pencil and a lamp are all the essentials needed to commence operations.

The operator first fixes a sheet of paper to the wall by inserting a pin in each corner. Then the person whose likeness, or "silhouette," is to be taken, is seated in a chair close to the wall in such a position as to throw a distinct shadow of his profile (as near lifesize as possible) on the center of the paper. To secure steadiness a wine glass or some such support is placed between his head and the wall, for the slightest movement often causes failure. Having arranged these matters satisfactorily, the operator proceeds to sketch with a pencil the head and profile of the "sitter," and this requires a steady hand and some dispatch, as it is no easy matter to sit in one position for a great length of time perfectly motionless. When the sketch is concluded little skill will be needed to bring the task to an end. The operator has only with a sharp penknife to cut out the head in the line of the pencil mark. The center part is then thrown aside and the other paper laid on a piece of black cloth, which throws out the features boldly, and if sufficient care has been taken a striking likeness will be the reward.—Happy Moments.

Three Gentlemen from Illinois.

The difficulties under which business is transacted in the House of Representatives at Washington are happily—or unhappily—illustrated by an anecdote printed in the Washington Times. The speaker of the House is commonly supposed to have too much power, rather than too little, but even his hands are sometimes tied up in red tape.

The difficulty of securing recognition for the attempted passage of any bill cannot be exaggerated, and Mr. Burrell of Illinois had realized this fact to the full while trying to secure action on a little private bill which he had in tow for one of his constituents.

He had been to see the speaker a number of times, beseeching him to let the bill come up, and finally Mr. Reed yielded, and told him to be on time the next morning, with his bill in his hand, standing ready to catch the speaker's eye.

Mr. Burrell needed no urging to be on hand, and at the first opportunity he waved the bill in the air. The speaker had not forgotten his promise, and when a suitable opening came, he said:

"The gentleman from Illinois is recognized."

A page started frantically up the aisle, but seeing Mr. Connolly of Illinois standing in his place, holding a bill in his hand, the page rushed up to him, took the bill and hurried it to the desk. The speaker did not relish this error, but made the best of a bad matter, and the measure was allowed to pass.

Mr. Reed then looked over in the direction of Mr. Burrell, and again said:

"The gentleman from Illinois."

Another page started to follow the direction of the speaker's eye, but ran into Mr. Graff, also of Illinois, who had been haunting the first seat of the middle aisle for more than a month, waiting to bring up a bill, and this was taken to the desk and read.

The speaker looked annoyed, but persisted in his original intention of seeing that Mr. Burrell was given a chance to slip his bill through, and for the third time said:

"The gentleman from Illinois."

This time the page found his way to the proper person, and Mr. Burrell's bill was passed; but several members smiled as they reflected on the fact that two bills had received unexpected attention on the strength of the recognition promised Mr. Burrell.

Oom Paul Could Fill It.

Here is another characteristic story about the president of the Transvaal. In the days when Johannesburg was merely Farreira's mining camp, Krueger was one day riding over the Witwatersrand in ordinary burgher attire. He off-saddled near a wagon owned by a German. The Teuton did not recognize the president, and held forth on the many things he would do were he ruler of the state. Suddenly Oom Paul, to the great astonishment of the German, who was a very small man, took off his coat, and, holding it out toward the stranger, said: "Put this on." "But," replied the latter, "it's too big." "Just so," replied his honor, with a grim smile. "I'm Paul Krueger, and it is not too big for me."

Cause for Rage.

"What is that fellow raving so for?" asked the tourist.

"Missed the midnight train last night," explained Rubberneck Bill.

"Well! well! I have seen men swear and cavort for five minutes or so over missing a train, but he is the first one I ever knew to be at it ten hours after the train had gone."

"He has mighty good reason, my friend. They was more'n $65,000 in bullion on that thar very train."—Indianapolis Journal.

Why He Objected.

"What do you mean," said the summer hotel man, "by publishing in your newspaper the statement that a sea serpent was seen near my place?"

"I don't see anything to get angry about," was the reply. "I thought it would be a splendid advertisement for you."

"An advertisement! Nothing of the kind! Quite the contrary. Our strong point is that we keep a strictly temperate resort."—Washington Star.

You seldom hear of a man swearing off nowadays: the topers seem to be waiting for the law to save them.

A Circular Addition for Plants.

A small plant house can quite readily be provided by building an addition to the sunny side of the dwelling house. If this is given too much the aspect of a greenhouse—by making the addition rectangular and having a glass roof—the appearance of the house is seriously injured, as the addition savors too much of commercial plant-growing. A perspective view of an added plant room that is at once a graceful addition to a house, and a most serviceable room for plants, is shown in the accompanying illustration. The circular shape gives great access to the sunlight, while the room is made high enough so that glass is not needed in the roof. A center bench can be used for some lofty plant, or plants, which will be in full view from the room adjoining. Portierres separate the two rooms. One who is anything of a mechanic can construct this without the aid of a carpenter, but it would be well to employ a carpenter to lay out the job and make water-tight connections at roof and sides of the house.—American Agriculturist.

VIEW OF PLANT HOUSE.

Shelled Corn and Ear Corn.

All the Flint varieties of corn have broad and shallow kernels and a large cob in comparison with the grain. This is especially true of the kinds with twelve or more rows of kernels. It is almost impossible to find twelve-rowed Flint corn that will yield a half bushel of grain from a full bushel of ears. But the Dent corn being long grained and narrow, will much overrun this measure. We have seen some of the early Dent varieties with a cob so small that when the corn was on it and a paper tightly fitted over the ear the grain when removed would fill the paper to the top, the loose corn in the paper gaining enough space, as compared with its compactness on the ear to offset the bulk of the cob. The only time when this could be done with Dent corn was in the fall while the grain was full of sap. Both the grain and cob of Dent corn shrink a great real while drying, and do not show as well in spring as just after the crop is harvested.

A Handy Cart.

The "improvement" in this farm cart is the drop axle, permitting a cart of double depth of body, which allows much greater capacity. Such a cart is also extremely useful in moving very young animals, as a calf that has been dropped in the pasture. The rear is composed of two doors that shut and are held by two stout hooks, thus giving easy access to the bottom of the cart. Such a cart will be found extremely handy.

HANDY FARM CART.

To Make Cows Give Down Milk.

A cow that is angered or worried about anything will lessen her milk yield, and will hold it up as much as she can. The secret of successful milking is to make the cow as contented as possible. It is a good plan at all times to have some extra feed for the cow to eat while she is being milked. Then if the milking is done properly, that also gives a pleasurable sensation and will cause the cow's muscles to relax so that the last drop of milk may be extracted. This is necessary to keep up the yield. If, through worry, the cow is allowed to hold up her milk, it will be absorbed. The cow will soon run to fat and be worthless for dairy purposes.

Plant Corn Earlier.

A recent frost in Maine destroyed fully two-thirds of the sweet corn crop near the West Farmington canneries. The result is that not more than 100,000 cans of corn will be put up instead of the 350,000 cans that were expected. A few days earlier planting of this crop on well-prepared ground would have saved the whole. It is thus somewhere nearly every year. Wherever there is a short season for corn growing, the rule should be to get as early a start as possible, even if the first leaves are nipped by frost, the root will be growing, and the ear will put forth nearly as many days earlier than the later planted corn, as it was first in the ground.

Points About Swine.

A breeder says that it is not healthy to confine swine too much, and that a lack of exercise prevents a proper development of the body, making it much more susceptible to disease than when the animal is given a wide range and a variety of food. A great deal of late is heard in regard to producing bacon for the English market, and fault is found with our corn-fed hogs because they are usually too fat. It is an old adage that "there are none so blind as those who do not wish to see," and the fact is plain to those who understand the situation that no meat we can produce would be acceptable to European nations. The pork produced in the corn belt of America from hogs raised on a clover pasture and finished on corn is not to be compared with that made in Europe from all kinds of swill and refuse, fed in a filthy sty. There is not and cannot be better or more delicious pork produced on this globe than that made from grass and corn when the hogs are properly handled, and this fact taxes to the utmost the greatest of European statesmen to circumvent its production among their people.

Elevated Lands Escape Frost.

The side or top of a moderate hill will escape frosts that will destroy the vegetation below. The reason is that as the cold slowly settles down from above, it forces the warm air in the valley up the hillsides until the valley is completely filled with cold air. If the valley be enclosed, so that there can be little wind blowing through it, the cold will continue until the sunlight sends down heat enough to cause the cold air to rise, just as it does in a chimney when a bright fire is made in stove or fireplace in the morning after the stove and chimney have been cold through the night.

Putting Corn in Shock.

Set the corn in a shock, and when made place the rope and wheels, as illustrated, around the shock and hook the wheels together. Two men draw on the rope and securely tighten the top. One man then holds both ends of the rope and the other man ties the shock permanently with another rope. The wheel rope is then unslackened, and wheels unhooked and the next shock tied. The two pulleys are large enough for a ⅝-inch rope sixteen feet long, which is run through both pulleys. A hook is placed on one pulley and a ring on the other.

DEVICE FOR SHOCKING CORN.

Poultry Points.

Do not try to be a fancier before you know how to be a common poultryman.

Have your nests on the ground. If they are nailed to the walls the fowls will roost on them and befoul the litter.

If you keep ducks let them be Pekin. This breed gives the largest number of eggs, and the most pounds of meat for feed consumed.

A cure for scaly legs in fowls is to make a mixture of lard and kerosene oil, equal parts of each, and rub it well over the legs of each fowl affected. The disease is caused by a parasite.

When you start your poultry plant don't try to show your neighbors what a big display you can make. Rather begin small and grow gradually. It will do you more credit to show that you have built up a gigantic affair than that you were able to build it all "in a day."

One of the principal secrets in yarding Leghorns is to avoid a long, narrow enclosure. A square one is much better. Then if you wish to enter the yard, the fowls have an opportunity to keep out of your way, and there is less danger of unconsciously driving them into a corner and forcing them to fly.

The Apiary.

One of the best paints for the hive is made by mixing white lead and white zinc with raw oil.

It is a mistake to make a practice of extracting honey before it is ripe. It can be refined artificially, but the natural way is best.

Feeding in autumn is done to stimulate brood rearing; also for the purpose of supplying colonies that are short of food with a supply that they can seal for winter.

A colony may be very weak, but if it possesses a laying queen and brood it will protect a large surplus of honey. If it is destitute of brood and a queen it will not protect its stores.

A good fall flow of honey always places the bees in the best possible condition for wintering. Without such a fall flow it is next to impossible to have the bees in proper condition to go into the winter without feeding.

A GREAT DECREASE IN HORSES.

The Western Horseman, an Indiana publication, contains the following interesting article on the future demand for horses:

Never in the history of America has the production of any article of the farm been so completely abandoned as the raising of horses. We read articles headed "A horseless age," and like titles, claiming that the people of civilization intend to abandon the use of the noble animal and almost exclusively use the electric car and the bicycle. Now, as a matter of fact, the electric car and the bicycle have not reduced the demand for horses to any great extent, as other demands have arisen which offset the harm done by them, as is evidenced by the large number of shippers that are daily scouring the country in search of desirable animals.

There were employed in the drawing of street cars prior to the advent of the electric car, 160,000 horses. It is estimated that 18,000 horses annually would supply the demand from that source, and when a street car horse became old and decrepit he was relegated to the farm, garbage wagon or some other use, but was still in the United States and taking the place of a more valuable animal. For the year ending June 30, 1896, there were exported from the United States to European countries 25,126 horses, being over 7,000 in excess of the number consumed by the street cars. These horses are gone from the United States forever, and no per percentage of them remain to take the place of younger animals.

The horses of the United States increased during a period of twenty-five years, from 1868 to 1893, from 5,755,940 to 16,260,202, which of course was a larger number of horses than was needed for actual use.

From 1893 to 1894 the horses of the country decreased about 125,000 and from 1894 to 1895 187,000, and from 1895 to 1896 769,261, making a decrease in three years of over 2,100,000. As the horses now in the country become older the death rate will become correspondingly larger; there are very few two-year-olds, and a less number of yearlings. There are practically no weanlings and a correspondingly small number of mares in foal. We predict for the year 1896, the January report of the Department of Agriculture will show a decrease of at least 1,000,000 horses.

When the breeding industry is again revived there will not be the stallions or brood mares in the country to increase the number as rapidly as has heretofore been done, and the claim that the use of the horse has been abandoned is not borne out by the observations of the horse dealers in general. The improvement of the roads all over the country, the hundreds of miles of block, macadamized, asphaltum, etc., that has so largely increased the use of the bicycle, has also greatly increased the demand for the horse.

Now, we ask the calamity howler, that is predicting such terrible things for the horse business, from what source he expects to supply the demand for horses from 1898 to 1903. The law of supply and demand cannot be gotten away from, and the people of christendom never did and never will abandon the use of the horse. Farmers that sold their horses and bought bicycles are already disposing of their wheels and buying back their horses. The young man cannot take his "best girl" to church on a bicycle, and they are utterly worthless when the roads are not in the best of condition, and at that time the farmer is usually too busy to ride. The American farmer, as a rule, is a very scarcy individual, and, in this case, has disposed of his surplus horses and failed to breed his mares, and in a short time will be a buyer to fill the place of the horses that die. The man that buys yearlings or breeds his mares from this time on is the man who will reap a handsome profit.

Mrs. Susie Martin, who killed her husband in the San Francisco City Hall some months ago, was acquitted by a jury last week upon the ground of temporary insanity. This judgment has roused the wrath of Judge Wallace, in whose court it was rendered, and he has given the public a piece of his mind on the matter. Such trials, he says, are farcical; they cost a great deal of money and simply expose the sentimentality of jurymen. The woman had undoubtedly been badly used and she killed her husband from motives of personal injury and vengeance and was no more insane then than she is now; and she is none the less guilty of murder because she is a woman.

Li Hung Chang, the Chinese Premier, whose recent tour around the world has been an event of unsurpassed dignity and splendor, is finding out since his return home that a prophet may be very great throughout the world, but still without honor in his own country. It seems that the Chinese Emperor is jealous of the great diplomatic part which his Prime Minister has assumed and has therefore undertaken to humiliate him. He has been required, much against his will, to perform certain obsolete acts of personal homage and has been deprived of his salary for one year.

Joe Souza, aged twelve, who killed his stepfather two weeks ago in Tehama county, while the latter was beating the boy's mother, has been held for trial. Of course the trial will be purely a farce.

COMMISSIONER'S SALE ON FORECLOSURE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY OF INYO, STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

LUKE REGAN, Plaintiff, vs. RICHARD D. DUNPHY, Defendant. } Commissioner's Sale on Foreclosure.

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF AN ORDER of sale and decree of foreclosure issued out of the Superior Court of the County of Inyo, State of California, on the 30th day of Sept., 1896 in the above-entitled action wherein Luke Regan, the above-named plaintiff, obtained a judgment and decree against Richard D. Dunphy, defendant, on the 30th day of Sept. 1896, which said decree was on the 13th day of Oct., 1896, recorded in Judgment Book No. 2 of said Court, at page 10. I am commanded to sell the lands and premises situated, lying and being in the County of Inyo, State of California, and particularly described as follows, to-wit:

The lands and premises directed to be sold by this decree are situated, lying and being in the Cerro Gordo Mining District, County of Inyo, State of California, known and described as the "Morning Star Mine" and Mining Claim, together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in anywise appertaining.

Notice is hereby given, that on Tuesday, the 17th day of Nov., 1896, at 11 o'clock a. m. of that day, in front of the Court House of said County of Inyo, at Independence in said County, I will in obedience to said order of sale and decree of foreclosure, sell the above described property, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, with interest thereon and costs, to the highest and best bidder for cash, in lawful money of the United States.

JAMES R. MOFFETT,
Commissioner.
Dated: Independence Oct. 13, 1896.

MARRIED.

HODGE—BROWN—At the the residence of Mrs. Naylor in Independence, Nov. 26, 1896, by Rev. T. Nicholas, Jacob Hodge and Allie R. Brown.

Weather is clear but cold.

Mrs. J. B. Steward of Big Pine was in town yesterday.

Mrs. J. R. Moffatt and Miss Susie Rougney went to Big Pine yesterday.

Mrs. D. Holland returned to Keeler from San Francisco last Monday evening.

Frank Inman passed through Independence Monday on his way from Randsburg to Bishop.

Gustave Sanger and son, Will, were down from Alvord last Monday on business at the Land Office.

The first installment of taxes will be due and delinquent on and after next Monday, November 30th.

If every person who is musical was a musician as well, what a blessing it would be to some communities.

Mrs. Marie Leonard, of Firebaugh's, Fresno County, was in Independence early in the week on land business.

Winter is approaching—Wednesday and Thursday nights all the hydrants in town that were exposed were frozen up.

Last Sunday, Harry, the seven-year-old son of A. A. Neil, of Aberdeen, was sever l bitten on the head and face by a vicious dog.

Another indication that confidence has been restored—one marriage license was issued Wednesday and marriage already consummated, with prospects for several more in the near future.

The dancers of town gave vent to their thankfulness by joining in a social hop at the residence of Mr and Mrs. John Baxter Thursday evening. The youths of town are assuming a "go as you please and we'll take you home, maybe"—attitude toward the gentler sex.

William C. Snodgrass, once a Justice of the Peace of Sumner, and later a police officer of Kern, died last night at the county hospital at the advanced age of 75 years. He had been there sick for ten months. Mr. Snodgrass came to this county in the early eighties from Inyo county. He was a native of Ohio and had resided in California since the times of '49. He had no family.—Californian.

Down in Los Angeles a young lady worked four weeks selling baking powder for a Chicago firm that advertised to give a safety to the person selling the largest number of packages of their goods in a month's time. The lady thought she was going to get a safety bicycle, but imagine her surprise when she received instead a big pin, such as is used to keep the baby's bloomers on with.

A Pathetic Instance.

A minister back in Philadelphia who saw for the first time two girls dressed in bloomers and riding bicycles, thus expressed his feelings on the subject:

"My heart bled and I could hardly retain the tears, shocked, as I was, beyond expression."

The poor, dear, innocent, shocked creature. He ought to be put in a glass case and shut up in a monastery, where he would not run the risk of ever again seeing such a pretty spectacle as a young bloomer bicyclist.—Californian.

Another Peril.

"Well, what's the matter with you?" inquired the cigar dealer of his newspaper friend who appeared with a black eye and broken nose. "Been fighting?"

"No; collision."

"Railroad?"

"No."

"Bicycle and dog?"

"No."

"Street car and a milk wagon?"

"No."

"Well, what?"

"I was sailing in Benjamin's airship last night with Attorney Collins and collided with a flock of geese."—L. G. Carpenter in S. F. Post.

California Miners' Association.

In the State Miner's Association meeting in San Francisco last week Inyo was represented by F. W. Edelsten, of Los Angeles. We are not informed as to what credentials he presented. However, Mr. Edelsten is editor of the Mining and Metallurgical Journal, of Los Angeles, and a close student of the mining interests of this side of the mountains, so the county's representation was doubtless satisfactory on the point of ability.—Register.

There was a petition circulated in this section, and signed by everybody to whom presented, asking that Mr. Edelsten be accorded a hearing in the Miners' Convention as the representative for Inyo county.

Location Notices

A location notice can be written or printed on paper, cloth or parchment.

It can be cut or engraved upon wood, stone or any metallic substance, or be printed upon a board.

Analine ink quickly fades upon exposure to the elements; hence a posted notice should not be written with red ink or upon the typewriter.

An exposed notice of location which is written with a lead pencil will remain legible longer than one written with ink.

There is no legal reason why a location notice should not be written with lead pencil.

It will be presumed that every locator is a citizen of the United States. Hence, it is unnecessary to state the fact of citizenship tn the location notice.

It is unnecessary to make any allusion in the notice of location to the age or sex of the locator.

A minor, a female or a corporation can make a valid location of mining ground.

The words "dated on the ground" are mere surplusage in the location notice.

It is not necessary to state in the location notice the size character and position of the boundary monuments.

It is only the recorded notice of location which would contain a reference to a natural object or permanent.

Unless required by local rule or the custom of miners a valid location can be made without either posting or recording a notice of location.

Unless regulated by local rule or custom a location notice can be recorded before it is posted. Generally, the order in which these acts are performed is immaterial.

Recording a notice of location is not required by the Federal Statute, and when not required by local laws is unnecessary and useless if made.

Knew What He Wanted

A sallow individual in a faded brown overcoat sat down on a stool at one of the railway lunch counters the other morning and said to the proprietor:

"Give me a cup of coffee and one of your expurgated sandwiches."

"What kind?" asked the proprietor.

"Expurgated," replied the other. "One of those vacuum sandwiches for which your establishment is justly celebrated."

"I haven't any kind but those under that glass cover."

"That's all right. That's the particular variety I want."

He helped himself to one of them and lifted off the upper lid.

"This is what I call a sandwich nit," he observed, eyeing it critically, yet approvingly. "There's nothing supererogatory about it. It's one of these hiatus sandwiches. It's a sandwich with an alibi," he added, replacing the lid and studying the outer surface of it intently. "It's an absent sandwich. It's a sandwich that has failed to arrive. I have seen times when I would have given worlds to——"

"Say," interrupted the proprietor, "if you don't like that sandwich you needn't eat it. That's all there is about that."

"Who said I didn't like it? Didn't I call for it? I generally know what I want. For this particular occasion and for this specific luncheon I happen to want one of your negative sandwiches—one of your shadowy deflated, dream sandwiches, and like a man, sir, I call for it. Anything wrong about that?"

"You needn't get gay," grumbled the man behind the counter. "Did you order coffee?"

"I did. Give me, if you please, a cup of your best suppositious coffee."

"I've only got one kind of coffee," replied the sulky caterer.

"That's the kind I want. A cup of your universally admired non-existent coffee—your famous nullification coffee. Accompanied if you please, by a small pitcher of your vague phantasmal, visionary, depopulated cream. I am fasting to-day."

And while the man in the faded brown coat munched the sandwich and sipped the coffee in a slow, absent-minded way, the proprietor stared at him, and breathed hard, and longed to throw him out of the window.—Chicago Tribune.

The Press, the paper started at Gardnerville a few weeks ago, is dead. Will Lee, the proprietor, moved the plant to Carson, Friday, on a hay wagon. I is reported that he took in only $4 on subscription, payable in barley, alfalfa hay and a side of bacon.—Genoa Courier.

A Good Suggestion.

Let some bright man just elected to the Legislature put this down in his note book: We need an amendment to the election law requiring election boards to to post at the door of the polls a complete showing of the result in the precinct.

As it is now, in many cases it is impossible to ascertain how an election has gone until the official canvass by the Boards of Supervisors. Some precinct boards finish their count, seal up the papers (including those they should retain, as by law provided), send them to the Clerk and go home before it is possible for the press to ascertain results, except a reporter is placed in each polling place and kept—a thing not usual nor to be demanded of newspapers.

But outside of that consideration the people are entitled to know the result of the count at once, and to read it at the polls as soon as the tallying is finished. Posting the result at once is also desirable as preventive of fraud, for instance of alteration of the papers after they leave the hands of the inspectors and judges.

This posting should be protected by severe penalties for destroying, defacing or changing the posted sheet. It is the law in several States, and it is one of the old features of the Australian ballot law before it was Americanized.—Sac. Record Union.

Rural Italian Peasants.

We have been seeing the agricultural side of this people's life in quiet, little known valleys of northern Italy, and more and more have they impressed us by their industry and amiability. For friendliness perhaps they have no equals except the Irish peasantry, and for indefatigable labor of the most arduous and detailed and menial kind surely they cannot be surpassed. Every available foot of land, sometimes reclaimed from the barren rock, sometimes, as here, lying along the river bank in flats drained by little canals cut deep in the soil, bears witness, in its perfect neatness of cultivation, to the patient labor of this people. Women were to be seen every day in the Val Molenco, not far from Bormio, carrying on their backs huge baskets of manure for fields hundreds of feet above the valleys, up steep zigzag paths. Every few yards a rest is necessary, and the weight is temporarily removed by resting the baskets upon the low stone walls, against which the tired bearers themselves lean. Thus they gradually, but always cheerfully, get their burdens up the mountain sides. In other places, these baskets may be seen full of earth, which is to cover some rocky plateau a few yards square, and make it ready for planting, in the south with olive or fruit trees in the north with flax or grass.—New York Post.

How Long Cut Flowers Last.

The thin stemmed roses are the most perishable of all flowers. To this class belong the Bridesmaid (pink), Mermet (very delicate pink), the Bride (white) and the Perle (yellow). Even with care they will seldom retain their beauty over the second day. The Gusino (delicate pink) and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan roses are more enduring and will often keep three and even four days. The American Beauty will last three and four days, but after the second day changes color, the rich red assuming a purplish hue.

Violets will often retain an appearance of freshness for four and five days, but after the second day all perfume is gone. Hyacinths and fresia look well for three or four days, and sometimes even longer, while mignonette and carnations can, with a little care, be kept for almost a week. Daffodils have even greater staying powers and have been known to look fresh at the advanced age of eight and nine days.

Gaslight and furnace heat are poisonous to flowers, and they should be kept as much as possible away from the latter. At night they should be put in a cool (not freezing) place, with the stems in water and the tops well covered with wet tissue papper.—New York Journal.

He Wanted His Discharge.

In a regiment in India a private wanted to get home, and saw no other way than shamming deafness. He reported himself sick, and was sent to the hospital. The doctors tried all sorts of ways to find him out, but he was too sharp for them. One day the doctor determined to try him by firing a pistol off just behind him, but he got to hear of the experiment, and of course was prepared for it.

As he and his chum were sitting on their cots opposite each other smoking, the doctor stole into the room, unawares as he thought, and fired the pistol close to his ear. He, however, took no notice of the report, but on seeing the smoke he turned to his chum and said:

"Put your pipe out, you fool, the doctor will be round directly."

His ruse worked.—Pearson's Weekly.

Assay, Essayer, Tasters.

"Cups of assay" and "tasters" were alike in this, that they were both employed for assaying or testing the wine, but in form, weight and value they were different. A cup of assay was a small cup, into which the wine from the hanap, or standing cup, was poured. Sometimes the cover of the standing cup served for the same purpose. The cups of assay used at the coronation of Anne Boleyn were of standard gold, but generally they were of silver, and appear to have been from six to nine ounces in weight. A taster was a small, shallow, circular bowl, with a flat handle, weighing about three ounces.—Notes and Queries.

Hit and Miss Mind Reading.

It is told of a young man in this city that he called on his best girl the other evening. As conversation became dull they sat on the sofa at opposite ends, and, after a silence of considerable duration, evidently spent by both in hard thought, she mustered up courage enough to ask him what he was thinking about. He, hoping to please her, replied:

"I was thinking of the same thing you were."

She, turning around, answered quicker than lightning, "I'll slap your mouth if you try it!"—Exchange.

The common garden slug has the means of spinning a gelatinous thread by which he can let himself down from dangerous heights.

No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race. — Phillips

Those Dear Cows.

From first to last, Arnold must have published between 20 and 30 volumes, and as we are told that writing did not come easily to him it is clear that Mr. Morley's description of him as one of the most occupied men of his time is not exaggerated. His correspondence therefore was confined almost wholly to his own family, and is naturally filled with such personal matters as they would be most concerned to know. The fireside concerns of his daily existence—his children, his pets, his health, his garden, the places he visited, the dinners he ate, and the people in whose company he ate them.

The bulk of these letters were written to his mother, and news of his children naturally plays a large part in them. "They go everywhere with me that I will take them, and their talk is delightful. We passed a yard the other day where there were cows, and N. said: 'What a nice smell from those dear cows, papa! Isn't it kind of the dear cows to give us smells?'" One can imagine with what pleasure the grandmother would read such instances of the little one's quickness and sympathy. One can imagine with what pleasure the father would write them. But alien eyes, bent possibly upon their own children and their own cows, may be pardoned for reading unmoved such essentially familiar and domestic records. There is a saying: "Never tell your troubles. You only take up the time of the man who is waiting to tell you his." In this hard and busy world the saying perhaps holds good of other things than troubles. — Macmillan's Magazine.

New York as a Literary Mart.

Edward W. Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal, writes of "The American Literary Center," and presents the claims of New York and Boston (between which cities it may be inferred he believes it rests) for the distinction. He summarizes New York in this way: "New York undoubtedly offers the largest market for literature of any city in America. This is naturally so, as must always follow in the case of the largest and wealthiest city of any country. The Empire City controls the largest number of publishing houses, even though it cannot claim all the principal ones. It has a larger number of magazines and periodicals of all kinds than any other city, even though it is deprived the right to the first and foremost of all American literary periodicals, the leading eclectic magazine of the world or of the most widely circulated channels of serial literature. But, unquestionably, it has the majority, and a powerful majority it is. It has libraries galore, one might almost say, yet the two principal libraries of the country are in other cities. Its list of authors, resident of the city or near it, is long and representative, embracing some of the most gifted pens which make contemporaneous American literature. If all our best writings do not emanate from its immense places of output, a goodly portion undeniably do."

Poor Louisa's Sore Throat.

A teacher in a national school who had been much annoyed by truancy, says London Answers, has recently been stringent in enforcing the rule that her scholars, on their return to school after an absence, must bring her a note stating in full the cause of such absence, the note to be in the writing of a parent or guardian. The following is a note brought by one of her pupils after two weeks' absence:

"Louisa was absent monday, please excuse her.

"Louisa was absent toosday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent wensday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent thursday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent friday, she had a sore throte.

"Read this over again for the next week."

Beauties of "the Code" Illustrated.

Two young Russian officers attached to the Orsk infantry regiment recently quarreled over these cups in a cafe chantant at Orenburg, and one of them struck the other across the cheek with his open hand. The subalterns were intimate comrades, and the aggressor made an ample and satisfactory apology when he came to his senses. This was cordially accepted by his friend, but the regimental court of honor decreed that the officers should fight, and a duel was arranged with pistols at 20 paces. The young lieutenant who had received the affront and forgiven his friend was hit in the thigh and crippled, and consequently is unfitted for further service.—London News.

Something For Nothing.

"It is astonishing," said an observant woman not long ago, "how much some people will give if they think they are getting something for nothing. Now I teach my children constantly that anything of value can never be had for nothing. There is such a thing as luck, and there are bargains, but in the end you will find that such luck never comes to those who are always on the lookout for it, and that bargains are obtained only by those who know what to buy, where to buy and how to buy."

Perseverance is surely the keystone of luck,
And fortune will favor the one who has pluck.
—Brooklyn Eagle.

Applying the Proverb.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of an extremely religious man who lives on Lost creek in Greenup county. He is a close student of his Bible, and doesn't propose to live on Lost creek in the next world if he can help it. A few nights ago he was searching the Scriptures and ran across the admonition of Solomon, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." After studying the matter over he concluded that the rod had not been applied often enough to his own family of seven hopefuls, and he yanked the entire seven out of bed and administered a sound whipping to very one of them.

What He Wanted.

In the midst of a stormy discussion a gentleman rose to settle the matter in dispute. Waving his hand majestically he began, "Gentlemen, all I want is common sense."

"Exactly," interrupted another. "That is precisely what you do want."—London Tit-Bits.

Phrygian Cap and the Knout.

The French republic, thanks to the alliance between the Phrygian cap and the knout, has done its best to make its soil insecure for those who fled from the tyranny of czardom. Among Russian exiles living at Zurich, Geneva, and Lausanne spies have latterly been introduced, even in the guise of alleged lady students of the same nationality. In England alone proscribed Russians are free, and in England, partly in consequence of their contact with the quiet operation of parliamentary institutions, partly on account of a change of feeling among the cultured classes of their own country, men like Stepniak, the author of "Underground Russia" and kindred works, who once had a hand in the fierce active fight against autocracy by all available means of irregular warfare, have gradually ceased to be connected with the organization of so called terroristic attempts. Their London monthly organ, Free Russia, shows how much they have moderated their demands.

If the young emperor would only consent to the introduction of some kind of representative assembly, such as all European nations have and as even the sultan had adopted shortly before Turkey was beaten down by the armies of Alexander II, the reigning czar would rally around him many who are at present his adversaries in what is believed to be the camp of the most extreme party.—North American Review.

Reading a Book.

Many readers judge of the power of a book by the shock it gives their feelings, as some savage tribes determine the power of muskets by their recoil, that being considered best which fairly prostrates the purchaser.—Longfellow.

The Sheriff of Siskyou.

By BRET HARTE.

The sheriff took his revolver from his pocket and deliberately cocked it. Then leaning down he unbuckled the strap from the major's ankles. A wild hope that his incomprehensible captive might seize that moment to develop his real intent; that he might fly, fight or in some way act up to his reckless reputation sustained him for a moment, but in the next proved futile. The major only said, "Thank you, Tom," and stretched his cramped legs.

"Get up and go on," said the sheriff roughly.

The major began to slowly ascend the hill, the sheriff close on his heels, alert, tingling and watchful of every movement. For a few moments this strain upon his faculties seemed to invigorate him, and his gloom relaxed, but presently it became too evident that the prisoner's pinioned arms made it impossible for him to balance or help himself on that steep trail, and once or twice he stumbled and reeled dangerously to one side. With an oath the sheriff caught him and tore from his arms the only remaining bonds that fettered him. "There!" he said savagely. "Go on. We're equal."

Without replying the major continued his ascent. It became steeper as they neared the crest, and at last they were both obliged to drag themselves up by clutching the vines and underbrush. Suddenly the major stopped, with a listening gesture. A strange roaring, as of wind or water, was distinctly audible.

"How did you signal?" asked the major abruptly.

"Made a smoke," said the sheriff as abruptly.

"I thought so. Well, you've set the wood on fire."

They both plunged upward again, now quite abreast, vying with each other to reach the summit as if with the one thought only. Already the sting and smart of acrid fumes were in their eyes and nostrils. When they at last stood on level ground again, it was hidden by a thin film of grayish blue haze that seemed to be creeping along it. But above was the clear sky, seen through the interlacing boughs, and to their surprise they who had just come from the breathless, stagnant hillside a fierce wind was blowing. But the roaring was louder than before.

"Unless your three men are already here your game is up," said the major calmly. "The wind blows dead along the ridge where they should come, and they can't get through the smoke and fire."

It was indeed true. In the scarce 20 minutes that had elapsed since the sheriff's return the dry and brittle underbrush for half a mile on either side had been converted into a sheet of flame which at times rose to a furnace blast through the tall, chimneylike conductors of there shafts, from whose shriveled sides bark was crackling and lighted dead limbs falling in all directions. The whole valley, the gully, the bar, the very hillside they had just left, was blotted out by a creeping, stifling smoke fog that scarcely rose breast high, but was beaten down or cut off cleanly by the violent wind that swept the higher level of the forest. At times this gale became a sirocco in temperature, concentrating its heat in withering blasts which they could not face or focusing its intensity upon some mass of foliage that seemed to shrink at its touch and open a scathed and quivering aisle to its approach. The enormous skeleton of a dead and rotten redwood not 100 yards to their right broke suddenly like a gigantic firework into sparks and flame.

"Go on. It's our only chance."

The sheriff had grasped the full meaning of their situation. In spite of his first error—the very carelessness of familiarity—his knowledge of woodcraft was greater than his companion's, and he saw their danger.

"Come," he said quickly, "we must make for an opening, or we shall be caught."

The major smiled in misapprehension.

"Who could catch us here?"

The sheriff pointed to the blazing tree. "That," he said. "In five minutes it will have a posse that will wipe us out."

He caught the major by the arm and rushed him into the smoke and apparently in the direction of the greatest mass of flame. The heat was suffocating, but it struck the major that the more they approached the actual scene of conflagration the heat and smoke became less until he saw that the fire was retreating before them and the following wind. In a few moments their haven of safety—the expanse already burned over—came in sight. Here and there seen dimly through the drifting smoke the scattered embers that still strewed the forest floor in weird, nebulous spots, like will-o'-the-wisps. For an instant the major hesitated. The sheriff cast a significant glance behind them.

"Go on. It's our only chance," he said imperatively.

They darted on, skimming the blackened or smoldering surface, which at times struck out spark and flame from their heavier footprints as they passed. Their boots crackled and scorched beneath them. Their shreds of clothing were on fire. Their breathing became more difficult until providentially they fell upon an abrupt, fissurelike depression of the soil which the fire had leaped and into which they blindly plunged and rolled together. A moment of relief and coolness followed as they crept along the fissure, filled with damp and rotting leaves.

"Why not stay here?" said the exhausted prisoner.

"And be roasted like sweet potatoes when these trees catch?" returned the sheriff grimly. "No." Even as he spoke a dropping rain of fire spattered through the leaves from a splintered redwood before overlooked that was now blazing fiercely in the upper wind. A vague and undefinable terror was in the air. The conflagration no longer seemed to obey any rule of direction. They scrambled out of the hollow and again dashed desperately forward.

Beaten, bruised, blackened and smoke grimed, looking less human than the animals who had long since deserted the crest, they at last limped into a "wind opening" in the woods that the fire had skirted. The major sank exhaustedly to the ground. The sheriff threw himself beside him. Their strange relations to each other seemed to have been forgotten. They looked and acted as if they no longer thought of anything beyond the present. And when the sheriff finally arose, and, disappearing for several minutes, brought his hat full of water for his prisoner from a distant spring that they had passed in their flight, he found him where he had left him, unchanged and unmoved.

He took the water gratefully and after a pause fixed his eyes earnestly upon his captor. "I want you to do a favor to me," he said slowly. "I'm not going to offer you a bribe to do it either nor ask you anything that isn't in line with your duty. I think I understand you now if I didn't before. Do you know Briggs' restaurant in Sacramento?"

The sheriff nodded.

"Well, over the restaurant are my private rooms—the finest in Sacramento. Nobody knows it but Briggs, and he has never told. They've been locked ever since I left. I've got the key still in my pocket. Now, when we get to Sacramento instead of taking me straight to jail I want you to hold me there as your prisoner for a day and a night. I don't want to get away. You can take what precautions you like—surround the house with policemen and sleep yourself in the anteroom. I don't want to destroy any papers or evidence. You can go through the rooms and examine everything before and after. I only want to stay there a day and a night. I want to be in my old rooms, have my meals from the restaurant as I used to and sleep in my own bed once more. I want to live for one day like a gentleman, as I used to live before I came here. That's all. It isn't much, Tom. You can do it and say you require to do it to get evidence against me or that you want to search the rooms."

The expression of wonder which had come into the sheriff's face at the beginning of his speech deepened into his old look of surly dissatisfaction. "And that's all you want," he said gloomily. "You don't want no friends—no lawyer? For I tell you straight out, major, there ain't no hope for ye when the law once gets hold of you in Sacramento."

"That's all. Will you do it?"

The sheriff's face grew still darker. After a pause he said: "I don't say 'no,' and I don't say 'yes.' But," he added grimly, "it strikes me we'd better wait till we get clear of these woods before you think of your Sacramento lodgings."

The major did not reply. The day had worn on, but the fire, now completely encircling them, opposed any passage in or out of that fateful barrier. The smoke of the burning underbrush hung low around them in a bank equally impenetrable to vision. They were as alone as shipwrecked sailors on an island girdled by a horizon of clouds.

DUTIES OF CITIZENSHIP.

A Decency That Is Languid Is More to Be Feared Than Criminality.

"The thing we have the most to fear," writes Dr. Parkhurst in an article on "The Young Man as a Citizen" in the Ladies' Home Journal, "is not the depravity and the criminality that are rampant, but the decency that is languid and the respectability that is indifferent and that will go junketing when a state is on the edge of a crisis or go fishing on a day when the city is having its destiny determined for it at the polls. Would that there could be some legislative enactment by which every reputable traitor of the sort could be denaturalized and branded with some stigma of civic outlawry that should extinguish him as an American and cancel his kinship with Columbus, Fourth of July and 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee.'

"I speak with full assurance when I say, for instance, in regard to the city of New York, that there is no single moral issue capable of being raised in regard to its administration where the great preponderance of sentiment would not be found to be on the side of honesty as against corruption, provided only that sentiment were sufficiently resolute and alert to come forward and declare itself. The purpose of a campaign under such circumstances is not to convince people of what is right, but to stimulate to the point of action those who are already convinced."

Another Bolt.

"What was the trouble between Jibsley and his wife?"

"Oh, the common story—they couldn't agree on the money question."

"Say! It is too bad that politics"—

"Who said anything about politics? The row began because Jibsley insisted that he ought to have at least a third of his salary to spend on himself."—Indianapolis Journal.

When Spoken at the Altar.

Miss Gushington—Oh, Mr. Henpeck, what do you consider to be the saddest words ever spoken?

Mr. Henpeck (shuddering)—I will.—New York Press.

In 1805 St. Thomas was devastated by fire, government and other property to the value of $30,000,000 being destroyed.

Until B. C. 432 the Greeks began the year at the winter solstice; after that, at the summer.

A REMARKABLE POND.

Blasted Into Existence and Now Has an Uncanny Reputation.

Cradled at the foot of a circling group of hills lies the most mysterious and at the same time ghostly sheet of water in Alameda County, California.

For years it has borne the name of "Blair's pond," and during its existence has hidden beneath its dark surface more human bodies than any similar patch of water of its size in these regions. Indeed, there has not been a coroner in Alameda County since 1875 until the present time who has not been obliged to record on the death rolls some victim of the weird pond, and, strangest of all, each one of the martyrs to the dismal hole has been a good swimmer.

Prior to 1872 there was not even a suggestion of water on the spot. At that time a firm of stone contractors named Bates & Wells realized that hidden in the hills was a quantity of very valuable paving rock, which then commanded a big price from the city of Oakland. They conceived the idea of opening an extensive quarry and getting the city's contract for the paving, which was to be done. A long lease was obtained from Blair, the owner of the land. Then the first quarry in Alameda County was opened.

With time the better quality of rock became scarce, so orders were given to sink a wide shaft and work out the lower stratum. This task was undertaken in the summer of 1873, and had progressed with such good results that the hole was gradually enlarged until it covered a considerable area. Then, again, it became necessary to go deeper into the hill.

This time extensive preparations were made for blasting. When all was ready a mighty charge was adjusted, and with the explosion which followed a vast torrent of water spouted forth from the excavation.

Before the astonished workmen had time to realize what had happened they were knee-deep in the flood. Their tools were submerged, and it was with difficulty that the mules attached to the carts were rescued. The cars on the tracks remained laden with rock, and to-day, if the pool were drained, the complete equipment would be found in the pit.

So sudden was the deluge that within an hour where once stood a prosperous quarry nothing was to be seen but a rising mass of water.

As soon as possible every effort was made to empty the new lake, but in vain. It is always full of water, but never overflows.—San Francisco Examiner.

Shallow Plowing for Wheat.

It used to be said that wheat would bear deeper plowing than any other grain crop. If the furrow brought to the surface one or two inches of subsoil, that made the soil firmer and less pervious to water, thus lessening the injury by freezing and thawing. But Western winter wheat growers, and spring wheat growers, also, have learned a plan that is even better than deep plowing, because it costs much less. They do not plow at all, merely cultivating the surface among the grain stubble and seeding on that. The wheat makes just as good a fall growth, and even better, than where the stubble is turned under, thus drying the soil. Most of the wheat roots are kept near the surface, for the rains do not penetrate farther than the cultivator has gone. This saving of plowing enables a farmer cheaply to get a large acreage into wheat, and if he gets a fair crop he is ready to undersell the Eastern wheat grower, who keeps on plowing for wheat in the expensive, old-fashioned way.

Unlucky "Quarter to Six."

Seventy-five per cent. of the people we discharge every year, remarked the head floor walker of a mammoth dry-goods establishment, which employs over a thousand people, lose their places on account of "a quarter to six."

"A quarter to six" is the hour at which preparation is made for closing the day's business. At that hour the male clerks begin to cover their stocks and the female clerks commence to arrange themselves to go home. Usually a number of ladies come in at this hour, and the clerks, eager to go home, in answer to questions of customers, usually say, "We are just out" of what the customer happens to want.

Day after day we discharge girls for this reason, and fifteen times out of twenty you ask a girl why she lost her place and she will invariably answer on account of "a quarter to six."

A Civilized Gorilla.

At the aquarium in Berlin there is a big gorilla whose habits are a great deal more correct than those of most of his distant relatives. He gets up at 8 o'clock in the morning, takes a bath, and uses soap without hesitation. When his toilet is completed he takes a cup of milk, after which he eats two big loaves of bread with Frankfort sausages and smoked Hamburg beef, all of which he moistens with a glass of beer. At 1 p. m. he takes a bowl of soup, with rice, potatoes and a wing of chicken. He uses his knife, fork and napkin like a born aristocrat, but when he thinks his keepers are not looking he discards the implements of civilization and plunges his muzzle into the bowl, as if to give evidence of the melancholy fact that even a gorilla can be a hog.

The Brute.

"Could you spare me a little money this morning, dear?" said she.

"Really," the brutal husband replied, with a harsh, dyspeptic laugh, "judging from the biscuits, I thought you had more dough to burn."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Practical.

He—Without joking, Elsie, I do adore you. When I look at you there is such a commotion in my breast.

She—And in mine, too, Harry; it must be the lobster salad.—Tit-Bits.

Theory and Practice.

A—What are you now going to do with all the money you made by your pamphlet against marriage?

B—I shall set up house with my Anna.—Elderstedter Wochenblatt.

It takes as long to get spoons and plates returned to their right owners after a church social, as to clear up a field after a battle.

DINED WITH THE CZAR.

Honors Showered Upon Joseph Francis, Inventor of the Lifeboat.

In 1855 Mr. Francis went to Europe. He introduced his inventions at many courts. He remained abroad about 12 years and made many warm friends in many lands by his modest, unassuming frankness and his habitual courtesy. And he received great honors at the courts of kings.

I shall not soon forget the stories he told of the events witnessed in these European capitals, they were all so interesting, and he was so wholly frank and natural in their narration. He was long at the court of the czar, a sovereign who was deeply interested in the work of the inventor. When Mr. Francis went to Europe, he had letters of introduction from many prominent Americans. In St. Petersburg he called upon the American minister. Here, as he told me laughingly, he forgot all about his letters of introduction, one of which was from the president of the United States and another from the secretary of state, and merely told some of the officials connected with the American legation that he wished to meet the czar.

"What!" the official ejaculated in amazement. "Meet the czar? Impossible, man! Do you realize what you are asking—an introduction to the czar of Russia? Why, it would take you a month to get an introduction to the grand duke, to say nothing about getting into the presence of the czar."

Mr. Francis went away, and, with true American independence, called at the palace of the grand duke. He sent in his plain visiting or business card. He had not long to wait. The attendant ushered him into a magnificent salon in the ducal palace. "From the farther side of the splendid room," said the old gentleman to me as he related the story, his eyes glowing with the recollection of the triumph of the hour, "appeared the Grand Duke Constantine, one of America's truest friends, and, both of his hands outstretched, he took both of mine in his as he reached me."

The grand duke asked what he could do for Mr. Francis, the man of whom they had heard so much, whose life saving service was even then of such value to Russia's seacoast, and whose inventions promised so much for Russia—what could he do? Mr. Francis said that he would like to meet the czar.

Certainly. The grand duke would make an appointment with him to dine in a day or two with the czar at the palace.

And this was his introduction to Alexander II, a ruler who never forgot this gentle, modest American, and who through long years owned him as a cherished friend.

A day or two afterward Mr. Francis strolled into the office of the American legation. I doubt not there was a merry twinkle in his eye, for no man loved a quiet joke better than he did.

The official to whom Mr. Francis had expressed his desire to meet the czar spoke up jokingly:

"Well, how are you coming on in your efforts to meet the czar?"

"I have seen him."

"What," with doubt in face and voice, "you have seen the czar? How did you see him, pray tell?"

"I dined with him yesterday," was the simple answer.

And it was not the last time he was entertained at the imperial palace.—W. S. Harwood in St. Nicholas.

The Reason.

At a recent wedding in an English town the officiating minister asked how the name of one of the witnesses was spelled, to which he received the reply, "McHugh." The minister then inquired how it was that the witness spelled his name in that way when his sister spelled hers "McCue," to which the witness responded, "Please, sir, my sister and me didn't go to the same school."

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

THE WIND FROM THE NORTH.

"We'll have a cold spell pretty soon,
For the backklog's blaze is blue."
And we sat and gazed
While the backlog blazed,
Nor wondered if the sign were true.

"The wind from the north will come
With frost in the breath it blows,
And the lingering haze
Of the autumn days
Will drear into winter's snows."

"The red and yellow leaves on the trees
Will be seared to a dull, dead brown,
For the blast that chills
Is the blast that kills
When the wind from the north comes down."

And we huddled up to gran'ma's knees
As she sat in the big armchair,
With her head bent low
In the hearth fire's glow,
And her hands in our tangled hair.

We watched the blue blaze flicker out
And the backlog, to embers turned,
Change from red to gray
Till an ash heap lay,
Turning cold where the fire had burned.

PRODIGAL'S RETURN.

"Yes, mother, he will come. Of course, he will come!" and the girl turned her drawn and anxious young face toward the cottage door, just as if her blind mother could see the action.

It is probable that the old woman divined the longing glance from the change in the girl's tone, for she, too, half turned toward the door. It was a habit these two women had acquired. They constantly looked toward the door for the arrival of one who never came through the long summer days, through the quiet winter evenings; moreover, they rarely spoke of other things; this arrival was the topic of their lives. And now the old woman's life was drawing to a close, as some lives do, without its object. She herself felt it, and her daughter knew it.

There was in both of them a subtle sense of clinging. It was hard to die without touching the reward of a wondrous patience. It was cruel to deprive the girl of this burden, for in most burdens there is a safeguard, in all a duty, and in some the greatest happiness allotted to human existence.

It was no new thing, this waiting for the scapegrace son; the girl had grown up to it, for she would not know her brother should she meet him in the street. Since sight had left the old mother's eyes she had fed her heart upon this hope.

He had left them eighteen years before in a fit of passionate resentment against his father, whose only fault had been too great indulgence for the son of his old age. Nothing had been too good for dear Stephen—hardly anything had been good enough. Educated at a charity school himself, the simple old clergyman held the mistaken view that no man can be educated above his station.

There are some people who hold this view still, but they cannot do so much longer. Strikes, labor troubles and the difficulties of domestic service; so-called gentleman farmers, gentleman shopkeepers and lady milliners—above all, a few colonies peopled by university failures—will teach us in time that to educate our sons above their station is to handicap them cruelly in the race for life.

Stephen Leach was one of the early victims to this craze. His father, having risen by the force of his own will and the capabilities of his own mind from the people to the church, held, as such men do, that he had only to give his son a good education to insure his career in life. So everything—even to the old parson's sense of right and wrong—was sacrificed to the education of Stephen Leach at public school and university. Here he met and selected for his friends youths whose futures were insured, and who were only passing through the formula of an education so that no one could say that they were unfit for the snug government appointment, living or inheritance of a more substantial sort that might be waiting for them. Stephen acquired their ways of life without possessing their advantages, and the consequence was something very nearly approaching to ruin for the little country rectory. Not having been a university man himself, the rector did not know that at Oxford or Cambridge, as in the army, one may live according to one's tastes. Stephen Leach had expensive tastes, and he unscrupulously traded on his father's ignorance. He was good-looking, and had a certain brilliancy of manner which "goes down" well at the varsity. Everything was against him, and at last the end came. At last the rector's eyes were opened, and when a narrow-minded man's eyes are once opened he usually becomes stony at the heart.

Stephen Leach left England, and before he landed in America his father had departed on a longer journey. The ne'er-do-well had the good grace to send back the little sums of money saved by his mother in her widowhood, and gradually his letters ceased. It was known that he was in Chili, and there was war going on there, and yet the good old lady's faith never wavered.

"He will come, Joyce," she would say, "he will surely come."

And the girl would go to the window and draw aside the curtains, looking down the quiet country road toward the village.

"Yes, mother, he will come," was her usual answer; and one day she gave a little exclamation of surprise and almost of fear.

"Mother," she exclaimed, "there is someone coming along the road."

The old lady was already sitting up in bed staring with her sightless orbs toward the window.

Thus they waited. The man stopped opposite the cottage, and the two women heard the latch of the gate. Then Joyce, turning, saw that her mother had fainted. But it was only momentary. By the time she reached the bed her mother had recovered consciousness.

"Go," said the old lady, breathlessly, "go and let him in yourself."

Downstairs on the doorstep the girl found a tall man of 30 or thereabouts with a browner face than English suns could account for. He looked down into her eager eyes with a strange, questioning wonder.

"Am I too late?" he asked in a voice which almost seemed to indicate a hope that it might be so.

"No, Stephen," she answered. "But mother cannot live much longer. You are just in time."

The young man made a hesitating little movement with his right hand and shuffled uneasily on the clean stone step. He was like an actor called suddenly upon the stage, having no knowledge of his part. The return of this prodigal was not a dramatic success. No one seemed desirous of learning whether he had lived upon husks or otherwise, and with whom he had eaten. The quiet dignity of the girl, who had remained behind to do all the work and bear all the burden, seemed in some subtle manner to deprive him of any romance that might have attached itself to him. She ignored his half-proffered hand, and, turning into the little passage, led the way upstairs.

Stephen Leach followed silently. He was rather large for the house, and especially for the stairs; moreover, he had a certain burliness of walk, such as is acquired by men living constantly in the open. There was a vaguely pained look in his blue eyes, as if they had suddenly been opened to his own shortcomings. His attitude toward Joyce was distinctly apologetic.

When he followed the girl across the threshold of their mother's bedroom the old lady was sitting up in bed, holding out trembling arms toward the door.

Here Stephen Leach seemed to know better what to do. He held his mother in his arms while she sobbed and murmured out her joy. He had no words, but his arms meant more than his lips could ever have told.

It would seem that the best part of happiness is the sharing of it with someone else. "Joyce," was the first distinct word the old lady spoke. "Joyce, he has come at last. He has come! Come here, dear. Kiss your brother. This is my first born—my little Steve."

The young man had sunk upon his knees at the bedside, probably because it was the most convenient position. He did not second his mother's proposal with much enthusiasm. Altogether he did not seem to have discovered much sympathy with his sister whom he had left in her cradle.

Joyce came forward and leaned over the bed to kiss her brother while the old lady's hands joined theirs. Just as her fresh young lips came within reach he turned his face aside, so that the kiss fell on barren ground on his tanned cheek.

"Joyce," continued the old lady feverishly, "I am not afraid to die now, for Stephen is here. Your brother will take care of you, dear, when I am gone."

It was strange that Stephen had not spoken yet, and it was perhaps just as well, because there are occasions in life when men do wisely to keep silent.

"He is strong," the proud mother went on. "I can feel it. His hands are large and steady and quiet and his arms are big and very hard."

The young man knelt upright and submitted gravely to this maternal inventory.

"Yes," she said, "I knew he would grow to be a big man. His little fingers were so strong—he hurt me sometimes. What a great mustache! I knew you had been a soldier. And the skin of your face is brown and a little rough. What is this? what is this, Stephen, dear? Is this a wound?"

"Yes," answered the prodigal, speaking for the first time. "That is a sword cut. I got that in the last war. I am a colonel in the Chilian army, or was, before I resigned."

The old lady's sightless eyes were fixed on his face as if listening for the echo of another voice in his deep, quiet tones.

"Your voice is deeper than your father's ever was," she said, and all the while her trembling fingers moved lovingly over his face, touching the deep cut from cheek bone to jaw with soft inquiry. "This must have been very near your eye, Stephen. Promise me, dear, no more soldiering."

"I promise that," he replied, without raising his eyes.

Such was the home coming of the prodigal. After all he arrived at the right moment in the afternoon, when the house was ready. It sometimes does happen so in real life, and not only in books. There is a great deal that might be altered in this world, but sometimes, by a mere chance, things come about rightly. And yet there was something wrong, something subtle, which the dying woman's duller senses failed to detect. Her son, her Stephen, was quiet and had not much to say for himself. He apparently had the habit of taking things as they came. There was no enthusiasm, but rather a restraint, in his manner, more especially toward Joyce.

The girl noticed it, but even her small experience of humankind had taught her that large, fair-skinned men are often thus. They are not "de ceux qui s'expliquent," but go through life placidly, leaving unsaid and undone many things which some think they ought to say and do.

After the first excitement of the return was over it became glaringly apparent that Stephen had arrived just in time. His mother fell into a happy sleep before sunset, and when the active young doctor came a little later in the evening he shook his head.

"Yes," he said, "I see that she is asleep and quiet—too quiet. It is a foretaste of a longer sleep. Some old people have it.

For the first time Joyce's courage seemed to give way. When she had been alone she was brave enough, but now that her brother was there, woman-like, she seemed to turn to him with a sudden fear. They stood side by side near the bed, and the young doctor involuntarily watched them. Stephen had taken her hand in his with that silent sympathy which was so natural and so eloquent. He said nothing, this big, sun-stained youth. He did not even glance down at his sister, who stood, small, soft-eyed and gentle at his side.

The doctor knew something of the history of the small family thus momentarily united, and he had always feared that if Stephen Leach did return it would only kill his mother. This, indeed, seemed to be the result about to follow.

Presently the doctor took his leave. He was a young man engaged in getting together a good practice, and in his own interest he had been forced to give up waiting for his patients to finish dying.

"I am glad you are here," he said to Stephen, who accompanied him to the door. "It would not do for your sister to be alone; this may go on for a couple of days."

It did not go on for a couple of days, but Mrs. Leach lived through that night in the same semi-comatose state. The two watchers sat in her room until supper time, when they left their mother in charge of a hired nurse, whose services Joyce had been forced to seek.

After supper Stephen Leach seemed at last to find his tongue, and he talked in his quiet, almost gentle voice, such as some men possess, not about himself or the past, but about Joyce and the future. In a deliberate, business-like way he proceeded to investigate the affairs of the dying woman and the prospects of her daughter; in a word, he asserted his authority as a brother, and Joyce was relieved and happy to obey him.

It is not in times of gayety that friendships are formed, but in sorrow or suspense. During that long evening this brother and sister suddenly became intimate, more so than months of prosperous intercourse could have made them. At 10 o'clock Stephen quietly insisted that Joyce should go to bed, while he lay down, all dressed, on the sofa in the dining room.

"I shall sleep perfectly. It is not the first time I have slept in my clothes," he said simply.

They went upstairs together and told the nurse of this arrangement. Joyce remained for some moments by the bedside watching her mother's peaceful sleep, and when she turned she found that Stephen had quietly slipped away. Wondering vaguely whether he had intentionally solved her difficulty as to the fraternal good night, she went to her own room.

The next morning Mrs. Leach was fully conscious and appeared to be stronger; nevertheless she knew that the end was near. She called her two children to her bedside and, turning her blind eyes toward them, spoke in broken sentences:

"I am ready now—I am ready," she said. "Dears, I am going to your father—and * * * thank God, I can tell him that I left you together. I always knew Stephen would come back. I found it written everywhere in the Bible. Stephen—kiss me, dear!"

The man leant over the bed and kissed her.

"Ah," she sighed, "how I wish I could see you—just once before I die, Joyce!" she added, suddenly turning to her daughter, who stood at the other side of the bed, "tell me what he is like. But I know * * * I know—I feel it. Listen! He is tall and spare, like his father. His hair is black, like his father's—it was black before he went away. His eyes, I know, are dark—almost dark. He is pale—like a Spaniard!"

Joyce looked across the bed with slow horror dawning in her face, looked into a pair of blue eyes beneath tawny hair, cut short, as a soldier's hair should be. She looked upon a man big, broad, fair—English from crown to toe—and the quiet command of his lips and eyes made her say:

"Yes, mother, yes."

For some moments there was silence. Joyce stood pale and breathless, wondering what this might mean. Then the dying woman spoke again: "Kiss me," she said. "I * * * am going. Stephen first—my first born! And now, Joyce * * * and now kiss each other—across the bed! I want to hear it * * * I want * * * to tell * * * your * * * father."

With a last effort she raised her hands, seeking their heads. At first Joyce hesitated, then she leant forward, and the old woman's chilled fingers pressed their lips together. That was the end.

Half an hour afterward Joyce and this man stood facing each other in the little dining room. He began his explanation at once.

"Stephen," he said, "was shot—out there—as a traitor. I could not tell her that! I did not mean to do this, but what else could I do?"

He paused, moved toward the door with that strange hesitation which she had noticed on his arrival. At the door he turned to justify himself.

"I still think," he said gravely, "that it was the best thing to do."

Joyce made no answer. The tears

LITERARY LITTLEBITS

The bicycle is the theme of a novel, "A Widow on Wheels," soon to be published in London.

Mr. Swinburne has in the press a larger and more important poem than any he has published for some years.

It is said that one of the leading magazines has decided to expend about $30,000 for woodcuts during the ensuing year.

The late Robert Louis Stevenson made $150,000 in twelve years and there are many other modern writers whose incomes are as large.

The latest surprise in collaboration is a story written in English by M. Daudet and R. H. Sherard. These writers make an oddly assorted pair. One is a master; the other is a facile writer of gossipy journalism.

Douglas Jerrold was sometimes witty at the expense of his wife. He once told her, when she was no longer young, that he wished wives were like bank notes, so that one of 40 could be exchanged for two of 20.

Renan made a strange remark not long before his death: "I fear that the work of the twentieth century will consist in taking out of the waste-basket a multitude of excellent ideas which the nineteenth century has heedlessly thrown into it."

It appears that Lafcadio Hearn's passion for the orient has led him to go the whole length of expatriation, and he has changed his name. The familiar syllables give place to Y. Koijumi, which is certainly more picturesque, but hardly as attractive to a Western mind.

An important collection of letters to be published in Cosmopolis is made up of the correspondence of Tourguenieff, and includes letters to Mme. Viardot, Flaubert, Dumas fils, Guy De Maupassant, M. Bola, and others. They will be published in six installments.

A marble statue to Lord Byron has been unveiled at Athens, presented to the city by Demetrius Stefanovic Scheylizzi. The suggestion has been made that a miniature of the work might appropriately be presented to any one who can pronounce the doctor's name without sneezing.

"I take my work too seriously," writes Hall Caine to a friend who had asked him whether he cared for the criticisms his books received. "and I am too much immersed in it and in love with it either to be carried away by the warmest eulogy or disturbed by the severest censure."

Tolstoi recently went to the theater for the first time in thirty years. It was his own play, "The Power of Darkness," that was being given, and he hoped to escape observation in the top gallery. But he was quickly identified, and attracted so much more attention than the actors that he fled in haste.

Sir Edwin Arnold is said to have one of the most remarkable memories in England. A friend of the poet's chanced to read to him the opening line of one of Whitman's poems the other day, whereupon Arnold interrupted him and repeated he entire poem from memory. Arnold then recited every poem in the book, which happened to be the "Leaves of Grass," and succeeded in recalling every word of even the most obscure poems.

Abel Hermant, the author of "La Meute," the successful new piece in Paris, has had a lively literary career. First he wrote a story of college life, which was publicly burnt by the students of the Ecole Normale. Then he wrote a story of military life, which was burnt in the presence of the regiment by its indignant colonel, while in due course all the officers challenged the novelist. And already the new play has provoked a duel with the Prince De Sagan.

John Hawthorne is the son of Nathaniel Hawthorne. He was born in 1846, but he does not show his 50 years. When he was a boy of 7 some lady's remark on the fact that he was "weak chested" stung him and he determined to make that comment impossible in the future. How well he succeeded is evidenced by the fact that while he was in college his chest measure was forty-eight inches, and it is well known that the late John C. Heenan, the pugilist, advised the young man to enter the ring.

An Experiment in Profit-Sharing.

An Ohio manufacturing concern, which has been experimenting with profit-sharing plans for eleven years, has finally evolved a plan radically different from profit sharing and more like a permanent wage increase, with a provision for withholding the increase from the more negligent workmen. At first the commonly talked of plan of dividing a certain portion of the profits among the workmen was tried, each employe sharing according to his earnings. The first dividend to employes was declared at the end of six months, and was at the rate of 13.47 per cent on the wages paid. One workman received $275 dividend. But it was found the men did not take much interest in this plan, so it was modified and the men were arbitrarily classified according to the interest they were understood to show in their work and their efficiency, the most active receiving a larger share than the others, and all dividends being withheld from those who were noticeably careless. The money so withheld did not go to the firm, but was added to the part allotted to the workmen and divided among them. Then the firm became a corporation, and the plan was changed. The average amount paid had been a 12 per cent dividend, so it was decided to pay a uniform rate of 12 per cent on wages, the right to withhold dividends for neglect being retained. Employes are helped to buy stock if they wish. Employers and employes are said to be satisfied with this arrangement.—New York Tribune.

MANNED BY AMERICAN SAILORS.

Secretary Herbert's Efforts to Bring Natives Into the Navy.

A vigorous and generally successful effort has been made by Secretary of the Navy Herbert to restore to the American navy its former national character by the employment of American seamen in place of mariners recruited from various European countries and from Canada. These foreign sailors have been attracted to the American navy by the promise of larger pay than is offered by other governments. Under a law passed by Congress, upon the recommendation of Secretary Herbert, the naturalization of sailors without the formality of residing on shore was authorized under certain conditions. Since this law went into operation the secretary has begun the policy of enlisting as many Americans as possible, and the foreign element is gradually disappearing from our navy.

Sailors on American ships are better paid than any others; Italian sailors have the poorest pay. Yet Italy stands fourth among nations in respect of the number of seamen employed in commerce, England being first, the United States second, and Norway and Sweden third. Originally, and for many years before the introduction of steamships, the Yankee sailors from New England towns and the Southern sailors from North and South Carolina and other seaboard States made the navy of the United States famous and feared. The early history of our navy was a long succession of brilliant triumphs. Big guns, armor plates and machinery have combined to reduce the importance of the individual sailor. The standard of compensation in the navy continuing to be low, American seamen were not attracted to it; foreign-born seamen took their places. The force became denationalized, so to speak; and it is this condition which Secretary Herbert is trying to change.

Rear Admiral Beardslee, commanding the Pacific station, is reported as declaring that the course adopted for recruiting for the ships only young American citizens as far as possible has accumulated a large body of excellent men, natives of the Pacific coast. When their terms of service have expired, he says, and they return to their homes, "there will be mingled with the people a very strong element of well-trained men who will undoubtedly join the naval militia." In this way, by the extension of naturalization, and by the establishment of restrictions upon the employing of subjects of alien governments who have their homes in other lands, it is designed to restore a national character to the American navy. Another aid to this is the naval militia now organized in fifteen of the forty-five States, a force of 2,800 men, upon whom, in case of war, the protection of the coasts and harbors, in default of adequate fortification, will in part devolve.—New York Sun.

Typhoid Fever and Bananas.

William C. Ussery, M. D., of St. Louis, says that the best food for those suffering from typhoid fever is the banana. In this disease, he explains, the lining membrane of the small intestines becomes intensely inflamed and engorged. Eeventually it begins sloughing away in spots, leaving well defined ulcers. At these places the intestinal walls become dangerously thin. A solid food, if taken into the stomach, is likely to produce perforation of the intestines and dire results will follow. Therefore solid foods, or foods containing a large amount of innutritious substances, as compared with nutritious substances, are dangerous and are to be avoided. The banana, although it may be classed as a solid food, containing as it does 95 per cent. nutrition, does not possess sufficient waste to irritate these sore spots. Nearly the whole amount taken into the stomach is absorbed and gives the patient more strength than can be obtained from other food.—New York Tribune.

Mistress of the Robes.

Of all the official banquets in London that are organized each year on the occasion of the birthday of Queen Victoria, there is none more curious than that given by the mistress of the robes to her majesty. The mistress of the robes is the feminine head of the royal household, and has under her orders all the ladies in waiting, the maids of honor, the bedchamber women and the readers. She receives a large salary and perquisites, and is regarded as possessing such an amount of influence that, since the days of Sir Robert Peel, fifty years ago, her tenure of office has invariably been co-existent with that of the cabinet.

Naturalized at Ninety.

Ned Riordan, 90 years of age, was granted his first naturalization papers by United States Commissioner Nichols at Kansas City. Riordan has lived in this country seventy years, having come from Ireland when 20 years old. In the civil war he served in the Seventh Missouri Volunteers under Col. John F. Phillips, now United States district judge. He is over six feet tall and is remarkably well preserved for one of his advanced age. At present he is living at the soldiers' home in Leavenworth.

A New Jersey Band.

A horse in a little New Jersey town dropped dead when it heard the local band play.

Mixing Fertilizers.

Here is a plan of a mixing box for mixing home-made fertilizer, as illustrated in the Ohio Farmer. The box should be made stationary to a centerpiece so that it will revolve with a crank. Fig. 1 shows wooden pins running through centerpiece, necessary for good work. C, lid for opening and closing box. A should be turned to B for filling, and as shown for contents to be removed. The box should also be large enough to hold 200 pounds of commercial fertilizer, or about two-thirds full for satisfactory work.

BOX FOR MIXING FERTILIZER.

Turnips Among Corn.

Turnips will not only bear frost without injury, but it is the belief of many farmers that their quality is improved after the first frost. Certainly when they are grown among corn they make a large part of their growth after the corn is cut. This is commonly thought to be owing to the root crop being out from under the shade of the corn. This may be one reason, but another doubtless is that as soon as the corn is cut its roots cease to draw upon soil fertility. As the soil is warm and fermentation constantly goes on, nitrogenous plant food is constantly being liberated. This is still more so after a frost hard enough to kill most of the weeds, but not severe enough to affect the turnips. There is often a growing season of five or six weeks after the first frost, and in this time the turnips will often double the growth they had made before the frost.

Simple Framing of Building.

There has been a wonderful change in recent years in the manner of framing buildings, reducing the size of timbers used and doing much less cutting of mortises and tenons. But there are still other changes in the direction of simplicity that are not commonly known. One of these is shown in the accompanying sketch, which very nearly explains itself. Instead of a heavy sill, a two-inch plank is laid upon the stone foundation, bedded into the cement. Upon this are laid the planks that are to support the floor boards. These are spiked to the uprights, which are themselves spiked to the sill plank. The same plan of spiking the frame can be carried out in the upper portion of the building. In this way all the frame is made of plank, and no mortising or tenoning is required. This plan is highly useful for small buildings, while there are plans to use a somewhat similar construction in the framing of barns.

AN INEXPENSIVE HOUSE FRAME.

Destroying Burdocks.

The burdock is a bad weed for a careless or lazy farmer. If it is allowed to seed, the product of seed is so enormous from each plant that once they get scattered over the ground the place will not be free from them for years after. Yet it is not a hard weed to kill. All that is necessary at any stage of growth is to cut the plant off one to two inches below the surface and fill in the hole that the part of the root cut out has occupied with common salt. The root is full of sap, which first dissolves the salt, and then as the moisture gradually increases, it rots away the root that is left in the ground, making a new growth of shoots above impossible. One application is enough, and it takes less than a minute to make it.

Quick Maturing.

There is less demand every year for the extra large over-fattened hogs that have taken two years to reach maturity. What is wanted for profitable feeding is a thrifty pig that in six or seven or eight months' growth will average a pound of pork per day. This can usually be made at a profit. The heavier hog costs more to keep, and its pork is neither so good nor will it now sell so well as pork that weighs 200 pounds or less per carcass.

Dark Stables.

Every farmer and dairyman should have a stable than can be darkened, in which to put his cows morning and evening during milking time. Being in a darkened room the flies do not trouble them, and they stand quietly while being milked, and are glad to be freed from the pests which torture them when outside the stable. A cow must have the patience of Job to stand quietly and be milked, while the flies are sucking blood from almost every part of her body; and because she kicks and flops her tail around to drive off these pests, the patience of the milker becomes taxed, and the poor beast is too frequently beaten and kicked, because she tries to rid herself of the flies that are biting her. Try a dark stable for milking, and you will never be satisfied without one thereafter.

Feeding Hens Wheat.

Wheat is good to make hens lay, but it must be fed in moderation. Hens are very fond of wheat, and if given what they will eat of it they will fatten as fast as if the grain were corn. It is best always to make the hens earn what they get by sprinkling their grain among cut hay or straw. If clover can be got that should be used, and when the wheat gets scarce the hens will fill up on clover, which is an excellent food for egg production. No kind of grain can be depended on for a full ration for fowls in winter. They need some grass or vegetables or clover, so that the grain may not lay in a hard lump on their gizzards.

Potato Assorting Device.

The device shown below for assorting potatoes is made by constructing a box 12 feet long and 4 feet wide, with three partitions. The back piece is about 4 feet high, the next 3 and the third 1½ feet. Nail pickets on for screens. Put them rather closely together on the first incline, and further apart on the second. This separates into three grades. Shovel them on the slide above the first incline and push down slowly and the assorting is accomplished.—Farm and Home.

How to Hitch a Horse.

To hitch a horse to a smooth post or tree without the rope slipping down or untying is shown in the illustration. The end is turned round the rope, forming a small circle, carried round the post, returned above the rope, passed round the post again, pulled over the last turn of the rope and through the first circular turn made by a, coming out at b.

Dairy Dots.

Watering is as important as feeding.

Winter the best, and make meat of the rest.

The milk dairyman cannot feed exactly as the butter maker.

A cow's biography is expressed, not in good deeds, but in quarts of milk.

Cows which give a large quantity of yellow milk are not always the best butter cows.

Smoking an old pipe where there is milk or butter, is first-rate evidence that the smoker ought not to be in the dairy business.

Every time you swear at a cow she makes you pay for your ill manners. Every time you kick her you kick pennies out of your pocket-book.

Fine butter will always sell readily at a profitable price, while poor butter fails to find a customer and loses in quality daily, and in the end makes a loss to every one who has anything to do with it.

Farm Notes.

Improvements are always in order, but—pay your debts first.

Potato bugs appear to have been unusually numerous this year.

Exports of wheat for July and August aggregated 12,755,100 bushels, against 8,515,288 for the same months of 1895.

The secret of grass culture is to save all liquid manures, and get both liquid and solid upon the grass land as soon as possible after made.

The old plan of a summer fallow for tillage land is hardly worth following. It pays best to keep the land busy and always covered with some crop.

The farmer or gardener who has permitted one weed to mature its seed has deliberately provided himself with the work of killing many weeds next season.

Some farmers do not make farming pay, others manage to get along fairly well, and some are making money. That is the sum of the situation, and it is about the same in every other business.

Bimetallism in England.

The Bimetallic League, on November 5th, issued the following manifesto from its office, No. 29 Cornhill, London: "The Presidential campaign in the United States, has, so far as it relates to the currency question, resulted in a victory for international as opposed to national bimetallism. The official platforms of both the great parties affirmed the necessity of bimetallism—the 'sound money' policy adopted by the Republican party at St. Louis, in July last, which Major McKinley unreservedly accepted, and upon which he has been elected, being as follows: 'We are unalterably opposed to every measure calculated to debase our currency or impair the credit of our country. We are, therefore, opposed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver except by international agreement between the leading commercial nations of the world, which we pledge ourselves to promote.' This declaration is a stronger pronouncement in favor of international bimetallism than has ever been put forward by any political party in previous Presidential campaigns, and is entirely in accord with the policy which the Bimetallic League has consistently maintained. In these circumstances, and in view of the strong agitation for 'free silver' (or national bimetallism) in the United States, and the fact that this agitation is likely to be maintained and developed, a genuine and determined effort on the part of the new government may confidently be anticipated to bring about an international bimetallic agreement for opening the mints of various countries to silver as well as gold. The Presidential contest has brought home to the people of this country the vital importance of the monetary question, and the grave dangers which threaten the industrial, commercial and financial interests of Great Britain, so long as it is not settled on international lines. The unreasonable attitude of this country in past efforts to arrange an international settlement is mainly responsible for the attempt, just witnessed, to induce the United States to act alone, and for the consequent unrest and disturbance in commercial and financial circles. It is, therefore, earnestly hoped that this country, and the other great powers of Europe, will heartily cooperate with the United States in their endeavor to place the metallic money of the world upon a permanent, sound and scientific basis."

This manifesto is signed by Lord Aldenham, President of the League; Messrs. H. R. Grenfell, Robert Barclay, Herbert C. Gibbs, and by Henry McNiel, general secretary.

---

The Grand Jury of Warren county, Kentucky after a session of several days, has returned indictments for election frauds against five prominent citizens, two of whom are gold standard Democrats and three Republicans. The names of the men indicted for whom bench warrants were issued are: Edward Smallhouse, John Sanders, Magistrate G. E. Speck and his son, Louis Speck, and Albert Berry. Smallhouse is one of Bowling Green's best known young business men. Magistrate Speck is an ex-member of the Legislature and a prominent Republican politician. He and his son live at Richardsville. Sanders lives at Rockville, and Berry at Hadley.

The indictments charge the men with offering money on election day and the day before to voters to remain away from the polls. Smallhouse and Sanders are gold standard Democrats. The Congressional race in that district was very close and as Dr. Hunter has contested on the ground of fraud this prosecution will be valuable to John S. Rhea, as tending to show that not only did he have a majority on the face of the returns, but that more were kept from voting for him.

---

A New York dispatch says that there is going to be an extra session of Congress called within twenty days after the inauguration of President-elect McKinley. This information comes from Canton in a positive and direct way, and its reliability cannot be questioned.

It is the opinion of the President-elect that no revenue legislation can be accomplished this Winter, and though the newspaper dispatches disagree regarding his attitude toward the present agitation for the Dingley bill, there is substantial authority for the statement that McKinley is averse to raising expectation as to its enactment, which, in his judgment, cannot be realized. He fears the business community would become demoralized should the bill pass the House again, only to be set aside by the Senate, and does not share Senator Sherman's opinion that the measure can pass the Senate before the reorganization of that body on March 4th.

---

The government has ordered 100,000 new guns for the U. S. army. The 100,000 ordered some time ago have been completed and the recent lot ordered will be ready in a few months. What Uncle Sam wants of all these guns is a mystery. There is no danger of war with any other country, but there may be necessity for the use of these arms in this country before the wave of prosperity inaugurated by McKinley gets through rolling over the country.

---

Hanna explains the conditions upon which he will take a place in the Cabinet. He prefers being a Senator from Ohio, and John Sherman must decide whether he will accept the Treasury portfolio or remain Senator. Sherman will be tendered the position of Secretary of the Treasury. If he accepts Hanna will become Senator, but if he declines, Hanna will go into the Cabinet.

Letter Lists.

Letters remaining uncalled for at the Independence Post Office this date:

Cummins, W. T. Keys, P. W.
Gill, Mrs. Carrie Keys, J. M.
Gill, Fred Smith, Mrs. C. B.

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

Who hit you in the eye?

Weather is simply perfect for this time of year.

D. Holland returned from Randsburg on Tuesday last.

W. R. Tibbetts was down from Big Pine on Monday last.

Dressed pork is selling in Independence at six cents per pound.

Charles Anthony came in from Darwin Thursday morning.

Fred Crocker and A. McDonald were down from Big Pine yesterday.

Some people get angry when they are accorded a serenade a la charivari.

The hens are on a strike and their fruit is a scarce article in our home market.

Ed. M. Clarke was down from Bishop on Monday returning Tuesday morning.

J. W. Murphy and Lester Laird left for Salt Wells valley Wednesday morning.

Several bars of gold bullion have been shipped from here in the past two weeks.

The leading question: "Did you attend the social gathering last Monday evening.

J. A. McKenzie of Darwin and T. C. Boland of Keeler were visitors at the capital early in the week.

Horace Bellows and Mr. Dyke came up from Haiwai Meadows early in the week and spent a couple of days in town.

It is reported that quite a number of our local cattle men have disposed of all their beef cattle to outside buyers.

We are informed by the Tax Collector that the first installment of State and County taxes have been nearly all paid up.

Henry Levy and Henry Cartier left on Tuesday afternoon for a trip to Randsburg. They will be absent for about two weeks.

T. B. Rickey is having the road around Black Rock spring put in good repair. This is an improvement that has long been needed.

S. L. Jones, of Fish Springs, has lately finished working a small lot of ore and succeeded in getting $150 worth of the yellow metal.

Charles and John Collins, George Clarke and John Miles left here Tuesday morning with a band of horses for the Los Angeles market.

Tom Rickey is shipping cattle from his Inyo county range to San Francisco. They are coming over the C. & C., and a special train passed through Thursday night.—Hawthorne Bulletin.

Holiday Goods are arriving by every train for Nathan Rhine. The Holiday opening will be given on Saturday evening, Dec. 12. A cordial invitation is extended to all and especially the children. Don't forget the day or date.

That humming noise heard on Monday evening was not made by the machinery in the airship as some may have supposed, but was simply the old boys testing the tone of their steel piano preparatory to taking part in the charivari.

Dave Werling came down from Fish Springs last week, bringing with him the result of a clean-up from a run of ore from his mine in the shape of a $1,000 bar. Dave says he has more of the same kind of ore in sight, and will make another run early in the Spring.

The great $10,000 fight which took place in San Francisco last Wednesday night between Fitzsimmons and Sharkey, was awarded to Sharkey in the 8th round on a foul. Latest reports say that Sharkey is still confined to his room and suffering intensely from its effects.

Bar of bullion No. 23 from the Reward mine was shipped to San Francisco yesterday morning. It was valued at about $1,000. This is the second bar shipped from this mine during the month. They have lots of ore in sight, and it is confidently expected that this will be a dividend producing mine for years to come.

That Serenade.

Last Monday evening the usually quiet town of Independence was awakened from her lethargy by the sounds of divers instruments, such as cow bells, bull fiddles, tin cans, fish horns, wornout circular saws, and, in fact, everything in that line that would tend to make a harmonious sound for the occasion. Old men, young men, boys, women, girls and children all seemed to vie with each other in making the greatest noise on their respective instruments, and all joined in the frolic and congregated at the temporary home of the newly married couple. For one hour and three-quarters the not to be foiled crowd dispensed sweet harmony to the lately wedded pair before they would show up or loosen their purse strings for the benefit of the crowd. Finally at the solicitation of friends he was persuaded to part with a few small pieces of silver to procure refreshments for the serenaders. Heretofore, those who were well known and were married in this vicinty considered it a slight if they were overlooked in the matter of a friendly charivari; but not so with this aged benedict, with youthful notions, who took it as a personal insult and became wild with rage, using language that would put to shame the vocabulary of the old-time canalers. Not only was his language harsh and ungentlemanly but his treatment of some of his would-be guests was striking—as was evidenced by a loss of considerable cuticle from the countenance of one of the throng. Take it all in all the serenade was a success, and had the moral and physical support of nearly the entire community, and goes to show that the good people of Independence can attend a charivari wtthout animus.

Baseball at Bishop.

From a letter from a friend at Bishop we are able to give the result of the game played there Thanksgiving:

"When the boys found out that your town boys were not coming the kid boys around town challenged the nine that was picked out to play against your town and the following is the result:

The following is the score made by the Senior nine:

A. Fitzgerald, shortstop, made 2 runs, 3 outs, 1 base hit, 1 two base hit, 4 errors

A. Plumley, catcher, made 2 runs, 2 outs, 2 base hits.

F. C. Scott made 3 runs, 1 fly catch, 1 base hit, 4 errors and made a double play. Position 2nd base.

O. E. Duenweg, right field, made 2 runs, 3 outs, caught 1 fly, 1 two base hit, struck out twice and stole 3d base nicely in first inning.

W. Le Gros, left field, made 2 runs, 2 outs, left on base once, hit with pitched ball once, caught one fly and went to base on balls once.

J. Kewley made 3 runs, 1 out, left on base once, made 2 base hits, went to base on balls twice. Played 1st base and catcher.

F. Welch, 3rd base, made 1 run, 2 outs, left on base once, caught one fly, made 1 one base hit and one 2 base hit, 2 errors.

Ed Dehy, pitcher, made 1 run, 3 outs, caught one fly, one 2 base hit, struck out once.

Ducky, Indian, made 2 runs, 2 outs and 3 base hits.

The following is the score made by the Kid nine.

Cleveland, Indian, catcher, made 2 runs, 3 outs, 2 errors and one base hit.

A. McNally, made 3 outs, left on base 2, caught one fly, one 1 base hit.

J. Henderson, third base, made 1 run, 2 outs, left on base 2, caught 1 fly, 2 errors, 1 base hit.

R. Yaney, field, made 3 outs, left on base 1, 1 base hit, struck out once.

Dugan, Indian, pitcher, made 3 outs, left on base 1, 2 errors, went to base on balls once.

Jim Dehy made 2 runs, 1 out, left on base 1, hit by pitcher 1, 2 errors and went to base on ball once.

Geo. Clarke, 2nd base, made 2 runs, 1 out, left on base 1, hit by pitcher 1, 2 base hits.

C. Drake, left field, made 1 run, 3 outs.

F. Bulpitt, center field, made 1 run, 2 outs, caught 1 fly, 1 base hit and made the double play of the day by catching a long fly to center and doubling it back to first put the man out there.

The game was only seven innings.

SCORE BY INNINGS.

| | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Seniors | 2 | 0 | 1 | 2 | 8 | 5 | - | - | 18 |
| Kids | 0 | 0 | 0 | 2 | 6 | 0 | 1 | - | 9 |

The Kids went to the bat first.

The weather was fearfully cold and made it very disagreeable playing. It looked at one time as though the Kids were a going to get away with the game as at the end of the 5th inning they were three runs ahead, but they fell down. The last half of the seventh inning was not played as it was too disagreeable."

If mothers would only realize the full significance of the truth expressed in the trite saying: "As the twig is bent the tree inclines," the next generation of men and women would surely be better in every way, for it is true that the future well-being of the man or woman, physically, mentally and spiritually, depends upon the thousand and one little acts of seeming unimportance that make up the child's daily life. It is the home training the child receives that makes its future "for better or for worse."

The Independence Base Ball Club are willing to accept a challenge and play any nine in the county, provided that they are given time enough to get their men together. Quite a number of the boys are at present out of town and in order to insure a game they should be given ample time by the challengers to get together.

California people, from Truckee down to the bay, have been thrown into a state of excitement by seeing something passing through the air which they think is an air-ship. It is probably that McKinley wave of prosperity—ethereal.—Times, Dayton.

Lowell Eugley and Ed. Ober are down from Big Pine.

In Luck.

Judge Arnot, of Alpine county, and Lamar, of Inyo, were in luck to have no opposition to their election this Fall. Judge Arnot has been Judge of the Superior Court of Alpine county for 18 years, and has probably held the office of Judge longer than any man in the State. While his official duties in his own county have been light, there having been very little litigation in that county, he has had much experience on the Bench, having spent much of his time holding Court for brother Judges in Amador, Calaveras, El Dorado, Inyo, Mono and Sacramento counties, where he had many important cases before him, and proved an able Judge, very few of his decisions having been appealed from to the Supreme Court. Judge Lamar, of Inyo, is said to be an able lawyer, and a relative of the late Justice Lamar, of the U. S. Supreme Court, and in due time our Mono friends will have him here to close up cases in which Judge Virden is disqualified to act, while Judge Virden will perform a like duty for him in Inyo county.—Chronicle-Union.

We take issue with Bro. Folger on the above named gentlemen being in luck. We claim that the people of Alpine and Inyo counties are lucky in having men of such sterling integrity and worth willing to act as Judges for them.

His Shoes Made of Human Skin.

A Philadelphia physician has his shoes made from the skin of negroes. He obtains the epidermis from bodies which have been used for dissecting purposes in a famous medical college. The thighs are flayed, and the skin thus procured is sent to Womelsdorf, near reading, and there tanned by a stolid Berks county yeoman. The result is a beautiful leather, extremely soft and pliable, very lustrous, and suggestive of a fine and but very thick piece of kid. The shoes are beautiful to look upon, and grasp the feet kindly. This story is told from actual personal knowledge.—Phil. Times.

As development work progresses on the new mine of Barnes & McIver the ledge improves in size and the ore is of better quality. They intend putting up a 5-stamp mill in the immediate future to work their ore.

Miss Etta Naylor returned home on Monday evening last. She has been acting as agent for the C. & C. R. R. Co., for the past three months at Alvord and Dayton during the absence of the regular employes.

The Salt Wells Valley Borax Company have a force of men now employed doing the yearly assessment work on their. Active operations in the manufacture of borax will begin in the near future.

GUN STOCKS.

The Best Made of Long Seasoned Walnut and Fashioned by Hand.

Gun stocks of good workmanship are made of well seasoned walnut.

"That piece of wood," said a gunsmith, holding up a heavy billet sawed into a rude semblance of a gun stock, "may have been 20 years seasoning. I've known the pile of wood it came from these 17 years. The piece, as you see it, is worth $3. It is English walnut. This piece that I am shaping was worth $4 in the rough. It is German walnut. The Brazilian walnut costs as much as $15 for a single billet."

Cheap gun stocks are made from American walnut, which costs but a trifle in the rough, but is too porous for use in the best guns. Gun stocks are now turned out by machinery, and thus made they are cheap. The best are still handmade, and it costs about $10 to reduce the billet of seasoned walnut to the finished and ornate stock. Most stocks are now made with the pistol grip feature in addition to the shoulder piece. Doubtless the stock as a whole is a development from the pistol handle. The traditional ornamentation is a series of crossed lines. Skilled gunsmiths spend much time and care upon the fashioning of the stock. After it has been shaped to the right form it is finished to a smooth and uniform surface with laborious sandpapering, and finally shellacked and rubbed down and polished after the manner of treating the best cabinet made furniture. A gunsmith may spend two days or more in making a stock, and a handmade stock of Brazilian walnut may be worth $25.

Fancy woods are not much used in gun stocks that are to be anything but show pieces. Mahogany is too brittle for the purpose, and rosewood is too heavy. The finishing has to be of a sort to resist water, and hence ordinary varnish is not used in polishing a well made gun stock. There are comparatively few gunsmiths in town that make a specialty of handmade stocks, and those are usually Germans. A gunsmith is occasionally asked to make an especially ornate stock with carvings, and possibly even inset pearl, ivory or gold. These stocks are costly, but for practical purposes they are less useful than the plain stock of English, German or Brazilian walnut.—New York Sun.

Mrs. Isham of 1658.

Mrs. Isham suffered from an eruption on the skin, for which Sir Ralph Verney sends her a homemade lotion, with the following directions (March 22, 1658): "Apply this to your face every night after you are in bed. Let it lie on all night, and wipe it gently off in the morning with a piece of store new Black Cloth, but wash not your face. If you see noe company for a day or two, or three, it is better, for then you may lay it on fresh in the morning, and let it continue on all day and wipe it gently off at night againe with the Black cloath. I had almost forgot to tell you, you must not lay it on cleare, but shake it very well togeather, till tis as thick as caudle, then power out a little quickly into this china box, and, lying on your back, take a piece of spunge, pat it uppon your Face thick and thin togeather. If you like it you may have as much of it as you please at a Weekes Warning."

When it arrives, she is too busy with her husband's ailments to attend to her own. "If my dear Panny is well, I shall scone make use of itt. I doe but thinke with my Blake fase and the Blake cloth what a Blakemor I shall be." Blindness had perchance its compensations for her husband.—Longman's Magazine.

THE CLEVER WOMAN.

Two Kinds of Cleverness, but Only One That Really Pays.

"I wish I were clever."

The woman was charmingly dimpled, wore a Felix gown, was the mistress of a luxurious establishment, and was dispensing tea to afternoon callers in cups of priceless faience.

"Women who write" had been the subject on the tapis, and the remark was a delicate compliment to the woman to whom she handed the tea. She was a successful writer—successful to the extent of making a good income as the fruit of unwearied industry. She had never known the delights of diamonds or her own carriage or a box at the opera. She sometimes spent a hard earned $5 for a drive, but there was neither luxury in the carriage nor swiftness in the steeds, and she was conscious all through the drive that when she went back to the office she would write something about the country in spring or the flotsam of fall foliage and flowers with which the suburban resident could decorate his house and table.

If she took a $2 seat in the opera house, she rarely lost herself completely in the music, as she would have liked to do, because skeletons of paragraphs on theater hats and theater manners, on lovers who make love in the stalls as well as on the stage, and a thousand other things for the next day's paper flitted through her mind. She never had a Felix gown; on the contrary, she walked ten blocks and climbed seven stories to find a dressmaker who would make, though at the same time mar, her one gown for $10. Her modest house was pretty, and she was even quite famous for her petites soupers, at which one sometimes met eminent and always delightful people, but only herself and her one maid knew at what cost of perspiring brow and smutched fingers and aching back those dainty little dishes were evolved.

So there was almost reverence in her tones as she replied:

"My dear, you are the clever woman; you are far more clever than George Eliot. The really smart woman is not the one who makes her own daily bread, even though there be a Nesselrode pudding thrown in now and then. It is she who, without raising her hand, can cause all this luxury to be laid at her pretty satin shod feet. It is like eating a Delmonico dinner and lamenting that you are not the chef who cooked it. Not the woman who 'works, but she who gets all there is in life without working, is the really clever woman."

"May there not be two kinds of cleverness?" said the woman who came to make her adieus.—New York Herald.

MEN WITH POOR MEMORIES.

Names of Friends and Even Servants Suddenly Forgotten.

An amusing instance of aphasia was that of an old country gentleman, who retained in his employ a large number of servants, most of whom he had known since childhood.

Wishing one day to suddenly summon his butler, he found that the man's name had for the moment, as he thought, escaped him. He determined to call his footman, but to his surprise he discovered that he could no more remember the man's name than the butler's.

He was all the more astonished when he found that he had entirely forgotten the names of every man and woman in his service.

He had also forgotten the names of his most intimate acquaintances, and so set about providing substitutes. Every man was known by his peculiarities; certain persons of rank in the neighborhood he called the "king" or the "queen" or the "grand vizier;" his butler and footman were respectively "old waiter" and "young waiter."

Another curious instance of aphasia was that of a famous Berlin physician. He was sitting in his study one morning, writing a receipt for a bill, when suddenly, after having written two words, he lost all sense of their meaning.

He tried to write on, but found he could think of no word. He threw down his pen in despair, and attempted to speak, but was equally unsuccessful.

This was one of those cases, however, which soon pass off, and in a short time he was able to finish the receipt.—Odds and Ends.

Japanese Singing.

Japanese music is crude. There are no written notes to go by in playing, nor has the singer any "Do, Re, Mi" to play by observation, imitation and practice. Instrumental and vocal music are always taught together, and by the same instructor, who is either a lady or a blind man, who has received a musical degree.

The singular method of practicing by a young lady intent upon cultivating her voice is thus described:

During the winter the girl in training clothes herself comfortably, takes a samisen—a banjo with a square body, played with a plectrum of ivory—and ascends every cold night the scaffold erected on the roof of the house for drying purposes.

There she sits for hours, sitting and banging away, until she can endure it no longer. Upon coming down she is so hoarse as to be unable to utter a word.

This training is persisted in until her natural voice has left her and a new clear voice has been acquired, which can be heard in a storm. The girl screams her worthless voice out and away.—Pearson's Weekly.

Sweet Auburn.

Of the many sights of Auburn that were familiar to Goldsmith's eyes, only a few remain. The "busy mill" is still there, but idle now for many a year, and overgrown with tangled weeds. Close by, too, is the "glassy brook," more true to its name than would be imagined from the poem, so perfect is its reflection of hedge and sky. A mile or so away a "decent church" tops the hill, occupying the same site and doubtless perpetuating the outward image of the building in which the boy Oliver often listened to the sermons of the vicar of Wakefield. Not far distant, on the summit of a modest hill that rises from the roadside, stands a rudely built circular stone pillar, which is said to mark the exact center of Ireland. The wayfarer in these parts cannot resist the thought that in the near future, when Ireland gets its share of those who travel in search alike of the beautiful and the shrines of the great, this Goldsmith country will become indeed the center of the Green Isle.—New England Magazine.

SAND SUCKERS.

Old Hulks That Are Profitably Utilized In a New Industry.

As the steamers pass along St. Clair flats, between Lake Huron and Detroit river, the passengers see numbers of old hulks anchored off in shallow water and invariably ask the steward or one of the deck boys what they are there for. The answer always is given in a gruff and contemptuous tone, as if it were a fool's question:

"They're sand suckers."

"What's a sand sucker?"

"Old tubs that suck up sand."

"How do they suck up sand?"

Then the oracle looks at you and grins. He doesn't quite know whether you're a farmer yourself or are guying him, and it takes a great deal more questioning to find out the fact that a new industry has been found to utilize ancient and leaky hulks that are not fit to go to sea.

The bottom of Lake St. Clair and the flats that surround it are covered with beautiful white sand, and these boats go out every morning, anchor in a favorable place near the channel, and drop overboard large hose pipes of canvas or rubber, with iron tips, which sink of their own weight. Then they set the pumps going and suck up the sand, which brings a good deal of water with it, and is deposited in the bottom of the boat. The sand sinks, and the water rises to the surface and returns to the river through holes pierced for its accommodation. Thus, before sunset the hatches are filled with pure, clear sand at a nominal cost, which is unloaded on the docks at Detroit and sold for building purposes.

In early days there was a community of Frenchmen who made a business of gathering this sand and hauling it to the city, but they had to work very hard because of their ignorance of hydraulics and their lack of boats. They poled and rowed up flatboats, which they would fill by jumping overboard in shallow water and shoveling in the sand. They would work a month with the water up to their waists and not get as large a cargo as a modern sand sucker, operated by two men, can pick up in a single day.—Chicago Record.

Sustaining Food.

Raisins, dates and chocolate tablets are all good sustainers for a day's tramp or a day's run on wheels. A country physician who finds himself obliged often to be oblivious to mealtimes says that he finds the compressed chocolate cakes, easily carried and easily nibbled, his food salvation over and over again in the course of the year.—New York Times.

In 1723 over 12,000 houses were burned in Constantinople and 7,000 lives were lost in the fire. In 1745 a fire again raged in the Turkish capital during five days, and a series of terrible conflagrations also occurred in the year 1750.

REFORMS NEED MORE THAN A DAY

To bring them about, and are always more complete and lasting when they proceed with steady regularity to a consummation. Few of the observant among us can have failed to notice that permanently healthful changes in the human system are not wrought by abrupt and violent means, and that those are the most salutary medicines which are progressive. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the chief of these. Dyspepsia, a disease of obstinate character, is obliterated by it.

"Do you think it's unlucky to meet a cross-eyed person?" asked the man of superstition. "I should say not," replied his newly-made friend. "I'm an oculist."

The Sheriff of Siskyou.

By BRET HARTE.

"I'm going to try to sleep," said the major. "If your men come, you can waken me."

"And if your men come?" said the sheriff dryly. "Shoot me."

He lay down, closed his eyes, and to the sheriff's astonishment presently fell asleep. The sheriff, with his chin in his grimy hands, sat and watched him as the day slowly darkened around them and the distant fires came out in more lurid intensity. The face of the captive and outlawed murderer was singularly peaceful; that of the captor and man of duty was haggard, wild and perplexed.

But even this changed soon. The sleeping man stirred restlessly and uneasily, his face began to work, his lips to move. "Tom!" he gasped suddenly. "Tom!"

The sheriff bent over him eagerly. The sleeping man's eyes were still closed. Beads of sweat stood upon his forehead. He was dreaming.

"Tom," he whispered, "take me out of this place—take me out from those dogs and pimps and beggars! Listen, Tom—they're Sydney Duck's ticket of leave men, short card sharps and sneak thieves! There isn't a gentleman among 'em. There isn't one I don't loathe and hate and wouldn't grind under my heel elsewhere. I'm a gentleman, Tom—yes, by God—an officer and a gentleman! I've served my country in the Ninth cavalry. That cub of West Point knows it and despises me, seeing me here in such company. That sergeant knows it—I recommended him for his first stripes—for all he taunts me, d—n him!"

"Come, wake up!" said the sheriff harshly.

The prisoner did not heed him. The sheriff shook him roughly, so roughly that the major's waistcoat and shirt dragged open and disclosed his fine silk undershirt, delicately worked and embroidered with golden thread. At the sight of this abased and faded magnificence the sheriff's hand was staid. His eye wandered over the sleeping form before him. Yes, the hair was dyed, too; near the roots it was quite white and grizzled; the pomatum was coming off the pointed mustache and imperial; the face in that light was very haggard; the lines from the angle of the nostril and mouth were like deep, half healed gashes. The major was, without doubt, prematurely worn and played out.

The sheriff's persistent eyes, however, seemed to effect what his ruder hand could not. The sleeping man stirred, awoke to full consciousness and sat up.

The half breed fell, so did his companion.

"Are they here? I'm ready," he said calmly.

"No," said the sheriff deliberately. "I only woke you to say that I've been thinkin over what you asked of me, and if we get to Sacramento all right, why, I'll do it and give you that day and night at your old lodgings."

"Thank you."

The major reached out his hand. The sheriff hesitated and then extended his own. The hands of the two men clasped for the first, and, it would seem, the last time.

* * * * * *

For the "cub of West Point" was, like most cubs, irritable when thwarted. And having been balked of his prey, the deserter, and possibly chaffed by his comrades for his profitless invasion of Wynyard's Bar, he had persuaded his commanding officer to give him permission to effect a recapture. Thus it came about that at dawn, filing along the ridge, on the outskirts of the fire, his heart was gladdened by the sight of the half breed, with his hanging hammock belt and tattered army tunic, evidently still a fugitive, not 100 yards away on the other side of the belt of fire, running down the hill, with another ragged figure at his side. The command to "halt" was enforced by a single rifle shot over the fugitives' heads, but they still kept on their flight. Then the boy officer snatched a carbine from one of his men. A volley rang out from the little troop—the shots of the privates mercifully high, those of the officer and sergeant leveled with wounded pride and full of deliberate purpose. The half breed fell, so did his companion, and, rolling over together, both lay still.

But between the hunters and their fallen quarry roared the cheval de frise of flame and fallen timber, impossible to cross. The young officer hesitated, shrugged his shoulders, wheeled his men and left the fire to correct any irregularity in his action.

It did not, however, change contemporaneous history. For, a week later, when Wynyard's Bar discovered Major Overstone lying beside the man now recognized by them as the disguised sheriff of Siskyou, they rejoiced at this unfailing evidence of their lost leader's unequaled prowess. That he had again killed a sheriff and fought a whole posse, yielding only with his life, was never doubted and kept his memory green in Sierran chronicles long after Wynyard's Bar had itself become a memory.

THE END.

Bequests For Enterprising Youth.

Now and then we hear of some rich person leaving several hundred thousand dollars to colleges and other institutions. If rich people would desire to perpetuate their memory, a novel and lasting monument to them would be to select 100 or 1,000 deserving young men and bequeath to them $1,000 each with which to start in business. The blessings that would follow such philanthropy cannot be estimated.—Chatham (Va.) Tribune.

CARVINGS IN A CAVE.

Prehistoric Relics Discovered in Central France.

In a letter addressed to the Secretary of the French Academy of Sciences, the well-known anthropologist, M. E. Riviere, announces that, in the course of a mission confided to him by the Ministry of Public Instruction, he has discovered in the Department of the Dordogne a prehistoric cave, of which he has explored 127 meters. Its walls are covered with drawings of animals. These drawings are cut deep in the rock, some of them being buried under stalagmites. This fact is, according to M. Riviere, most important, as it constitutes an undeniable proof of the great antiquity of the drawings in question.

The caves of the Dordogne have for some forty years been noted for their relics of a very early race of men. They were first explored by M. Lartet, of France, and our fellow countryman, Mr. Christy, whose fine collection is now in the British Museum; but the one recently examined by M. Riviere appears to be of exceptional size and interest. The special interest—if, indeed, it be not unique—of M. Riviere's discovery is that he has found some kind of incised ornamentation upon the actual walls of a cave. These carvings are sometimes covered by a film of stalagmite, which shows them to be very far from modern; the patterns, however, of the engravings will be a yet more satisfactory proof of their antiquity; for the style of ornamentation practiced by this folk is not so familiar to experts that they can recognize it without difficulty. Both the objects depicted and the material employed throw considerable light upon the condition of Western Europe at this early age. The antlers of reindeer are commonly used for tools and ornaments, and the bones of this animal abound in the debris on the floors. Obviously, it must then have been as common in Perigord as it now is in the extreme north of Asia or America.

This fact, taking into consideration the present range of the animal, and remembering the habits of the people, indicates that in those days Central France cannot have had a climate more genial than that of Northern Norway at the present era. In addition to these animals, the red deer, the Irish elk, the wild horse, the glutton, and, possibly, the rhinoceros are depicted; but the most interesting sketch of all is a fairly accurate and rather spirited outline of a mammoth scratched on a piece of tusk—these figures sometimes are actually sculptured as if to form the handles of knives or of tools of some kind, but in other cases, as in the last named, they are inclosed on the flat or curved surface of a bone or of an antler. Remains of the cave lion and cave bear have been found, though not abundantly, together with those of the hyena, the ibex, the chamois, and the saiga antelope, which now inhabit the plains of the Volga and Southern Siberia. These men of the Dordogne had probably attained to a stage of civilization comparable with that of the Esquimaux before they were brought into contact with Europeans, and there is so strong a family likeness in the handiwork of the two that Prof. Boyd Dawkins, who has paid much attention to the subject, is of opinion that the Esquimaux are the nearest approach to descendants and representatives of this long-lost race. As comparatively few bones of the Dordogne folk have been identified with certainty up to the present time, we are hardly in a position to say what anatomical evidence there is for this view; but, so far as it goes, it is favorable.—London Standard.

ETIQUETTE AT THE BANKS.

Boston People Make the Life of the Teller an Easy One.

It would seem that most of the members of the large business concerns of our proud city understand to a degree the term "bank etiquette," as though they had basked in its element a long time and had been taught from childhood to understand its legitimate meaning. They arrange their deposits with a method the most satisfactory imaginable to the bank clerk, a delight to behold. This regularity, while it distinctly shows the training of a thorough business man, is attended with little or no effort on their part, but it means to the bank clerks the saving of an infinite amount of hard, trying labor. This method consists of placing all the bills, clean or ragged, of the larger denominations together on the top of whatever size package they chose to make, keeping the $1 and $2 bills strictly to the bottom. Thus the clerk can, with little difficulty, make rapid headway through his arduous work, for he knows what he is facing. These deposits are meat to the eyes of the tellers on ordinary days, but more especially so on heavy days, when they have all they can do to finish up by 6 o'clock.

It is interesting to note the marvelous rapidity with which an expert goes through the bills, counting, sorting, straightening and proving, all at the same time. You observe that oftentimes he abruptly throws out a certain bill across the desk, apart from the rest, with a "There!" most strongly emphasized, and immediately spurs up to resume his usual pace, not the least disconcerted. The uninitiated is struck mute by the sudden exclamation, starts nervously and stares blankly at the man whom he supposes to have been bitten by an invisible scorpion or reptile. Closer scrutiny proves this particular bill to be a counterfeit, though it has taken the outsider fully fifteen minutes to distinguish between it and the genuine bill, much to the disgust of the expert, who, at a single glance, detected it, going as he was at the rate of a mile a minute, and discarded it as quickly as though it burned him.—Boston Transcript.

Queer Ideas About Sleep.

The natives of the Philippine Islands have many peculiar notions and practices. They are indolent in the extreme, and never tire of sitting still and gazing at nothing in particular.

One of the rudest acts, in their eyes, is to step over a person asleep on the floor. Sleeping is, with them, a very solemn matter. They are strongly averse to waking any one, the idea being that during sleep the soul is absent from the body, and may not have time to return if slumber is suddenly broken.

To get a servant to rouse you, you must give him the strictest of orders. Then at the time appointed he will stand by your side and call, "Senor! Senor!" repeatedly, each time more loudly than before, until you are half awake; then, after waiting a little while, he will return to the low note and again raise his voice gradually till you are fully conscious.

DECAY OF A POPULAR FAD.

Little Demand Now for Collections of Postage Stamps.

According to postal officials, there has been a big slump within the past year or two in the stamp-collecting business. Although the Government clerks are supposed to strictly avoid all dealings with stamp collectors, they are in a position to accurately gauge the condition of the stamp market, and they are unanimous in saying that interest in this fad has fallen off wonderfully of late.

Letters from stamp collectors became so numerous some time ago that Assistant Postmaster General Kerr Craige found it necessary to get out a circular letter in reply to these queries. This letter starts out by saying that the post-office department does not buy or deal in canceled stamps. No specimen stamps, either foreign or domestic, are sold or given away by the department. The department also fixed the penalty for postmasters selling stamps for any larger or less sum than the values indicated on their faces by decreeing that any official violating this law be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500.

Probably the greatest drop in the prices of stamps is that noted in the case of Columbian stamps. Rare specimens of this issue that eighteen months ago were away above par can be picked up almost anywhere at their face value. The reason assigned for the slump in the prices of Columbian stamps is the fact that so many individuals invested in them as a matter of speculation. The majority of these people knew nothing whatever of the relative value of stamps to the regular collectors, and after failing to realize on them at once they have sold out, and so fairly flooded the stamp market.

A local stamp collector is authority for the statement that there is soon to be a united effort made by the dealers to revive the drooping stamp trade. This move is to take the shape of an attempt to bring back the boy trade, which is necessary for the success of the business. It is said that the reason so many boys have abandoned stamp collecting of late years is because of the gradual increase in the prices of rare stamps. The first move will be to prepare a number of specimen stamp albums. This winter a simplified album, which will not call for stamps of rarity, will be placed on sale at moderate prices. It is thought that in this way the trade can be stimulated, although it is conceded that it will be several years before the stamps will be at a premium again.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Hundred and Fifty Miles an Hour.

An electrical engineer has been exhibiting in London the model of his proposed single rail electric line for speeds of 150 miles an hour. The rail is fixed on a V-shaped trestle, and runs up into the body of the car, which as it were, runs astride of it. The car runs on twelve bearing wheels, and seats 135 passengers, with space for their baggage. One of the difficulties met with in schemes for excessively high speed travel is the tendency of the car to run off the track. By running the rail within the car the lateral tendency of the train is overcome. But in this late scheme the great difficulty seems to be the passenger. What would happen to the passenger when the train took a sharp curve while going at 150 miles an hour is not explained.

High Flight of Migrating Birds.

Human life is in danger at an elevation of twenty-five thousand feet, and at a considerably lower altitude bodily exertion becomes almost impossible. Birds, on the other hand, rise to an elevation of thirty-five or forty thousand feet, and at such heights sustain great muscular exertions for an indefinite period. In that respect, as in the matter of flight itself, they have a manifest advantage over the best of us.

It is not to be supposed that most birds ever reach the enormous heights just mentioned, but it seems to be certain that the great majority of even the smaller species, when on their semi-annual migrations, move at heights beyond the power of the human eye to see them.

Teetotalism Spreading.

America is becoming a nation of teetotalers. An observer says if one does not believe it, let him look at the list of States where the citizens have formally voted that way. We find this list quoted from the bill of fare of a Pullman dining car. A note on the card says: "Wines and liquors will not be sold in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Indian Territory, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, New Jersey, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Wyoming. No wines or liquors to be sold on Sunday in any States having the prohibitory Sunday laws."

The Trolley and the Farm.

Electric railroads are proving of great benefit to the farmers in Maine. The trolley lines run out from the large cities and towns to villages far removed from steam railroad communication, and in several districts arrangements are making to run trolley milk trains, vegetable trains, and the like, to enable the farmers to get their produce quickly to market. It is even proposed to run trolley coal trains, to supply coal to small towns that now use only wood.

Internal Humidity.

"I hate," said Mr. Tolliver, as he vainly tried to get his straw hat over his head, "to get these miserable hats wet. They shrink so."

Mrs. Tolliver looked up from the breakfast table.

"There was no rain last night," she freezingly remarked.

Then Mr. Tolliver hastily perched his hat on top of his aching head and hurried from the house.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Friends Failed to Recognize Her.

MRS. HADIX SO CHANGED IN APPEARANCE THAT SHE HARDLY KNEW HERSELF.

She Says the Secret of the Great Change and Her Present Good Health is Due to the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Other Prominent Citizens Testify to the Merits of this Remedy.

From the Call, San Francisco, Cal.

"You don't know me! Well, I am not surprised at that. I hardly know myself, and yet here I am full of life and vigor. Look at my arms, round, strong and healthy. The color of my cheeks show life and animation."

So spoke Mrs. Hadix, wife of Rev. E. Hadix, of Placerville, California, and "what has produced this wonderful change from almost death to healthful, active life?"

"Well, I will tell you it was Pink Pills for Pale People. You will remember that for years I walked the streets a living skeleton—emaciated—weak, and a complete wreck. My flesh colorless, my nerves unstrung. I had no blood. If my flesh was punctured, a thin pink stain was all that could be produced. My physicians said there was no hope for me. My friends despaired of my recovery. I was sent to Sacramento where three of the most eminent phyisicians diagnosed my case, but they shook their heads and said they could not help me, and they refused to take my money as they could do me no good.

"My husband was sent for to say the last good-bye. When I lay on my couch to rest I felt as though I was sinking, down, down, down. I could not sleep, neither could I rest. When all hope from physicians was gone, I determined to try what virtue there was in Pink Pills for Pale People. I commenced taking them and soon began to improve. I continued their use with the result that to-day I am fully recovered to health and happiness, and this in less than six months from the time I commenced their use. All hail to Pink Pills for Pale People."

J. C. Stephens, another resident of Placerville, said: "I was afflicted with rheumatism for more than twenty years, and only with the greatest difficulty was I able to walk to my place of business, my hands were so stiff and swollen that I could scarcely hold anything in them. When driving my team, I could not hold my whip. I saw in the San Francisco Call that a friend of mine had been cured of rheumatism by using Pink Pills. I commenced using them with the result that I am completely cured."

Mrs. J. G. Bailey was afflicted for a long time with kidney trouble and could not rest nights. She said: "I had heard so much about the wonders that Pink Pills performed that I concluded to try them. I commenced taking them, and found immediate relief, sleep nicely, and in every way am greatly improved."

W. F. Fairchild is a druggist doing business in Placerville. He says he has been selling Pink Pills for Pale People for several years, and that his customers speak very highly of them, and sales have been more than doubled within the last six months, especially since the wonderful recovery of Mrs. Hadix, whose case was considered hopeless, and whose recovery by the use of Pink Pills was considered almost a miracle. The reputation of these pills is fully established for doing what they promise.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post-paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N.Y.

I believe Piso's Cure is the only medicine that will cure consumption.—Anna M. Ross, Williamsport, Pa., Nov. 12, '95.

Bottled Up!

Whether in the form of pill powder or liquid, the doctor's prescription for blood diseases is always the same—mercury or potash. These drugs bottle up the poison and dry it up in the system, but they also dry up the marrow in the bones at the same time.

The suppleness and elasticity of the joints give way to a stiffness, the racking pains of rheumatism. The form gradually bends, the bones ache, while decrepitude and helplessness prematurely take possession of the body, and it is but a short step to a pair of crutches. Then comes falling of the hair and decay of the bones,—a condition truly horrible.

Contagious Blood Poison—the curse of mankind—is the most horrible of all diseases, and has always baffled the doctors. Their potash and mercury bottle up the poison, but it always breaks forth again attacking some delicate organ, frequently the mouth and throat, filling them with eating sores. S.S.S., is the only known cure for this disease. It is guaranteed purely vegetable, and one thousand dollars reward is offered for proof to the contrary. It never fails to cure Contagious Blood Poison, Scrofula, Eczema, Rheumatism, Cancer, or any other disease of the blood. If you have a blood disease, take a remedy which will not injure you. Beware of mercury; don't do violence to your system. Don't get bottled up!

THE PRAYER OF CŒLEBS.

Another gone! Alas, one more
Deluded by a woman's trick!
Another stalwart bachelor
To figure as a benedick!
"A marriage," see, "has been arranged Between Miss Blank and"—yes, and Harry!
My well-loved friend, you must have changed;
You, of all men alive, to marry!

At Cambridge, on debating nights,
Brown and yourself shone in the lists
As valiant foes of "Woman's Rights,"
A pair of stanch misogynists;
How valueless your speeches prove!
Brown, too, I understand, is fated
To make, like you, the deadly move
Which loses all, by which you're mated.

But, though I mourn for you, my friend,
My fears are not for you alone;
This fall of yours, does it portend
A like disaster of my own?
Is love a brief insanity
Which seizes all of us? Shall no men
Escape its ravages? Shall I
Become a lover? Absit omen!

Oh, Maud, or Muriel, or Kate!
Your name, from force of circumstance,
I cannot definitely state:
Let us entreat you in advance;
Oh, unknown maid whom I shall woo,
Let me put forward my petition
Before you have reduced me to
A semi-imbecile condition.

When, on some fragrant summer eve,
I vow that you are quite divine,
And ask you simply to believe
There never was such love as mine,
Despise such platitudes as those,
From my demented self protect me,
And if I finally propose
Be kind, be generous and reject me.
—London World.

WISE AT LAST

He had run through some £30,000 or £40,000. He had dropped money on the turf, at the tables, and made a fool of himself in various ways; but the fellows who knew him best were all of a mind that "dear old Harry" had never before made such a fool of himself as he did in converting little Myra Bromley into Mrs. Henry Capel.

Nevertheless, it was a matter of opinion. In the theater, in the dressing-rooms, there were not wanting ladies of Miss Bromley's own profession who considered that the girl was getting a good deal the worse of the bargain.

"My dear," said the girl who played the Amazon chief in the highly successful burlesque which had just entered the second year of its run, "my dear, take my advice and never marry a gentleman! Marry a mummer for choice, or a shopkeeper or a shoeblack, or best of all, don't marry anyone. But a gentleman's fatal, and a gentleman without any money—good Lord!"

Words failed her; she threw up her hands warningly, and a small chorus of approval showed that the house was with her.

All the same little Myra Bromley did marry her Harry Capel. For one thing, he was the first man who had ever asked her to be his wife; and for another, she was very genuinely in love with him, indeed.

She migrated from her "combined room" in the Kennington quarter to furnished apartments in Maddox street, and here, on the first floor of a lodging-house, the ill-assorted couple started housekeeping.

It is scarce necessary to say she left the stage. Some things are inevitable, and one of them is that an actress always leaves the stage when she marries, and as invariably returns to it sooner or later.

She did not want to leave it, for she knew her husband's position, and understood that the £5 a week salary that she was drawing would be very useful to them, but Mr. Capel insisted.

"My dear child," he said, "is it likely I would allow you to remain? We may not be very flush just at present, but I am sure we shall be comfortable, and I should not know a moment's peace if you continued at the Audacity as my wife. No, no; we'll live quietly here for awhile until I drop into something, and presently, take my word for it, you will forget you were an actress at all."

As a matter of fact, the conclusion was somewhat irrelevant, for her desire had been prompted far less by any yearnings for histrionic triumphs than by the wish to augment their slender income. But she obeyed, as a wife should, and for six months or more her only visits to the theater were made in the dress circle or the stalls. Sometimes she got orders, and sometimes Mr. Capel paid. At first it was very good fun, the unaccustomed position on the other side of the footlights. She enjoyed the novelty of it, her gloved hands folded and the lorgnette by her side, but by degrees both of the pair began to sigh for the past they had relinquished. The girl's thoughts followed the players to the dressing-rooms between the acts and the man began to reflect moodily that the matrimonial blisses were a shade slow compared with the bachelor frolics of old lang syne.

And he did not "drop into" anything and their capital ran very low. The gingerbread began to show through the gilt, and it was stale gingerbread, moreover, at least to the man.

Little Mrs. Capel was neglected by her husband and bored by her meditations. He took to going out alone in the evening now. He said that if he was to get hold of any post, it was necessary to meet fellows, and keep in the swim. There may have been something in it, but it was not lively for the woman staring at the clock and the reread periodicals or the scaffoldings of the houses that were undergoing repairs on the opposite side of the way. She told him so once; it was the prelude to the crisis. He was out all day and only returned at dinner time to hastily swallow the meal and retire to his room in order to dress.

When he re-entered the parlor, she inquired where he was going.

"Is it essential," she said ironically, "to come in at all? Your visits are so brief that it seems to me you must find it an inconvenience to make them."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean," said Mrs. Capel, "that I am moping myself to death. I married you for your society, Harry, and I need not remind you that I am not getting much of it."

He was hipped, angry, out of sorts. He had lost at a race meeting that day.

"I am sorry," he said savagely, "that you regret my marrying you; if you were single again, you may take my word for it, I wouldn't."

It was the first occasion that anything like plain speaking on the subject had occurred between them. He seized his hat, and left the house in a rage; Myra sat still with tears in her eyes and mutiny in her soul.

Why should she be left to eat out her heart like this, she demanded of herself. Better the distractions of her old life a thousand times. He regretted their marriage, and she, too, regretted it. Well, then, he could lead his own life, and she would lead hers. She would go to the "Audacity" the very next morning, and try for a re-engagement. She would go to-night—now! The sooner the wiser. To-morrow might be too late.

She ran into the bedroom her husband had just vacated, and hastily proceeded to don her cloak and hat. In fastening the latter, she dropped the pin, and, stooping for it, found that it had fallen on the jacket he had exchanged for a dress coat.

She picked them both up together, and a note fell out of the jacket pocket—a note in a woman's handwriting, which began "My Ducky."

She was not a heroine, only a very natural girl, and she read the note through from the address to the signature. When she had finished the perusal, she took the cloak and hat off again and sat down in the armchair, thinking, until Mr. Capel returned.

It was 1 o'clock when the street door was unlocked, and his steps were heard ascending the stairs. Mrs. Capel stood up, with the note in her hand.

"You should be more careful," she said, "or perhaps, since you regretted your marriage so deeply, you were anxious I should assist you to regain your freedom. I promise to do my best."

"Are you mad?"

"No," she said, "I am very sane. We have both made a desperate mistake and my eyes are open to it. Six months ago I should have been prostrate with misery to find you false to me. To-day I thank heaven for my chance of escape. I can divorce you and I mean to do it."

"You are mistaken," he answered sullenly. "I am sorry to dispel an illusion, but you cannot divorce me. I may have been false to you, but I have never been cruel. You are my wife, and you will have to continue so."

"I will not live with you another day."

"Oh, that may be, but my wife you are, and will remain. Any lawyer will tell you as much."

She broke down then and wept passionately; and clumsily, because he was ashamed of himself, he strove to console her. His efforts, however, were quite unavailing, and after abandoning the attempt in despair and seeking refuge in a pipe, he left her to herself and turned into bed.

When he woke the next morning she was gone. He must have slept soundly, for her box was packed and her preparations had not disturbed him.

A letter lay on the table beside him, and reading it he saw that she had left him forever. On the whole, he was relieved to learn it, and he was not surprised, in the course of three or four days, to see her name announced as a member of the forthcoming Audacity burlesque. Well, the episode was over. He had tried most things and found them a failure before essaying matrimony, and marriage had proved as empty as the rest. There was nothing now to prevent him resuming, without restrictions, the more unfettered life he had forsaken at the temptation of little Myra Bromley's pretty face.

He would clear out of the Maddox street lodging and take a couple of rooms somewhere en garçon. He balanced his cash and decided that he was justified in treating himself to a well-chosen little dinner and a music hall afterward. As for Myra, he did not want any more to do with her. She had left him, and he did not intend to think of her again. It was his "reward," he told himself bitterly, for marrying her—her recriminations and desertion. He felt that he had been guilty of a certain King Cophetua nobility in making her his wife at all, when—— No, he could not dupe himself about that. She had been honest enough, but it had been a mesalliance, and when a man made a mesalliance the least he had a right to look for in return was gratitude and devotion. Bah! if he were wise he would go down to the theater and box her ears in the presence of a witness or two, and let her get her divorce after all. On the whole, he thought he would. Let the account close—wipe it out—obliterate it. Hang her!

Whether he would or would not have done so in the ordinary course of events, however, there is no means of determining. He did not, as things turned out, because, while he was still considering it, Myra Bromley made a sudden and unexpected leap into public favor and commanded in the course of a very few months a salary of first £25, next £30 and then £50 a week. Mr. Capel, his ire exhausted, perceived that in ridding himself of a wife on whom he had a right to levy handsome contributions, he would be—to use an expressive vulgarism—pulling his nose to spite his face.

His circumstances, thanks to the illness of the "principal," into whose shoes the fortunate little "understudy" had stepped, were now vastly improved. He took very cozy chambers, indeed, called on his tailor, and was no longer ashamed to sun himself in Piccadilly between the hours of 3 and 5. His correspondence with the goose who laid the golden eggs was rare and brief, but sometimes, when his allowance failed to suffice for his weekly requirements, he dropped a polite request for an additional "tenner," and as Myra lived quite cheaply she always had it to spare and sent it to him. This state of things continued for three years, and then, as might have been foreseen, Mrs. Henry Capel fell in love with an actor.

He was ready and anxious to marry her, but she explained her position to him and told him, without disguising her love, that they could never be anything more than they were to each other while her husband lived. She was, as she had been, straight as a die, and no breath of scandal had touched her. Charlies Eames, who was a thoroughly good fellow, did not attempt to shake her resolution. He only pondered miserably, and then, arriving at a plan of action, went to her at last and suggested it.

"This blackguard of yours is in society, isn't he?" he said. "Knows all of swell people, and they all know he is married to you? Well, look here, Myra darling, you can't divorce him—compel him to divorce you. If you are known to be openly living with me he won't be able to help himself. He daren't let it be said that he refuses to divorce you because he makes you keep him out of your salary, and there could be no other explanation of his attitude. For very shame he'd have to proceed, and I swear to you on all my gods I'll make you my wife the moment the decree nisi is made absolute. What do you say?"

She demurred a long time, but she ended by saying what most women similarly circumstanced would have said. She said she trusted her lover and that her husband was a scoundrel. She consented, and Mr. Capel, to his egregious disgust, found his hand forced beyond remonstrance.

Myra Capel is Mrs. Charles Eames to-day and a very happy wife. Henry Capel is borrowing fivers and drifting so rapidly toward a subsistence derived from the billiard-rooms that he already regrets his concession to appearances. Such a number of people know the true inwardness of the undefended case of "Capel vs. Capel and Eames" that to many this narrative of it will be dull reading. It is written for the larger public who knew nothing that did not appear in the newspapers, and who wasted such a great deal of unnecessary sympathy on the petitioner.—Pick-Me-Up.

"There Wa'n't Nothing."

The following story of excessive zeal is told by a young minister who spent last summer in missionary work among the Green Mountains. The two maiden ladies with whom he boarded kept no horse, and were wont to rely upon the courtesy of neighbors to bring their mail from the postoffice.

As the ladies and their boarders were sitting on the piazza one evening, a neighbor passed in the direction of the village, and one of the sisters called out: "Are you going to the village, Jonas?"

"Yes," replied Jonas, pulling up his horse; "can I do anything for you?"

"You might get our mail at the office, if you would be so kind," said "Aunt Clary."

Jonas drove on, but did not return from the village until after the household had retired. Shortly before midnight the whole house was aroused by a thumping at the door, and calls of "Clary—Clary—Aunt Clary!"

Aunt Clary arose hastily, lit a lamp, and slipping a wrapper over her nightrobe, descended and unlocked the door.

"Why, it's you, Jonas!" said Clara. "What a turn you gave me!"

"There wa'n't nothing," said Jonas, as he turned to go, full of the happy consciousness of duty performed.

A Neat Swindling Trick.

The latest swindling game was practiced successfully the other day at Benton, Pa. Two men, who appeared to be strong silver and gold advocates, were in the central depot and became involved in a heated discussion. The gold man offered to get a gold double eagle that if he hammered the coin into a shapeless mass it would still be worth $20. He was ostensibly taken up by the silver advocate, but when it came to selling the lump to Jeweler Roth the store was closed. James Hagerty, a strong sound money advocate who stood by and who had implicit faith in the value of gold, gave the man $20 for the battered coin. The two enthusiasts disappeared shortly after, and then it was discovered that the metal left by them was spurious.

The proprietor yelled to stop him, and a man who had been sitting at the next table ran after the fugitive, crying out that the runaway had stolen his gold-headed umbrella. The proprietor is wondering now why some men have to be fooled twice.

A prominent dentist says that the mouth should never be rinsed after using tooth powder. The chalk in the powder is a slow antacid; bicarbonate of soda is a quick antacid. The object of the powder, besides that of scouring, is to find its way into cavities between the teeth and, by killing the acids, prevent the decomposition of food, which destroys the tooth tisues.

The jury in a railway case at Portland, Ore., reached a verdict as to the damages inflicted by each member writing down the amount he believed just, after which the sums were added and the total divided by twelve. The jurors' figures ranged from $750 to $100,000. Neither party to the suit was satisfied with the award, and when they learned how it was made preparations for an appeal were begun.

A strange assortment of objects was removed by a surgical operation in an Odessa hospital from the stomach of a Yalta woman, suffering from a horrible form of starvation. It comprised a fork, a piece of iron, two teaspoons, a needle, a piece of lace with the crochet needle, two 2¼-inch nails, four pieces of glass, eight buttons, and a key. The woman is out of danger, and the contents of her stomach attract crowds to the hospital museum.

A trial of the Santa Fe, the first armored torpedo boat destroyer built by Yarrow for the Argentine government, has just been made in England. The boat is 190 feet long by 19½ feet wide; the engine and boiler space is covered by half-inch armor plate, which is strong enough to keep out projectiles from rapid-fire guns. With a load of thirty-five tons the speed obtained in the three-hour trial was 26.5 knots, half a knot more than had been guaranteed.

An important discovery has been made, the usefulness of which was shown during the postoffice jubilee celebration in England. An instrument was tested which enables anyone speaking into a telephone to see his correspondent at the other end, the "image appearing like an animated colored photograph." The distance covered in the experiments shown was only thirty feet, and it still remains to be seen to what distance light will travel over the wires.

There are in the United States, it is stated, 200,000 machinists, 10,000 toolmakers, 25,000 boiler-makers, 10,000 pattern-makers, 750,000 carpenters and joiners, 200,000 masons and bricklayers, 50,000 contractors and builders, 50,000 plumbers, gas and steam fitters, 150,000 stationary engineers and firemen, 100,000 locomotive engineers and firemen, 50,000 electric railway and light employes, 50,000 cabinet makers,, carvers and woodworkers, 50,000 civil, mechanical, electrical and mining engineers.

Thousands of spectators witnessed the unique spectacle of the annual blessing of the fisheries, which took place at Folkestone, England, recently. A procession, consisting of surpliced choirs and clergy, with cross and banners, left St. Peter's Church, and after it had made a detour of the fishing quarter of the town, chanting the litany, a position was taken up overlooking the sea. The vicar of the parish gave an appropriate address, and the prayers were offered, asking a divine blessing on the fishermen's calling.

Four ardent W. C. T. U. women astonished a Millbridge, Me., police justice and caused excitement in his court by protesting against his allowing a rumseller to go scot free, as they termed it, when they saw the accused walking away in an apparently happy frame of mind. The prisoner had been bound over for the fall term of the Supreme Court, but the women could not be made to understand it, and they marched out of court declaiming loudly against liquor dealers, lawyers and justices, whom they classed altogether.

Seeking an Honest Opinion.

The right use of wealth suggests many sermons, and the influence of wealth upon happiness is almost as fruitful a theme. A story told by the friends of an Oregon millionaire goes to show that, after one has grown accustomed to a simple way of life, the possession of a fortune may involve only sorrow and bitterness.

When his silver mines began to yield more money than he knew how to spend, Mr. Blank's ambitious wife conceived the idea of invading society. Washington was chosen as the point of attack. Land was bought, architect and builder were set at work, and a modern palace arose almost as speedily as Aladdin's. Then began the struggle to be fashionable, an effort in which Mr. Blank found himself an unwilling participant. Balls and receptions bored him. Late dinners agreed with neither his head nor his stomach. Even to please his two daughters, he could not pretend a cordial friendship for men who talked of nothing but lawn tennis and the latest opera.

A gleam of pleasure came to the old prospector when, after a year, a former partner visited Washington. It seemed obscured when the old friend asked to see the new house, but the millionaire was too proud to shirk his duty. Wearing a face of deepest gloom he escorted the visitor up-stairs and down, the latter admiring and very enthusiastic. The host said little or nothing. In due course the inspection was finished, and they reached the hall.

"Well, Tim, you can't say you ain't got everything you want," said the visitor.

"Yes, I can," the millionaire answered somberly. "I want a parrot."

"A parrot!"

"Yes."

"What fur?"

"To hang up here, so every time I open the door he could say, 'Here comes that old fool ag'in!'"

Peculiar Mishap on a Railway.

A very peculiar mishap to a freight train has just come to the attention of the motive power department of the Panhandle in this city, and in its details it assumes the nature of a miracle as strange as those of old. The train was running at a rapid rate between Xenia and Trebeins, a distance of four miles, when the trucks of one of the cars gave way and jumped on to the tracks of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton road, which runs parallel with the Pennsylvania at that point. The trucks lighted squarely on the rails and continued running until they smashed into the pilot of a Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton engine running in the opposite direction. The Panhandle train evidently did not suffer any inconveniences owing to the loss of trucks, as it was not discovered until Trebeins was reached, and then it was found that the body of the freight car was held in position by the couplings and had run two miles without any wheels. The accident is perhaps without parallel in annals of railways, and although absolutely true and vouched for by the motive power department officials, it seems stranger than fiction.—Columbus, O., Press.

She Needed Air.

"She wants air! She wants air!" yelled a man on the inside of the crowd that had gathered around the female cycler.

"What's the matter—woman fainted?" inquired a policeman, rushing up.

"Oh, no," replied the man; "she has only dismounted to pump more air in her tires."—Philadelphia North American.

Audience or Company?

"At the end of the first act you are killed," said the stage manager to the new utility man.

"By whom?" asked the histrion, anxiously.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

There is too much said about love in this world, and not enough about the necessity of a marriage license.

A Convenient Butcher's Device.

The illustration, taken from Farm and Home, represents an apparatus which makes the skinning and dressing of beef on the farm a comparatively easy matter. In the crotch or fork of a good-sized tree place one end of a stout pole. Rest the other end on a fork formed by fastening together two 4x4 inch scantlings or other similar timbers by means of a rope or stay chain and spreading apart at the bottom. To the pole or cross piece attach two strong ropes long enough to reach the ground. Tie to the ends of these ropes a 3x3 inch oak or other hard wood scantling 4 feet long with two pins inserted in either end at right angles to each other. About 8 inches from each end of this square timber round off a space about 3 inches long on which place two iron rings. To the rings attach iron hooks or stay chains. After the animal is killed and hind legs are skinned, insert the hooks in the large tendon above the hock joint.

Two men, one at each end of the gambrel, can easily lift the carcass either raising it off the ground at once or a short distance at a time. It can be secured at any height by means of a rope, A, which is arranged with a series of loops. These are slipped over the turning pins or handles and thus prevent unwinding. As the skinning proceeds the men will have to stand on barrels or some other elevation to enable them to swing the carcass clear of the ground. This apparatus can be used for lifting hogs, sheep, etc., but need not be made so strong or tall. The whole thing is entirely home-made and easily constructed. If no tree is convenient to support one end of the pole, a post can be set in its place or three rails, fastened near the top and set up like a tripod, will do very well.

BUTCHERING MADE EASY.

"Top-Poling" a Stone Wall.

In many sections of the country stone walls are the foundation of pasture fences. These must be "top-poled" to keep in sheep—and in many cases cattle. Animals will dislodge poles laid in the angle formed by two stakes. A good plan, that saves stakes also, is shown in the diagram, a cross-section being given. One stake is driven firmly into the ground and bound to an upper stone by wire. The pole is bound also to the stake by stout fence wire, making a fence that cannot be displaced, and one requiring only half the usual number of stakes. Farmers should make greater use of stout wire in building and repairing fences.

A "TOP-POLED" WALL.

Proper Division of Crops.

Every year some article of farm produce brings a fair price, and nine times out of ten it is the product that for one, two or three previous years has been unduly depressed. We do not know that farmers are any more sheep-like in their efforts to all move together than are those engaged in other kinds of business. It is the universal complaint of business men of all kinds that whenever anything is found to pay heavily, so many go into its manufacture that the market is oversupplied. The advantage the farmer has over other people is that with ordinary good management his farm will make his living, and he can do something aside from farming if he is enterprising and intelligent to make his entire business profitable as a whole.

Waste of Corn Stalks.

While it is not true that corn stalks exposed to rains will decay like clover hay, there is altogether too much loss in it, if not secured in time, for any farmer to afford. Green stalks dried without rainfall retain their fresh color inside where not exposed to the sun. But the fading of the outside of the stock does not affect its nutritive value or its palatableness. We have many times fed cows and watched them while they were eating. While they would select the stalks that had been slightly softened by heating, there was no apparent preference for those that had retained their green color over those that sunlight had bleached. But where rain had washed the outside of the stock, and had not reached the inside, the case is doubtless very different. Rain cannot fall on any partly dried vegetable matter without carrying off some of its nutrition.

Handy Farm Cart.

This cart can be made from material already on the farm. The body is the ordinary two-wheeled cart body. In place of the straight axle a blacksmith has made a "drop" with the necessary fittings for attaching to the front axle. On this front axle a mowing seat is fitted. Such a cart cannot be dumped, but for nearly all farm operations it will be found a great labor saver.

CONVENIENT FARM CART.

Poultry Points.

Systematic, regular work counts.

A "stunted" fowl better be killed at once. They are useless.

Drain the poultry-yard; this applies to the barn-yard also.

Have any of our readers tried a poultry house with a glass roof?

Feed but one kind of grain at a time, and cover it up with light litter.

If living near a market, try turkeys. Ducks are also profitable.

Both nesting and dusting material should be renewed at least monthly.

Keep fresh water continually before the fowls, warmed a trifle on the colder mornings.

Corn is probably the best cold-weather food. Feed the kitchen scraps in the morning in a clean place.

Select the best layers for breeding stock, keeping size and color of plumage as uniform as possible.

A cat or dog has no place in the henhouse or yards. Rats and mice should likewise be treated as intruders. Shut them out.

Thoroughbred poultry pay best. Select your breed, basing judgment upon their characteristics and surroundings, and then keep them pure; introduce new blood every other year.

A Handy Feeding Arrangement.

When hens are fed in open dishes, they will persist in getting into their food, soiling it and themselves. A handy and cleanly feeding arrangement is shown in the sketch. A board, with a rim in front, is nailed to the wall, six inches from the floor, and to this is hinged a slat-work arrangement that permits the fowls to feed through it, but will not let them get into the food. It opens out from the top when one is putting food upon the board, and remains closed when shut.

POULTRY FEEDER.

The Dairy.

A good dairy cow is a good eater and drinker.

A trotting match between the cows and the dog may be interesting, but it will not increase the yield of butter.

If the heifer is a spring calf, as a rule the better plan is to herd her so that she will drop her calf when she is two years old.

Just how much increase in the feed of the cows should be made now must be largely determined by the condition of the cow, which should always be one of thrift.

Inasmuch as the world's record for a one day's public butter test is held by a Brown Swiss cow, it is a wonder that the dairy public does not hear more about the breed.

It is said that so many dairy cows have been killed by order of the authorities at San Jose, Cal., that the price of the remaining healthy cattle has advanced 30 per cent.

Uniform good quality in butter is what determines its value. No matter how careful one is to get it to the consumer, if the quality is not the best, good prices will not be obtained.

The temperature for churning depends on the richness of the cream. The richer the cream the colder it is churned, the more of the fat is secured as butter, and the better it is for the butter in all ways.

The Ways of the Opossum.

Just why the great zoologists of the present day should have chosen to consider the opossum an animal of a lower order than the stupid and heedless sloth, and the third order from the lowest of all, is not so easy to understand as it ought to be. As a matter of fact, nature has done a great deal for the opossum—far more than for the great majority of quadrupeds. Note what the creature is, and can do, and match it if you can. It eats almost everything that can be chewed—wild fruit, berries, green corn, insect larvæ, eggs, young birds and quadrupeds, soft shelled nuts and certain roots. It is a good climber, and has a very useful prehensile tail. It forages on the ground quite as successfully as any squirrel. It usually burrows under the roots of large trees, where it is impossible for the hunter to dig it out, but sometimes it makes the mistake of choosing a hollow log. When attacked, it often feigns death to throw its assailants off their guard. Like the bear and woodchuck, it stores up a plentiful supply of fat for winter use, when food is scarce, and, above all, the female has a nice, warm pouch in which to carry and protect her helpless young, instead of leaving them in the nest to catch their death of cold or be devoured by some enemy.—W. T. Hornaday in St. Nicholas.

Queer Wills.

A Paris medical journal states that on opening a short time ago the will of a Parisian the following clause was found: "I request that my body be delivered to the Paris Gas company for the purpose of being placed in a retort. I always used my mental powers for the enlightenment of the population at large, and I desire that my body be used to enlighten the people after my death." Squire Hawley of the village of Hatfield, near Doncaster, left the whole of his estate to his groom, on the condition that his funeral should be conducted in a certain way. He died on a Christmas day and was buried in his own garden in the center of the graves of his cattle, that had died during the rinderpest. He was laid out in full hunting costume, including spurs and whip, and was carried from the house to the grave on a coffin board, when he was placed in a stone coffin, which, weighing more than a ton, had to be lowered by means of a crane. His pony was shot and buried at his feet in bridle and saddle, and his dog and an old fox were buried at his head.

Never Satisfied.

"Yes, my eldest daughter married for money."

"She is happy, of course?"

"Far from it. While she has everything one could wish for, she is far form being happy. She loved another."

"Your second daughter also married, did she not?"

"Yes, she married a man for his good looks."

"I suppose she is happy."

"Indeed she is not. While her husband is a good provider, he can't afford to give her what her eldest sister receives, and, consequently, she is unhappy."

"And your youngest daughter, the one I always thought so much of, is she married?"

"Yes, she married a man for love."

"Ah, sensible little girl!"

"But her husband is very poor!"

"Still, with all her poverty, she loves the man of her choice, and is, of course, happy?"

"No, indeed. She is the unhappiest of the three."—San Francisco Wave.

The Difference.

A little boy, who in the course of some conversation of his elders heard a good deal of talk about the progress of civilization, approached his grandfather, who was taking no part in the talk.

"Grandpa" said the child, "what is the difference between civilization and barbarism?"

"Barbarism, my boy," answered the old man, "is killing your enemy with a hatchet at a distance of a step, and civilization is killing him with a bombshell 12 miles away!"

This cynical answer applies well enough, without doubt, to the difference between civilized warfare and that of a period when the world was less advanced than now, but the completest civilization looks toward the abolition of warfare forever.—Youth's Companion.

Sunday Letters In Belgium.

The Belgian authorities, it seems, are anxious to save the postoffice as much trouble as possible in the matter of delivering letters on Sunday. For this reason every postage stamp is issued with a little perforated supplement inscribed with the legend, "Ni pas livrer le dimanche!" Those who are anxious to have their letters delivered on the seventh as on the other six days of the week tear this off, while those whose communications are not of any special importance leave it on.

A Mere Artisan.

"What is the reason you insist that Lines is no artist?" asked the Philistine. "I thought he was one of the best illustrators in the country."

"Well, he isn't," said the artist hotly. "He is a mere grubbing artisan. Why, if the text, for instance, described a man to be wearing a full beard, he would draw him that way, instead of with a good artistic mustache and imperial. He's a grubber. That's what he is."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Preparations.

Willie—I knew you were coming to night.

Castleton—Why, Willie?

Willie—Sister has been asleep all the afternoon.—Truth.

The process of beating, cutting and grinding rags into paper pulp occupies from three to four hours.

There are 11 cable lines across the Atlantic ocean, and these have cost $70,000,000.

A Tipping Tip.

A New York woman who has been visiting in Germany, at the castle home of a countrywoman who married a German nobleman, contributes the following to the always discussed question of servant tipping:

"When my visit came to an end, I was in such a dilemma as to what was the proper thing to do in the way of feeing the servants that, after some deliberation, I went to my hostess for relief. 'You have such a retinue of servants,' I said to her, 'that I simply cannot see them all. I want you to tell me which ones will expect a remembrance, and what amount it ought to be.' Whereupon she told me that the question had come up so often in this very way, from some of her American guests, that she had at last hit upon a plan which her husband agreed was a good one, and which had been in operation for a long time in their household to the entire satisfaction of all concerned, including the servants. She showed me a locked box in a dark nook in the hall, and into a slit in this her guests dropped whatever amount it was their pleasure to give the servants. Once in six months the box was opened and the contents distributed among the staff, the gifts being proportionate to the place held—the butler, footmen, room maids and others who came in direct contact with the guest receiving the larger amount. Which I can assure you was the greatest kind of relief to me and seemed a good idea to adopt elsewhere."—New York Times.

A Tame Butterfly.

We have heard of tame fleas and performing midges, but the following authentic story of a tame butterfly, told by a French lady, has novel elements in it:

I found in my garden a magnificent butterfly, quite numb with cold. Taking it into the house and putting it into a box for two hours revived the little thing. Then I dipped its antennæ in a solution of sirup and sugar, and continued this treatment for three days. On the fourth day the creature fluttered on to my hand and sucked the liquor of its own accord, and after this it became perfectly tame. I put flowers into my room, and it fed on them, and was perfectly happy. When it sat on the table, I could pass my finger down its back without the slightest fear the butterfly might take to wing. In fact, it arched its back as does a cat when it is pleased. After three weeks of perfect tameness its colors faded, its wings shriveled up, and it died.

What next, one wonders? A butterfly arching its back when stroked by a human hand is surely a phenomenon that seems to give promise of all kinds of possibilities. Scientists and variety artists take note.—Westminster Gazette.

John Randolph of Roanoke.

When Mr. Randolph was opposed by Mr. Epes, who was Mr. Jefferson's son-in-law, the whole power of the administration was brought to bear against him. He had been exceedingly severe upon his opponent at the Buckingham court. Some of his friends counseled moderation. The excitement was great, and serious consequences were apprehended. Mr. Randolph told the sheriff to make a proclamation that he would address the people. An immense throng gathered about the stand. He stood for several moments surveying the crowd, not a feature of his face changing. After a painful suspense he began with the following remark, which has frequently been in print:

"When I was boy, my mother taught me that the fear of God was the beginning of wisdom. Since I became a man I have found out that the fear of man was the consummation of folly."

He then made a fiery onslaught upon his opponent. Instead of moderation he was more severe than he had been before.—Powhatan Bouldin in Century.

Some Horses.

Some horses cannot bear to be without company, especially in the fields, while others apparently dislike it, and may be seen grazing always apart from a troop on some large common or fell. I have known a horse of mature years fall as deeply and desperately in love with a donkey at first sight as the veriest moon calf that ever visited a ballroom. In fact, such was the poor animal's pitiable plight that, after a day or two of companionship, he would not eat until the ass had made a start from his manger. On the other hand, I have known a horse, at first averse to the society of the same donkey, after awhile grow quite fond of it, thus proving that platonic affection may be a thing of slow or rapid growth between animals, as in human beings, according to individual disposition.—Speaker.

The Lady Author.

In The Publishers' Weekly is told a story of a "lady author," who, in returning galley proofs of her book, remarked to the publisher that it was all right, but she didn't like "the pages quite so long," nor did she want "the book printed on one side of the page only."

"Newspaperdom" caps this with a story of a bookseller who, on receipt of a copy of an uncut book, wrote the following to the publisher: "I have received the books you sent. One of them is not bound properly. Two of the edges (side and bottom) are left rough and uncut, while the other edge of the leaves (top) is cut and gilded. Shall I take it at half price or return it?"

The Saltiest of the Salt Seas.

Some idea of the saltness of the waters of the Dead sea may be gained from the comparison made below. The Dead sea is situated in Palestine, 20 miles east of Jerusalem. It is 35 miles long and from 10 to 15 miles wide, with an average depth of 20 fathoms (120 feet). Common ocean water contains but 30 parts of salt to the 1,000; those of the Dead sea contain 250 parts to the 1,000, which makes the briny solution exactly one-fourth salt.—St. Louis Republic.

A Weasel's Hypnotic Power.

A London correspondent writes: A friend on whose word I can rely told me the following: He saw a lark flying above the turnpike road, fluttering some four or five feet above the ground in evident distress. As he looked he saw a weasel in the middle of the road waiting for the bird to come down. This it did, falling helplessly close to the animal, which killed it and carried it away. This incident seems to show that a weasel has some fascination in his eye.

Application for Patent.

M. A. No. 308.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE. INDEPENDENCE, CALIFORNIA. October 19, 1896.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT P. N. REDDY, whose Post Office address is Crocker Building, Room 116, San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for 1500 linear feet of the Driver vein, lode or deposit, bearing gold and silver and other valuable metals, together with the surface ground 600 feet in width, situated in Coso mining district, County of Inyo, State of California, and being designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot 44, T 19 S, R 40 E, M D M.; said Lot No. 4 being described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at old notice monument which is a large mound of limestone and marble rocks on top of spur bears N 6 deg E; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E along line of lode descending N 17 deg 45 min W 2.00 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 50 ft in length. General course westerly 2.55 chs; mouth of tunnel 25 lks to left, 50 ft in depth; General course westerly; Mouth of tunnel 25 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course westerly 2.75 chs cross gulch 10 lks wide; course N 75 deg E; Ascending 4.80 chs 322.7-ft intersect south end line of Defiance Mine. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D N L W at point of location as identified by claimant. Returning to notice monument previously described, thence S 17 deg 45 min E along line of lode, descending over broken spurs falling Easterly 11.35 chs 749.7 ft to original location monument. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D No 1, L S R; whence corner to sec ion 13, 14, 23 and 24, T 19 S, R 40 E, M. D. M. bears S 10 deg E 5.00 chs distant.

EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at previously described corner at south end of lode; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E, descending South 72 deg 30 min W 10 chs cross Ravine 4 lks wide; course S 46 deg E; ascend 3.15 chs, top of cross bears S 15 deg E; 15 min E; ascend 4.51 chs 3.00 ft to original location corner. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound, marked D No 2; thence deflecting 93 deg 15 min to right, N 17 deg 15 min W; ascending along west slope of ridge 7.00 chs, cross ridge bears N 53 deg W and S 51 deg E, and descend along E slope of ridge 9.00 chs, incline shaft 75 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course northerly 13.00 chs to top of ridge and descend along top of ridge 16.25 chs 1072.5 ft to original location corner which is a rock mound the same being the S W corner of the Defiance Mine and the S E corner of the Benson Mine. The post having been destroyed I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, within the same mound, marked D C N E face, B on N W face and D No 3 on S E face. Then so deflecting 93 deg 15 min to right N 72 deg 30 min E, ascending 3.34 chs prospect hole 20 lks to left, 4.35 chs 234 ft to post at North end of Driver Lode, previously described; 5.34 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 6.31 chs cross road N 20 deg W and S 20 deg E, 7.50 chs cross road N 20 deg W, and S 20 deg E 8.70 chs 574.2 ft to original location corner being the S E corner of the Defiance mine, which is a rock mound, post having been destroyed. I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in., in ground, within same rock monument, marked D on the N W face, and D No 4 on the S W face; I was unable to find monument at South end of Defiance Lode. Thence deflecting 68 deg 45 min to right, S 18 deg 45 min E 1.60 chs cross gulch 10 links wide, course East 4.00 chs cross road bears N 30 W and S 30 deg E; 6.50 chs, tunnel 100 lks to right 6.80 chs, top of spur bears East 8.00 chs, cross road bears N 10 deg W and S 10 deg E; 9.30 chs cross gulch 10 lks wide, C N 70 deg E 11.50 chs, cross road bears N 60 deg W and S 60 deg E 12.00 chs, cross road bears N 61 deg W and S 69 deg E 14.50 chs, top of ridge bears S 55 deg E and N 30 deg W, 15.30 chs 1076 ft, cross road bears N 72½ deg E and S 72½ deg W 15.40 chs 1103 ft, the point of location identified by claimant falling at edge of road. I set witness post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, with rock mound, marked D No 5, W P S 18 deg 45 min E 10 lks distant. Thence from point for first corner at edge of road deflecting 31 deg 15 min to right, S 72 deg 30 min W 50 chs to road which bears S 80 deg W 3.00 chs, top of spur bears S 20 deg E 4.50 chs 309 ft to point of beginning. Containing an area of 14.45 acres.

The location notice of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's Office of Coso mining district at page 105, of Book D, of said records. Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Driver Mae or the surface ground thereof, are requested to file their claims in the United States Land Office, in the Town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, State of California, during sixty days of the publication thereof, or they will be barred, in virtue of the provisions of said Statute.

A kindergarten for colts, a miniature race course, copied after the one at Palo Alto, has been built by I. H. Mulholland.

L. J. Blackburn, a Reno cattle-buyer, arrived here Wednesday evening and is around interviewing our cattlemen who have beef cattle for sale.

Clark Young and William Brockman passed through Independence Monday on their return to Bishop from a visit to Los Angeles and Randsburg.

The young ladies of Independence and the vicinity are making arrangements for a Leap Year Ball New Year's Eve. Further particulars will appear next week.

It is reported that the Inyo Marble Works will be started up the first of the year. The company will put on a large force of men and the work of taking out marble will be prosecuted vigorously for the entire coming year.

A woman was lecturing against dancing down in Pasadena, and she told her hearers that she would rather see her daughter in her coffin than in a ball room. The dear daughter must be viciously inclined to be so terribly contaminated by mingling with a ball-room throng. The Whittier School for Reform is where she belongs.

Charles Garretson and Charles Duarte returned from an extended prospecting trip in the Randsburg district on Saturday last. They report every foot of land located within twenty-five miles square of Randsburg and over 2,500 men in the district. Men are plenty and jobs are scarce, and men in need of employment should seek other fields.

On Sunday next Rev. Thos. H. Nicholas will hold religious services as follows:

Aberdeen at 11 o'clock a. m. Subject, "Obedience Better than Sacrifice."

Liberty in the afternoon at 3 o'clock. Subject, "Is Christianity a Failure."

Independence in the evening at 7 o'clock. Subject of discourse, "The Punishment of Those Who Profane, and the Blessedness of Those Who Keep the Sabbath."

All are cordially invited to these services.

In the North and West this season is the most severe in the history of the country. In Oregon and Washington the rivers, including the Columbia and many smaller streams, are closed with ice, while the small bodies of water are everywhere frozen. Such severe weather, so early in the season, finds stockmen totally unprepared to protect their cattle, many of which are still on the range, and it is estimated that many thousands will perish of cold and starvation. In the region about the headwaters of the Missouri river the whole country is covered with snow and ice to the depth of 12 to 16 inches. Cattle by the thousand are unable to get food and are dying by droves. Many stockmen have large stores of feed, but owing to the sudden severity of the weather, are totally unable to distribute them in a way to relieve their stock.

Special Religious Notice.

The Rev. E. W. Van Deventer, D. D., Supt. of the Nevada Mission, will hold the first quarterly Conference of the Independence Chapel, in the M. E. Church on Dec. 28, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The order of services will be as follows:

Dr. Van Deventer will preach in Independence Dec. 25, service to commence at 7:30 p. m. On Sunday, Dec. 27, at 7 p. m., and on Monday, Dec. 28, at 7:30 p. m. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the close of the Sunday evening service.

Dr. Van Deventer will preach at Lone Pine on Saturday, Dec. 26, at 7:30 p. m., and on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. The Sacrament will be administered at the close of the morning service.

Dr. Van Deventer will also preach at Georges Creek Sunday afternoon, Dec. 27, service to commence at 2:30.

A collection taken at the close of each service to meet the Superintendent's expenses.

Dr. Van Deventer is well known to you all, and we hope that you will all avail yourselves of the opportunity of hearing this gifted preacher at every service. All are very cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Thanksgiving Celebration

The following is an extract from a letter written from the Wilson mine in the Argus Range, southern Inyo, and shows that Thanksgiving was duly observed by some of our friends: "We had a fine time here Thanksgiving. There was church in the morning, when Parson Harry Cook delivered an impressive sermon and sang some sweet songs, in which we all joined. The day was spent in a baseball game and a foot race. Louis Padilla and Li Hung Chang were the runners. Padilla was the favorite in the pools and an easy winner. At four o'clock the Apollo Club gave the concert of the season under the direction of W. R. Johnson, at Johnson's Hall. First tenors, L. B. Padilla, Thomas White and Harry Cook; first basses, W. R. Johnson and G. H. Lewis; sopranos, Mrs. W. R. Johnson and Mrs. L. B. R. Scanlon. At Johnson's Hall in the evening there was a grand ball, music by the Los Angeles Band and one of the greatest pianists, Miss Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler. The grand march was started at 8 o'clock sharp. There was about forty couples present."

The Wool Interest Active.

That the champions of the American wool industry are wide awake and making ready to push the cause before Congress is shown by the following telegram, which comes from New York:

President McNaughton of the Wool Exchange, assisted by Senator Clarence Lexow, is preparing a bill designed to readjust the tariff on wool, which will be presented about December 15th. According to statistics compiled by wool growers and manufacturers, the Wilson-Gorman bill has been almost criminal in its effects on the wool growing industry. Since 1892, when the tariff was taken off wool, the number of sheep has been decreasing at the rate of 3,800,000 a year. The loss has been 30,000,000 a year, and many wool growers have been ruined and others driven from the business. Importers of wool would be satisfied if there was no tariff at all on wool. By the growers it is said that importers can purchase Australian wool cheaper than that grown in Texas. The importers reply to this by saying that the home-grown product is inferior. Manufacturers, however, favor the tariff, and will endeavor to have the McKinley bill restored. The Dingley bill does not afford adequate protection, as it places too much duty on manufactured goods and not enough on raw material. The concensus of wool dealers opinions is that the American wool industry cannot exist if the tariff laws are not speedily changed.

Independence School Report

Report of Independence School for the month ending Dec. 4th, 1896:

M. E. T. STEVENS, Teacher.

Entertainment

There will be an entertainment given at the M. E. Church on Thursday, Dec. 17. There will be an excellent program consisting of singing, recitations, etc. Refreshments will be served at the close of the program. The object of the entertainment is to raise money for new Song Books for the Church and Sunday School, and for Sunday School supplies. Everybody come and have a good, social time, and help this worthy cause. All are invited. We expect a very large attendance.

Henry Levy and H. P. Cartier returned from Randsburg Thursday. They predict that it will be the biggest mining camp ever known in California. They say gold is everywhere and all that is needed is capital to prosecute the work of development. No Chinamen are employed in the district, and if one happens to drop in there he is at once notified that his room is preferable to his company, and is prevailed on to leave at once. For twenty miles in every direction from Randsburg may be seen prospector's tents and outfits and new finds are of daily occurrence.

The social dance held at Baxter's last Friday evening was a most enjoyable affair. About twenty couple were present.

VIEW No. I.

There seems to be no doubt that public interest in the game of baseball is rapidly on the decline in all parts of the country, and another season will probably see the practical abandonment of this sport by professionals. It will then be relegated to the school-boys, among whom it originated and where it really belongs. There has never been anything in the game worth the attention of grown up men, and that it should ever have attained to the distinction of a national amusement is simply another manifestation of the ease with which the community can become bewitched over an idle craze. There is nothing elevating or amusing about the game as now played, and never has been, and its whole influence has been demoralizing in the extreme. Its tendency is in the direction of illeness, gambling and unhealthful excitement, and the country will be better off morally, physically and financially when the degenerate sport shall be numbered among the things of the past.

VIEW No. II.

It is a good thing to see such a deep-seated public interest in the noble game of baseball. In this country we are so completely absorbed in business that we seem to have little care for pleasure, and therefore anything that can draw us out to much needed rest and recreation is much to be commended. There is nothing better calculated to effect this than the national sport, of which we may well be proud. There is surely an abundance of good in an amusement that can, as this does, engross the attention of the whole country for nearly six months in the year. All classes in the community are interested in it, the sport already has a literature of its own, and everybody knows how high runs the healthful excitement over the work of the different clubs. There are no signs of any waning of the public interest, and we trust that our sons and our grandsons for many generations will continue to derive the same enjoyment from the sport that we today are having.—World.

Good Horses Are Getting Scarce.

The military authorities at the Presidio, San Francisco, are finding it difficult to purchase remounts for the cavalry, due to the fact that the country is almost bare of young and sound horses suitable for cavalry purposes. For the last three or four years such animals have been cheap almost to the point of having no market value; but horse breeding has very largely ceased, and there is no resource for any immediate demand. Recently Chief Quartermaster Col. Kimball advertised for sealed proposals for sound, well-bred horses, and incorporated in the stipulation that horses bred in California would be given the preference. No response whatever was received from California breeders, and only a few came in from local dealers. In addition the prices asked were four times as high as those which accompanied the bids of several years ago, and the Government had to abandon the idea of securing California-bred horses and the animals required were purchased in southern Oregon. The price paid was $133.50 per head. Horses are scarce in Oregon, too, but the abandonment of horse breeding has not been so extensive there as in this State. Col. Kimball has issued an announcement that twenty-three more horses are required at the Presidio, and it is understood that these, too, will have to be purchased in Oregon, or possibly in Arizona.—Rural Press.

Here is an opportunity for some of our horse-raisers to make a sale of horses. We feel confident that there is fully two hundred head of horses in Owens valley that would meet the requirements of the Government. Why don't some of our horsemen correspond with Col. Kimball and get all the particulars as to size, age, color, etc?

A New Mining District

On Sunday there was organized near Mojave a new mining district called the Mojave. This district takes the Jumbo mine for its center and includes the territory for 7½ miles in every direction, or or having a circumference of 45 miles. Judge Haralson was the chairman of the meeting, and J. W. Lancaster secretary. H. E. Coleman was chosen recorder. A stringent rule was adopted that every man filing a claim must commence work thereon within 60 days after recording. A provision of this kind is greatly needed in every mining district. It is the absence of such a rule that has kept the Randsburg country back so long and prevented development.

There are a number of rich mines already located in this district and considerable work has been done. From one mine 200 tons of ore have been shipped to the Selby smelting works and netted $15 a ton over all expenses. Most of the ore has to be smelted and Mojave is considered a good point to establish such works. The new district starts out under the most favorable auspices.—Californian.

HE SAVED THE BABIES.

But the Story Was Told In Two Widely Different Ways.

Heroism and modesty proverbially go hand in hand, but there are few more striking examples of the combination than that afforded by the captain of a wrecking tug in New York harbor. His own account of the affair was thus set down in the tug's log: "Jan. 30—Left Jersey City 7 a. m. Ice running heavy. Captain Joe stopped leak in ferryboat." Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, in his "Day at Laguerre's," tells the story more fully.

The Hoboken ferryboat was stopped, midway of its early passage, by the ice pack. At this juncture an ocean tugboat crashed into her side, cutting a V shaped gash below the water line. A panic ensued among passengers and crew. Just then the wrecking tug Reliance ran alongside, and Captain Joe Smith jumped on board.

He dropped into the engine room, met the engineer half way up the ladder, compelled him to return, dragged the mattresses from the crew's bunks, stripped off blankets, racks of clothes, overalls, cotton waste and rags of carpet, cramming them into the great rent left by the tug's cutwater until the space of each broken plank was replaced except one. Through and over this space the water still combed, deluging the floors and swashing down between the gratings into the hold below.

"Another mattress, quick! All gone? A blanket, then—carpet—anything! Quick, for God's sake!"

It was useless. Everything, even to the oil rags, had been used. Little by little the water gained, bursting out below, then on one side, only to be recalked and only to rush in again.

Captain Joe stood a moment as if undecided, then deliberately tore down the top wall of calking he had so carefully built up, and before the engineer could protest had forced his own body into the gap, with his arm outside, level with the drifting ice.

An hour later the disabled ferryboat was towed into the Hoboken slip with every soul on board. When they lifted Captain Joe from the wreck, he was unconscious and barely alive. The water had frozen his blood, and the floating ice had torn the flesh from his protruding arm from shoulder to wrist. When the color began to creep back to his cheeks, he opened his eyes and said to the doctor who was winding the bandages:

"Was any of them babies hurt?"

A Thirty Story Building.

A 30 story office building is to be erected on Park row, New York city, on the site of the old International hotel and will be 386 feet high from the curb line. There will be 27 main floors and 3 floors in the side towers, 30 floors in all. The foundations consist of piles driven into the sand, cut off below the water line and covered with concrete and masonry bases for the columns. The outer walls will be carried by cantalevers, as in many other tall buildings of this character.—Engineering News.

Sorry to Disappoint.

After the prospective tenant had told all that she expected to get in a $30 flat the agent sadly shook his head.

"Even if we were permitted to sublet the earth," he said, "we wouldn't dare let one tenant have it all."—Chicago Post.

Mistress of the Foundry.

By EARL JOSLYN.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

CHAPTER I.

"Pour off!"

The molder waited a moment by his crucible of glowing, molten metal. Then in a loud deep voice he cried again:

"Pour off!"

Don, the foreman of the foundry, turned with impatience to three young fellows who were sorting metal chips out of a barrel of foundry sweepings, and who were all smoking clay pipes. "Pat, Jack and Mike, when you hear a molder call 'pour off,' you get to him lively," he said shortly.

The foreman's eyes sparkled ominously as he watched the trio hustling over copper ingots and piles of zinc, dodging now and then stacks of flasks. "Shut the window there, Mike. You'll bust your cylinder," he roared.

"Water," called the molder.

"Here, you, Pat, why don't you have the watering pot always full? The flask boards will burn to cinders while you're fetching it. You're a dandy!" The foreman turned away disgusted.

The metal was poured into the small holes prepared for it. Tongues of beautifully colored flame darted from the beds of sand, and the smoke, full of ashy flakes, rose in billows. Bang! There was an explosion louder than usual. The molder and his helper laughed. They always liked to hear a good round report. "That will be a fine cylinder ring," said Don. "Now go help the core boys; they are crowded. And look alive," he added, glancing sharply at the three.

"And what did yo hear at the mission the night, Mike McCoy?" asked Luke Reardon of his benchmate.

"The mission, Luke? Father Gogarty's after askin where the likes of you bees," responded Mike. "'Luke's a hard one,' says Father Gogarty. 'He's traveled many a mile hanging on under a freight car, and he's niver a bit consarned for his sowl that'll go to purgatory some day by way of a header,' says Father Gogarty."

"How much are your wages a week, Donoghue?"

"Come off now," laughed Luke. "Father Gogarty niver said that. But what did ye hear at mission, I ask ye, Mike McCoy?"

"Ah, thin, Luke, the father kept saying, 'Stand up, now.' Be the time I was well up he said, 'Sit down, now.' It bein a new service, Father Gogarty had hard work to kape us movin. He gave us a dressin down at the end. 'You're in your sates aisy and comfortable,' he says, 'when ye should be on your knees. Kape watch on me,' says he, 'and whin I jinnyflict then you jinnyflict.' Them missions is pious work, Luke."

At 10 minutes to 6 the men were washing up. "Going to the union tonight, Tinmy?" asked Tom Mahanney.

"'Dade that I am, Tom. We'll spoil Mowry. He won't hire union men to work for him, and we'll see that his pots are doctored. Did ye know that the big casting that he sint to Dinver was brittle as glass? I know the man that made it. 'That'll bust suddint on you, Mowry,' says my friend when he poured it. 'You needn't be so high and mighty with us brotherhood felleys. You'll come down a peg,' says he."

"Hist, hist, Tinmy. There's the missis."

A lady dressed in plain black stood in the smoky foundry. She was perhaps 35 years old, but she was still extremely girlish in figure and face. She was speaking with Don. "Good night, Mr. Donoghue," she said when she had finished talking and then stepped lightly along, bowing courteously to the men as she passed them.

"I does hate to have the missis see me when my shirt's all open and I'm as red as a gobbler," said young Dan Doyle.

"Red, are you, Dan?" mocked Luke. "You're the greenest Irishman that ever stood on ten toes."

"Tin, is it, Luke? Dan stands on nine iver since the bottom of Paddy O'Shea's crucible fell out and slopped on Dan's feet," said Dennis Slavin, the oldest man in the foundry.

"The missis is polite to us jacks," said Dick Flanaghan in his shrill, squeaking voice. "That last hot day I was all of a lather and had been dusting my work with charcoal. The wind blew it in my face, and I looked like a striped devil. Don was off to a picnic. Up comes the missis smiling. I wanted to jump under me bench. 'Mr. Flanaghan,' says she, 'and will ye be having them hame balls ready to go on the last express the night?' 'Shure they're poured and cooling there,' says I, 'but you'll have to ask Mike if he'll be after tumbling them.' 'Thank you, Mr. Flanaghan,' says she. Anybody niver called me 'mister' before. She did me proud. She's the lady for ye."

"Ye're long winded, Dick," broke in Don. "Don't ye see I'm waiting to lock the door? Dump them grates, Pat. Must I tell ye ivery night to put the fires out?"

The men hurried out on the street and went clumsily homeward. Mrs. Sterns, the "missis," had gone toward High street to her house. Half an hour after her entrance she was seated at her dainty dinner table. She had changed her foundry dress for a delicate tea gown. A letter bearing an English postmark had been placed by her plate. An immense mastiff lay stretched out on a rug by her chair. He was always near his mistress when she was at home. Between the courses she read the letter.

"I am gone much longer, Kate, dear," her husband wrote, "than I expected to be. Some litigation has arisen about the patent and will keep me here several months longer. But after we win the case, as we shall, I can quickly negotiate the sale and return. The patent is more valuable than I thought and will greatly increase our wealth. Can you hold the men together? There are signs of renewed labor troubles."

Mrs. Sterns laid down the letter and mused. It was a hard task set her. The molders and polishers, from big Luke to little Joe, her office boy, were devoted to her. They would not trouble "the missis." But Parker, the bookkeeper, was hostile to her and resented her appointment as treasurer in her husband's absence. Parker was an untried man, the trusty old bookkeeper having died a year before Mr. Sterns' departure to England. Preston, too, the manager, was against her and friendly to Parker. Moreover, Parker was nephew to the wife of the president of the corporation, Edward Starkey. Starkey was not pleased with Sterns' lack of confidence in his relative as shown by the latter's choice of assistant treasurer. Sterns had signed Starkey's notes. To what extent Mrs. Sterns did not know. That way might lie ruin. She would do her best, she replied to her husband's letter, but she must know for what amount he was on Starkey's paper. "I am confident that Parker is dishonest," she continued, "though I cannot detect any fraud. But I am continually on the alert and shall unearth it if any exists."

The next morning at 9 Mrs. Sterns was at her desk. She opened the morning mail and passed the orders to Parker for entry, with the letters that must be answered. She receipted the bills that had been paid and placed the checks in the bankbook. Looking up just then, she saw Moore, the foreman of the polishing room, standing by her and waiting.

"I can't get them air chambers off today, Mrs. Sterns," he said. "Jim's out. He's sick with the copper dust. It busted his lungs, and they're bleeding. He'll be all right tomorrow. Nobody can do them so good as Jim."

"I'm sorry for Jim," answered Mrs. Sterns; "but, Moore, we must send the large air chamber today. It goes into a great ocean steamer that sails from New York Friday, and it will not get there a moment too soon."

"I'm doing that one," Moore said.

"Don't hurt your lungs, Mike."

"No, I look out for mesilf. I wears wet sponges," he said as he left the office.

The other foremen came for orders. They would not take them from Parker if they could avoid it nor report to him. Parker was unpopular with the men, chiefly on account of his curt way of speaking to them.

So the day went. Soon after 1 o'clock Parker returned from the bank with the money to pay off the men. Mrs. Sterns had previously signed a check, which he had cashed. He threw on the table before him the heavy bag of silver and bills, which he proceeded to count and place in the pay envelopes. While he was doing this Mrs. Sterns noticed a peculiar flutter of the eyelids. It occurred to her that she had been carefully excluded from the work of the pay roll. She turned her chair round to her desk and inwardly debated what course to pursue in order to get this business into her own hands in a way that would arouse no suspicion on Parker's part. She knew that she must be wary.

After Parker had finished paying off the men he was obliged to go out of the city on business for the company. Being hurried to catch the train, he inadvertently left the pay roll book out of his desk, which he carefully locked before leaving.

Shortly after he had gone Don came in to ask her to have some files ordered. When she had made a memorandum of the sizes and kinds, she inquired:

"How much are your wages a week, Donoghue?"

"Eighteen dollars, ma'am," he answered.

"Can you give me a list of all the men's wages per day, Don?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Will you keep dark, Donoghue?"

"Yes, ma'am, glad to."

"I depend on you, Donoghue," said Mrs. Sterns, looking keenly at the foreman.

"You're safe, ma'am," replied the foreman and respectfully touched his paper cap.

Mrs. Sterns put the pay roll book into her black satin handbag, and as she was leaving the foundry Don placed in her hand the daily wage list. Then she went homeward.

Kaiser was on the piano looking serious. It was the swill gatherers' day, and he and the swill gatherers were at feud. Kaiser objected on principle to any one that removed so much as a feather from the yard. He brightened up as he saw his mistress approaching and marched majestically down the walk to greet her.

"Good fellow, Kaiser," she said lightly as the dog sprang joyfully up to her face. "Have you been kind to the pussies today?"

After dinner Mrs. Sterns compared the wage lists. Don reported himself as receiving $3 per day. Parker's record showed $3.75. According to Don's list, every employee received from 75 down to 20 cents a day less than Parker's book showed. On computation Mrs. Sterns found that Parker professed to pay out $200 weekly more than Don's list called for. She was astonished and frightened at her discovery. Her heart beat rapidly. That night she telegraphed the facts of the case to her husband and asked instructions. Reply came: "Use your judgment for present. Have written."

The next morning Parker was visibly disturbed and remarked:

"I cannot find my pay roll book, Mrs. Sterns."

He prefaces his new book with some flattering words from Mr. Gladstone.

Exit the Blue Jacket.

A proportion of the blue jackets of any full-rigged ship were necessarily athletes. The "upper yardmen" in a line of battle ship or a frigate were exceptional men in this way, and much more so, perhaps just about the time that sail power was receiving its death warrant than ever before. These young men had to race aloft to nearly the highest points, at top speed eight or ten times a week when the ship was in harbor, to keep their heads and maintain their breath while holding on by "their eyelids," as the phrase goes, and manipulating with a careful and measured order of action the various and intricate arrangements for "crossing" or "sending down" the royal and topgallant yards. It was all done at full speed, for it was universally held that the upper yardmen gave a character to the whole ship; and that one which was foremost in this exercise was ever considered the smartest ship in the fleet. The upper yardmen were always the coming men. They had the most opportunities for distinguishing themselves, were the best known, and were most under the eye of the authorities. They developed great muscular power in chest, shoulders and arms. Their lower extremities suffered, and one always knew the men who had been upper yardmen by their tadpole-like appearance when they were bathing.

But in the modern steam line-of-battle ship and frigates these extremely athletic specimens formed a very small minority of the ship's company, and none of them could lose his turn at being upper yardmen so long as the ship's reputation depended on the speed with which the upper yards were crossed and sent down. In harbor the rest of the blue jackets had the handling of yards and sails for exercise once or twice a week, but at sea the use of sails for propulsion grew less and less important, and most of the work aloft was more of an exercise and less of a necessity.

In League with Satan.

Almost every renowned man of antiquity in the Middle Ages was believed to be in league with Satan. Probably the oldest legend of which the Faust legend is a continuous thread is that of Simon Magus. According to Justin, he was a native of Gitton, a village in Samaria; he was, no doubt, a man of great intellectual powers. He was the father of the school of the Gnostics. It is also reported of him that he could make himself invisible, that he could pass through flames unharmed, could transpose matter, make gold, and exorcise demons; in fact, he laid claim to all these powers, and his name as a miracle worker lived through many centuries. Unusual accomplishments, great erudition, were attributed to the supernatural influence, and the general disposition to superstitious assumption was strengthened on the one hand by dogmatic affirmation on the part of the church of the existence of a personal Satan, with his numerous household, and on the other hand by incorporating the magic arts among the practical sciences, of which astrology and alchemy occupied no mean part.

COLORS IN BATTLE.

Why the Soldiers In the English Army Are Arrayed In Scarlet.

The scarlet uniform of the British infantry has been greatly criticised in recent years, chiefly on the ground that it exposes the men to needless danger by disclosing their whereabouts to the enemy. The objection taken to the scarlet, however, is groundless, and scientific reasons are given why the prevailing color is for all purposes the most suitable that could be selected.

In the first place, scarlet affords the best attainable protection against the extremes of heat and cold to which soldiers are liable to be exposed. The darker the color protecting a warm body the more rapidly radiation proceeds. White would be the best color to reduce radiation to a minimum, but white is barred by other considerations, as are also all the grays. Scarlet or red comes midway between white and black or other dark colors, while with reference to protection from the sun scarlet takes a far higher place than any of the blues, greens or drabs and other shades often used for military clothing.

Yellow and orange are excluded because these colors are particularly conspicuous at a long distance. Although scarlet or red is more conspicuous than gray, when the sun shines directly on the troops it blurs on the sight and is consequently more difficult to hit.

With existing rifles the actual result of a fight is usually decided at a distance just outside the effective range of the weapons. This distance lies between 600 and 800 yards. Nearer than that it is impossible to close without replying to the enemy's fire, and as soon as the return fire whistles about the defenders' heads the possibility of aiming rapidly and accurately decreases.

Therefore, from this point of view, it is unimportant whether the object to be hit is conspicuous or not, but from a moral point of view it is a serious consideration. Within 700 yards each subsequent advance is conditioned by fire superiority already achieved, the defenders are shaken, the time for counting heads is past, and the mental impression conveyed by the sight of the assaulting troops becomes the main point.

It is a distinct advantage that our men should bulk large in the decisive stages of an encounter, and there is no color which enables them to do this so effectively as scarlet. On the whole, therefore, every scientific consideration justifies the retention of scarlet as the best uniform for our troops.

A Well Lighted Street.

Fifth avenue is probably now the best lighted long street in the world. The magnificent new lamps are now in position and add to the beauty of the thoroughfare. The lamps are a foot square, of bronze and gold, while the face is of white ground glass, with the street names in letters eight inches high in a deep red or maroon.—New York Letter.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

WHEN THE WIFE IS GONE AWAY.

When the wife has gone away, they tell me that I seem
Like some one that's a-walkin' an' a-talkin' in a dream,
I move so quiet roun' the house, an' speak so soft an' low,
Or sit there by the winder, where her sweet geraniums grow—
Or take the willer rocker beside the old fireplace,
An' stare above the mantel, where I see her pictur'd face,
For hours and hours together! I'm "strange," the neighbors say,
An' they don't know how to take me, when the wife has gone away!
The mockin' bird keeps singin' in the old mulberry tree,
An' from the little garden all the roses nod to me.
The mornin' sky is just as bright—ain't anything to blame—
It's jest my heart ain't beatin' right, jest me that ain't the same!
You see, when folks has lived so long together, through the years
That sometimes brought 'em gladness an' sometimes sighs and tears,
They kinder feel like they was one, an' hard it is to part;
An' they time each other's absence by the beatin' of the heart.
An' so, I'm always lonesome when the wife is gone away;
It seems jest like it's winter roun' the roses of the May,
An' there ain't no joy in livin', an' there ain't no peace or rest,
Till once more we're united, an' I fold her to my breast.

A BEAR STORY.

"You observe," remarked the jewelry salesman, "I wear very little of my own goods."

"Possibly," suggested the listener, "it is on the same principle that a doctor does not take his own medicine."

"No, not exactly," laughed the drummer, "for my jewelry, unlike the doctor's medicine, is 18 carat fine always."

"And there are no tricks in your trade," grinned the listener, who at that very moment was wearing a 15-cent pearl scarf pin that looked as if it had cost $75. "However, why don't you wear jewelry? Can't you afford it, or are your tastes too delicate and refined?"

"Thereby hangs a tale," said the drummer. "I used to wear a lot of it and of the most expensive kind, but I had to give it all up once upon a time and that taught me a lesson. At the same time you may think when you have heard my story that I ought to go around all the time loaded for emergencies."

"It takes you a powerful long time to get to the story," ventured the listener, who had an invitation to go to a Thanksgiving dinner along in the latter part of November.

"Does it?" snorted the drummer. "Well, it's good enough to keep and put in your Christmas stocking, but I won't do that. Here she goes. About seven years ago I was on my way back from the Pacific slope and I stopped for a week's rest and recreation at a semi-wild hotel in the Rocky Mountains. As usual in those days, I was loaded to the guards with jewelry and couldn't give it up even in the woods. But I was only there for a short stay and had with me my ordinary civilized city attire. I remember I wore a $1,000 diamond stud in my shirt front; a $100 chain to a $500 watch; a $100 diamond collar button, heavy link cuffles with a big diamond in each one; an uncut diamond worth $1,000 for a watch charm, and so on until I was a glittering array of gems and things worth a small fortune. Besides, I was my own traveling advertisement and stock of goods in one, for whatever I had that struck anybody's fancy and he wanted to buy I would sell on the spot. That was really the only possible excuse for decking myself out in such a fashion. Well, game was plenty in the mountains just around the hotel and a newspaper man from Chicago who was there for a month was putting most of his time in with his gun. He was fixed for it, though, and I wasn't, so I let him go his way and took his word for the sport he was having. One afternoon I was sitting on the piazza of the tavern arrayed in all my jewelry, for the safest place for it was on my person under my immediate eye, when the Chicago man came dashing through the grounds with his gun, calling me to grab up a shotgun there was in the hall and come on, for there was a bear up in the mountain back of the house. I ought to have had more sense, I suppose, but I am fond of a gun, and before I thought of how little I was fixed for it, I caught up the gun, and noticing there was a powder horn and pouch hanging to it, I made a grab and away I went. The landlord told me that it was loaded with buckshot, and to skip, which I did. The newspaper man took up one side and I the other, and in about half an hour I had got clear out of sight and hearing of everything, and the next thing I knew I ran slap into a big bear that wasn't looking for me or any body else, and evidently had not been disturbed before. I was so close on him before I saw him that escape was impossible, and besides I was up there to let him do the escaping if he could. On the instant he was up on his hind legs and coming at me and on the instant I banged away. Of course, I hit him, but it was a most scattering kind of a hit and merely threw him off his pins for a moment to make him a hundred times worse when he got at himself again.

"Some way or other I must have upset the pouch with the powder horn, for when I dodged behind a tree and prepared to load again, there wasn't a buckshot or anything else in it. That left me in a pretty pickle, and I hadn't any time to formulate methods of defense until the bear was coming for me again. It was an old muzzle loader, and in my wild anxiety to get something into it besides powder and paper wad, I was about to shove the ramrod in and give him that, when it occurred to me that a ramrod might come in handy if ever I wanted to load again. In the meantime I had climbed up the rocks, which were big and plenty here among the trees, and was managing to keep myself fairly safe. As I slipped into the last niche of the rocks before I had to take chances and run across the open to a clump of trees, my heavy watch chain caught on something and almost tore itself out of my buttonhole. It gave me a thought, though, and in a second I had it loose and was ramming it down the gun barrel. A hundred dollars a load was rather expensive, but it was my life against the watch chain, and there were other watch chains. To make the chances in my favor somewhat better, I dropped my link buttons and a collar button into the other barrel. They were not so heavy as the chain, but the range was short and I was counting to do some valuable work in my behalf with that watch chain, which weighed half a pound, a friend of mine used to say and looked a ton. As the bear got on the level with me and rose to embrace me to his throbbing bosom, I tried to remember that my chance for life lay in that gun barrel, and I must be cool and collected and very brave, and I guess I must have remembered it, but to save my neck I couldn't be steady, and as I backed away to let the bear go on by me if he wanted to, I stepped into a hole in the rock, the gun went off, my beloved watch chain went whizzing out into the blue empyrean of the Rocky Mountain heavens, and the bear winked and growled and came right at me. The next shot he got at short range, and collar and cuff buttons were hanging in his hair, while diamonds glistened like the mountain dew as I tumbled off the edge of the rock and lit on a ledge about six feet below. Here I was safe for a minute or two, at least, and I stopped to think. Thinking at such a time is a thing a man ought never neglect to do. The bear, weighing about a ton, exclusive of the loads I had put into him, was on top of the rock, chewing and spitting like the mayor of New York, and tearing around in a blinded rage for the man with the gun and the jewelry samples, while I was hanging on to the side of that boulder with a gun in my hands and nothing to load it with except powder, unless I could think of something else. Under these circumstances I thought of what the last charge was, and once more I went through myself. This time I got the uncut diamond, marked down from $1,500; the diamond stud going below cost, and an assortment of small articles, such as scarf pins, studs, suspender clasps, necktie pinches, and a variety of things that wouldn't go into a gun barrel without squeezing. These I rammed down and waited, for I knew the beast would be coming as soon as it got its wits together.

"And it did. I guess it must have scented me, for with a roar and a bound it came over the side and lit on the rock beyond and immediately proceeded to join me on my small territory. Now, I knew I was a goner if I didn't do something with the loads in that gun, and as Mr. Bear came on the gun went off, and there was a howl went up that was terrifying. I thought I had blown the bear clean into kingdom come, but I hadn't; I had merely blown his face full of bric-a-brac and small jewelry, and my hope was that enough of it had gone into his eyes to blind him and give me a chance to get away. He was pawing his face and pulling at himself in great shape as I left the rock, and I hoped I wouldn't be called on to risk my life further, but bears are animals of no sort of courtesy and kindliness, and before I had got any distance he had cleared up his line of vision and was after me again. Fortunately for me, rocks and trees were plenty, for after I had poured in my first load I was much more agile than he and could by extra effort keep out of his way, though if he could have got me in the open I wouldn't have had the chance of a humming bird in hades. As I covered myself behind the next point of rocks I thought again of loading my gun and wondered what there was in stock to load it with. I went through my pockets and found only a bunch of keys and a pocket knife, both too big to go in the gun, as was the silver dollar and other change. Neither could I find a bit of stone small enough and I began to think of climbing a tree and waiting for a storm to come and blow me to town or something like that, for I didn't see much chance in any other direction, when I bethought myself of a heavy gold pencil studded with jewels that my best girl had given me, and must have cost a hundred and a half, if it cost a cent. It was in my inside vest pocket and I went after it with a rush. I rammed it down, and as I pulled out the ramrod it occurred to me that that would be of no further use to me now, and I might as well bang it into the bear, too, so I shoved it into the other barrel and waited for my enemy. He was as game as you ever saw, and though he was badly disfigured he was still in the ring. But he was groggy and uncertain on his pins and I felt sure that one more good one would fix him so I could go home where I had been wanting to go ever since I had met the confounded beast. Well, I steadied myself better than at any time since the scrap began as he came at me, and when he had got as close as I had the nerve to let him get without making some sort of a demonstration, I banged away with both barrels and the jar knocked me off the rock, rattling the gun down after me. I only fell two or three feet, and as I jumped to my feet I caught up the gun and stood with it clubbed, ready for the last and greatest effort of my life, for there wasn't anything now to ram with even if I had plenty to ram. But the bear didn't show up, or down, rather, and after a minute or two I slipped around to see what I was expected to do next. To my infinite relief I discovered that I could go home or do anything else I wished, so far as that bear was concerned, for he was kicking his last kick and going along the road to bear heaven as fast as he could go. I sat watching him for five minutes or more, and then when I was sure he was approachable I went up to him and investigated a while. I don't know how long he would have lived if I had not fired that last shot, probably to this day, for the jewelry had only barked up his face and blood-ied up his eyes so he couldn't see, besides cutting him up about the neck until he was weak from loss of blood, from which he would easily have recovered with three or four days' rest in his den, and the beautiful $150 lead pencil of my best girl had simply cut a pretty round hole through his ear and gone to meet the watch chain, I suppose, while the ramrod, the poor and despised ramrod, the last resource, went into his eye, and so his brain, and killed him."

"Where is that ramrod now?" inquired the reporter.

"I have it as a souvenir. I also have one of the cuff buttons that caught in his hair, but the others were so injured by the shock that I only got 75 cents a pennyweight for them, and there wasn't enough to hardly pay expressage."

"I should think you would have offered a reward for the watch chain and the pencil?"

"I did," said the drummer sadly, "but I never found the pencil. The watch chain brought me the only luck I had in the whole adventure. I had offered $20 for its return and I got the twenty myself, for being out there the following year I went fishing one day in a lake near the hotel and inside of a fish I caught I found my chain."

"Busted?" queried the listener.

"No, sir," was the indignant and honest answer. "Didn't I tell you all my jewelry was 18 karat fine, warranted not to fade;" and the listener believed the drummer fully, for there never was yet a drummer who would elaborate a statement when it was about a matter of business.—New York Sun.

Imitation of Pearl.

When nitro-cellulose, dissolved in alcohol and ether, or in soda and potash soluble glass, is spread over a surface of wood, paper, glass, porcelain, or metal, and the solvent allowed to evaporate, the film remaining is said to have the appearance of mother-of-pearl. The proportions recommended are: 1 part of nitro-cellulose, 78 parts of alcohol (90 to 100 per cent.), 21 parts of ether.

With soluble glass as solvent, ten parts of this to ninety parts of water are employed.

The nitro-cellulose may be pure or crude, or in different stages of nitrification, as gun cotton, etc. Ethyl or methyl alcohol and sulphuric or acetic aether are recommended. The degree of concentration of the nitro-cellulose may be varied within certain limits, which variations produce different results. The addition of bisulphide of carbon in the proportion of 25 parts to 100 of the above solution, or the addition of benzine, produces a difference in the brilliancy and arrangement of the colors of the iris developed on the mother-of-pearl-like surface.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

The Cow Ate the Ring.

A gold ring that is supposed to have spent nearly two years in a cow's stomach was sent the other day to its owner, a young lady of Homestead. Two years ago the young lady was visiting on a dairy farm near here and while in the barn picked up a kitten and tossed it in a pile of chop and bran. With the kitten went a gold ring from her finger, which could not be found, and was given up and finally forgotten. Several days ago Edward Jones, a Suterville butcher, bought a cow from Frank Hough, the dairyman, and when the cow was killed the ring, with the young lady's name engraved on it, was found in its stomach.—Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette.

A New Telephone.

A Russian electrician named Kilischewsky has perfected a telephone which practically disregards distance. At a recent test between Moscow and Rostoff, 890 miles, talking, singing and instrumental music at one end of the line were distinctly heard by listeners at the other. An experiment is to be made by land wires and Atlantic cables in talking between London and New York.

Mountains of the Moon.

The mountains of the moon are immensely larger in proportion than those of the earth. The moon is but one-forty-ninth the size of the earth, but its mountain peaks are nearly as high. Twenty-two are higher than Mont Blanc, which is within a few feet of three miles high. The highest is a little more than four miles and a half.

The Greedy Crocodile.

The moment that a young crocodile breaks its shell it is to all intents and purposes as active as it is any time during its life. It will make straight for the water, even if it be out of sight and a good distance off, and it will pursue its prey with eagerness and agility during the first hour of its free existence.

A man usually uses his best judgment in buying cigars, and his poorest in selecting a wife.

A doctor never does well until he earns the reputation of not telling his wife everything he knows.

When you can't say anything else complimentary of a man, you can usually say that he means well.

A Homemade Heater.

The heater is made of galvanized sheet iron, is 5 feet long and 10 inches in diameter. The pipe at the left for carrying off the smoke is 5 inches in diameter—ordinary stove pipe; its height will be governed by the depth of the tank. The pipe at the right is slanting, 7 inches in diameter, and is provided with a cap for covering the opening. Through this the fuel is put. The cap must contain two holes which will permit of a proper draft. At night, fill the water tank, and the last thing before going to bed put the fire and the fuel in the heater. In spring, remove it from the tank and store in some dry place. If properly taken care of, so that it will not rust, it will last for several years. Any kind of fuel can be used, and it is surprising how little it takes. For removing the ashes, an old dipper is just the thing. The original, from which a drawing was made and is reproduced above, cost $3.75.

CHEAP AND CONVENIENT HEATER.

Prices Too High.

One of the causes for loss in the cattle feeding business is not difficult to find, and it would be well to give this subject careful consideration in calculating the chances for profit. An "article well bought is half sold" is an old adage among merchants, and it is alike applicable in the business of cattle feeding. Of late, stock cattle and feeders have commanded prices out of all proportion to the price obtained for the finished article, and it has been impossible, even with cheap food and careful feeding, to realize much profit from the investment. Unfortunately, a large proportion of both stockers and feeders offered for sale are not of the best quality and such cattle must be bought cheap or loss in the feed lot is inevitable.

When cattle are well bred and have individual merit there is far less risk incurred in purchasing, even if the price is somewhat high, for with such cattle well finished a price close to the top can be confidently anticipated. But with the ill bred steer, lacking style, the most careful feeding can never make amends for what should have been secured by breeding, and such cattle prove dear at almost any price. It is sheer folly to embark in the cattle feeding business making calculations, as feeders often do, upon advanced prices when the cattle are ready for market. No business man could ever be successful by buying above the market in anticipation of a rise in values, and the feeding of cattle, to be successful, must be conducted on sound business principles.

Waste Stable Space.

The space under the stairway in a stable is usually worse than wasted, because it is apt to be made the dumping ground for a thousand and one odds and ends, resulting in a heap inextricably confused. The accompanying illustration shows a way of utilizing this space that will add to stable conveniences. The space is boarded up and that portion having the greatest height is made into a harness closet, while the rest is made a grain bin, with one or more compartments. To reach the bottom of the bin when the grain is low, a part of the front is hinged, so as to turn down.

A STABLE CONVENIENCE.

Cheap Hog Pens.

It does not need an expensively built pen to house a hog, unless it is one of the variety that stands on two legs. The genuine hog, which is the only kind really profitable, goes in for comfort, and not at all for style. A pen warm in winter, with a tight roof over it to exclude rain, and floor enough for the hog to stand on while he is eating, is better than a painted house of matched lumber that will cost a hundred dollars. It is a good thing in a hog house to have a dirt floor, and that the hog house be light and strong enough so that it can easily be moved. Every time the house is moved there will be a new floor, and the hog, if unringed, will root it over. A hog left free to root in soil that has not been contaminated with hog manure will generally keep healthy and will make healthy pork. In summer time, the hog house is mostly superfluous. The hog likes to be cool and will root for himself a wallow in the moist soil, where he will lie in summer most of the time if well fed, and will keep in better health than in the most artistic hog pen ever built. Many of the experiments in hog growing begin with much too expensive hog houses. These make the pork cost far more than the cheaply grown hogs of farmers, who can thus undersell the amateur farmer, who handicaps himself by putting on too much style.

Farm Tools.

Where are now the tools used in the summer work in the hay and grain harvest? If they are still in the fields where used, or, what is just as bad, drawn up along the roadside near the house, it is safe to say that such a farmer's tools will be rusted out before he has got enough out of them to pay for their cost. A farm tool house makes a better interest on its cost than most farmers can get from an equal investment of money. It should be convenient to the barn, and also with two doors, so that the reaper and mowing machine may be drawn into it with a team, and the team taken right through on the opposite side. This will save a great deal of tugging by hand to set these heavy machines in the right place. It is well to make the tool house tight, so that with a fire it can be made comfortable for doing work there in winter. That will also be an excellent thing for the boys, testing whether they have any inclination to mechanics, as most American boys have. The life bent of many a boy is thus brought out on the farm by putting different things before him, and his parent can then better tell what course his education should take.

Kitchen Water Wastes for Fruit Canes

I never give dish water to pigs, as I believe it better to supply them with fresh, clean well water, says a correspondent of Farm and Home. Dish water, the week's wash water, chamber slops and familiar wastes are put in a barrel, which is emptied every evening around small fruit plants and canes. As portrayed herewith, the barrel is fastened on a two-wheeled cart; a is a platform 3 feet long and 2½ feet wide; b are handles 1½ feet long and

MOVABLE KITCHEN WASTE BARREL

2½ feet apart; c is a support, c1 being 1½ feet and 2c 2 feet in length; is is a half-barrel with a faucet 6 inches long. In dry seasons our small fruits do not dry out as do our neighbors' as a result of the frequent watering with this well-fertilized material.

The "Know How" Principle.

The money value of "knowing how" was forcibly illustrated not long ago. An intricate machine was taken to an expert to be put in order. In a few minutes it was taken to pieces, cleaned, oiled, and put together again, when it was found to be all right. When the workman was asked what his charges were, he asked $5. Upon the owner's objection to the charge as excessive for so short a job, and his demand for an itemized bill, the workman made out one somewhat as follows:

| John Doe. | Dr. |
|---|---|
| For one hour's time spent in repairing machine | $0.50 |
| For knowing how to do the work | 4.50 |
| Total | $5.00 |

This "knowing how" embraces a principle that is especially applicable in all departments of agriculture. The man who knows how has a decided advantage over the one who does not in every walk of life. Verily, knowledge is money. Profit thereby.

Increase of Potato Rot.

Wherever potatoes are largely grown the rot is apt to increase. This it a natural result, as there are more chances in a large acreage for some of the rot fungus to be kept through the winter, and by being fed to stock getting into the manure heap. Owing to the cheapness of potatoes a good many last winter were fed to stock or thrown away altogether. In either case the result is likely to be an increase in potato rot in that locality this year.

Rat-Proof Corn Cribs.

The loss of grain on a farm from rats is quite an item, as they destroy a portion other than that consumed. The cornerib should be made rat-proof and all harboring places made disagreeable. They can be prevented to a certain extent by traps, poison and other devices, but the best method, if possible, is to provide no harboring places for them.

Feathers.

It should be remembered that the removal of the feathers of geese is a great drain on the system, and if the most is to be made of the geese the picking should never be done while they are laying or setting.

"TALKING SHOP" AT HOME.

Drop Business as Far as Possible with Business Hours.

"There are times when it seems that a man's house is the best, and at times it is the only place for a business consultation of importance, and no wife will resent such occasions," writes Edward W. Bok, in an editorial protest against "'Talking Shop' at Home," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Those times are, however, rare, as every man knows, and they should be kept so. Business, at its best, interests a woman simply because it interests her husband and because his interests are hers. She has no inherent love for it. She cannot have. It is not her sphere. And, therefore, to impose business talk upon her every evening, or nearly every evening, is nothing short of an imposition and an injustice. Men ought to be wise enough to see this. And they ought to be sensible enough to understand that, for their own interests, it is best for them to drop business matters, so far as possible, with business hours. A man's mind needs diversion; it requires exercise in entirely different channels from those in which it has been running during the day. For this reason the proverb is so full of common sense that every man should have a personal hobby as far removed from the nature of his business as possible. A sensible hobby has saved many a business man from early collapse. The mind needs rest, and a man's home is the only place in all the world where such rest should be given it. And American wives should more rigidly insist that this mental rest be taken by their husbands. It is not an easy matter in some cases for the woman of the home to take such a stand and persist in it. But she can do it if she will. A woman can do almost anything with the man who loves her if she only goes about it in the right way. The trouble is that so many women choose the wrong way. The practice of 'talking shop' should cease in our American homes. Our wives are right in the interest which they take in their husbands' business affairs. Their influence is frequently seen and felt in the business world. And it is an influence which every right-minded man respects, knowing, as he does, that a woman always acts for the best interests of the man she loves. In her interest and sympathy she is right. Nothing works as much good in a man's capacity and enjoyment of business as his wife's faith, interest and co-operation in that business. So long as she permits her interest and sympathy to act only as a means of encouragement she is wise."

The Crocodile.

There is little in the animal kingdom that can look so dead and be so much alive as a crocodile. The number of unsuspecting persons who have taken him for a log and have failed to discover their mistake until it was too late to be of any benefit to them will never be known.

In ancient times, several years prior to the British occupation of Egypt, some of the people of that country worshipped the crocodile as a god, there being nothing else like him. They fed him on dainties, and togged him out with jewelry. In other parts of Egypt, however, the natives looked upon him as a devil. Having no firearms, they did not fill him with lead, but they managed to immolate him successfully with such weapons as were fashionable at that time.

The crocodile is not so numerous in the Nile as he was in the days of the Rameses family; in fact, he rather shuns the river now below the second cataract on account of the annoyances inseparable from tourist traffic. It seems impossible for a tourist to see a crocodile without trying to plug him with a revolver, and to a reptile that is fond of a quite life this sort of thing is simply insufferable. He will not molest a man unless he can take him at a disadvantage, and so long as a man does not, unthinkingly, step on him the crocodile will go his way and calmly await his opportunity.

He feeds on fish, but for a course dinner he would rather have humanity, black preferred, which shows there is no accounting for taste even among reptiles. His methods for capturing large game are plural as well as singular. Sometimes he will lie on a river bank, partly covered with sand or mud, until an absent-minded native wanders within reach. Having grabbed his prey, he will waddle into the water and there drown the struggler. He will then drag his victim ashore and bury him in sand or mud, and wait for days before he gorges himself.

The Most Luxurious City.

John Gilmer Speed writes of the money spent annually in "The Most Luxurious City in the World," in the Ladies' Home Journal. He asserts in a prefatory way that New York is the most luxurious city in the world, and that expenditures are made on mere living with an elegance and ostentation unknown in any of the capitals of Europe. The total wealth of New York would, if equally divided, give to each man, woman and child of that city $3,756.82—an amount greater than any other city in the world. Mr. Speed states that $20,400,000 are paid annually to the lawyers of New York; $11,328,000 to physicians and surgeons; $3,000,000 to the clergymen; $2,665,000 to architects; $1,600,000 to dentists; $13,020,000 to brokers. An aggregate of about $100,000,000 is spent annually for clothing, $10,000,000 for furs, $20,000,000 for diamonds and other jewels, $3,500,000 for cut flowers and growing plants; $20,000,000 on yachting (the boats representing an investment of $20,000,000), which is something more than is spent yearly on horses and carriages. The elevated railroads take in $12,000,000 for carfare, and the surface lines $15,000,000, a total of $27,000,000 for going about New York. Mr. Speed estimates that $31,837,500 are spent by New-Yorkers each year for European travel, $2,537,500 of which go for steamship tickets. New-Yorkers spend $30,000,000 for beer and $90,000,000 for wine and spirits—about sixty-six and two-third dollars for each person per year. In their gifts to charities New-Yorkers are most liberal, $9,000,000 being the annual sum thus expended. More money is spent in supporting and furthering church work in New York than is paid all theaters and playhouses of the city. The total spent for amusements is $5,900,000, while considerably more than $6,000,000 is contributed to the support of churches.

Girls' Evening Dresses.

"The materials in vogue for young girls' gowns for evening parties are simple but dainty," writes Isabel A. Mallon in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Lightweight silks, chiffon over silk, organdy or dotted muslin developed in the same way with decorations of youthful-looking laces and many ribbons make particularly pretty gowns for evening wear. The young girl's bodice is made either quite high and finished with a soft frill about her neck or else it is cut out in what is known as the 'Dutch square.' Long sleeves or elbow puffs are proper with the 'Dutch square,' and many picturesque effects are obtained by this combination. No matter how rounded an arm may be, nor how pretty the hand, evening gloves should be worn with the party dress. The fan is not an absolute necessity to the evening toilette, but it is always a pretty and a graceful addition.

"China silk, lightweight corder silks, chiffon, organdy and muslin are the materials dedicated to the young girl. When any one of these is made up for evening wear the lining should be of a lightweight, but not a corded, silk, or an inexpensive satin. Pale blue, turquoise-blue, rose and salmon pink, pale silver-gray, and, best of all, white, are the colors in vogue for the young girl. No matter how charming the heliotrope shade may seem it should not be chosen for a young girl, and no matter how glowing and attractive a bright red fabric is, it is inartistic as a party dress, and should on no account be chosen. In this connection it may be said that the prettiest of all party dresses for a young girl is the one made of white material."

A False Teaching.

The Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst writes of "The Young Man at Play" in the Ladies' Home Journal. He asserts that "it is play rather than toil that is most germane to our true nature and that lies closest to the Divine intention. The care needing to be exercised as to the quality of our amusements must never be construed into a verdict against amusements in themselves considered. With most of us the play impulse stands far more in need of encouragement than it does of restriction. The proverb, 'It is better to wear out than to rust out,' is true in form, but false in spirit. The flowers do not wear out, but neither do they rust out. One reason why so many people are asking whether life is worth living is that we are teaching ourselves that man's chief end is to struggle and to crucify spontaneity on a cross of drudgery. We are not arguing for indolence. Indolence is as distinct from play as a pool is from a mountain brook. But we shall be greatly disappointed in Heaven if it does not give a great deal of opportunity for energy to issue in activity that takes no thought and is a joy to itself; and an experience that will be saintly in Heaven can hardly with reason be criticised as limp and puerile if indulged in before we enter Heaven."

Delicate Prints on Iron.

It is a curious fact that has often been proven by actual experiment, that a delicate fern or other leaf may be placed between two smooth blocks of iron and have a plain impression of every rib and fiber of itself left on the hard surface of the iron plates after they have been driven suddenly together by the explosion of a stick of dynamite. Another experiment in this line and one equally curious is made with a smooth block of iron or steel and a cake of compressed gunpowder. A delicate piece of lace is placed on the metal surface and the disk of powder is laid on top of the fabric. When the powder is detoned the lace will be utterly annihilated, but its impression will be clearly left on the metal.

Bear Heavy Pressure.

Piscatorial authorities of highest repute say that fishes and mollusks living at a depth of more than three miles under water have to bear a pressure of several tons, the weight being that of the superincumbent brine, which exerts its power from all sides alike. The reason that they are able to bear this tremendous weight is because they have exceedingly loose tissues, which allow water to flow through every interstice, thus equalizing the weight. When the pressure is removed they die almost instantly.

No Choice.

Young Man—Ah! How do, Dick? Is your sister at home?

Little Dick—Which sister? The homely one what's goin' to have all pa's money, because she's likely to be an old maid, or the pretty one what ain't goin' to have anythin?

Young Man—Um—er—both of them.—Woonsocket Reporter.

Strength and Sex in Royality.

It is noted that the women of the royal families of Europe are, on the average, much stronger, mentally and physically, than the men.

A woman is a bride as long as she puts away her choicest preserves for her husband, instead of for the minister.

BLACKBERRYING.

When I was but a wee, shy boy,
My mother's pride, my father's joy,
My hands and mouth had full employ
When blackberries were ripe.
And oft my mammy she would squeeze
The thorns from out my arms and knees,
And my good dad, to give me ease,
Laid by his favorite pipe.
And even since I've become a man,
And dressed on quite a different plan,
I've still gone carrying the can,
When blackberries grew sweet.
Yes, trampling through the bramble brakes,
I'd court the keenest pains and aches
For two or three fair colleens' sakes—
Whose names I'll not repeat—
Till Norah of the amber hair,
Who'd been my partner here and there,
Around, about and everywhere,
As blackberries came in—
When I just tried, with too much haste,
The richer, rarer fruit to taste
That on her lips was going to waste,
She tosses up her chin.
And marches by me night and morn,
Her gray eyes only glancing scorn.
Regardless of the rankling thorn
She's rooted in my heart.
Yet maybe—though I much misdoubt—
Her eyes that flash, her lips that flout,
Will yet turn kind, and conjure out
That thorn of cruel smart.

EARTHQUAKE SCIENCE.

The Internal Fires of Earth and the Cracking of the Upper Crust.

It has long been the popular belief that volcanoes were the cause of earthquakes, and many scientists have held to this theory, but Professor John Milne, F. R. S., who has recently been investigating the causes of earthquakes in Japan, in connection with the University of Tokyo, made the statement in a lecture that most of these shakings, probably 95 per cent, were caused by fractures of the earth's crust.

He explained that the earth's crust was in perpetual motion, and the tremor was either so slight as to be imperceptible or so great that it might plainly be felt. It is not, he said, necessary to go to Japan or South America to study earthquakes, for an earthquake in one part of the world can, by proper instruments, easily be recorded in another.

"The inside of the earth is hot," said Professor Milne, "and the crust is constantly breaking downward, and as it accommodates itself to what is underneath, the surface of the earth's crust becomes puckered up, and mountains and hills are formed. When any interruption takes place in the process of the internal crumbling of the crust of the earth, there is a subsidence producing a violent shaking, which is called an earthquake. If a big shaking takes place in any part of the world, the motion is sufficient to be propagated over the whole surface of the earth.

"In countries where there are volcanoes earthquakes are most frequent, but they are not all directly attributable to the volcanoes. When the ground opening upward is near the ocean or other great body of water, volcanoes are found there, for volcanic action is due to steam from water in heated rocks, the water having soaked through from the surface.

"In Japan earthquakes, great or small, are of such frequent occurrence that people there do not talk about the weather, as they do almost everywhere else in the world, but you are asked what you thought of the last earthquake, and there is much guessing and betting on the earthquakes that are to come.

A Boy's Appearance.

Ruth Ashmore, addressing herself to "That Boy of Mine" in Ladies' Home Journal, writes that his personal appearance "should be good. You owe that to yourself. And whether it is at the office or when you are out visiting you should be a clean, wholesome looking young man. Cleanliness does much toward godliness, and a clean body aids a clean soul. It may not be in your power to possess a dress suit, but if you should not don't borrow one and don't hire one. Brush up the best clothes you have, make them immaculate and then enjoy yourself and forget your clothes. Your linen can always be fresh and clean, and your tie can be in good style and properly knotted. Never wear a loud scarf and never wear imitation jewelry. Gentlemen select plain gold buttons, and simple gold links, and scarfpins of the most modest pattern. If you can afford dress clothes, remember never to appear in them until after dark. You may wear, as you like best, either a lawn tie or a black satin one, but the stiff little bow should be looped by yourself and not bought ready made."

The Senator's Dress Suit.

There is a certain senator from a western state who dined with the president one night not long ago. He wore on that evening what he always wears on full dress occasions, a coat made after a design of his own—a coat which combines the elegance of a dress coat with the lines of a cutaway, but is neither one nor the other. When the senator was ready to start for the White House, some busybody bustled up to him and said:

"Why, senator, aren't you going to put on a dress coat?"

The senator drew himself up to his full height.

"What! I dress like a waiter!" he said.—Washington Star.

Waitresses.

The deftness of the woman waiter is rapidly being recognized. Caterers are announcing that they can supply neat, capable waitresses for all manner of social functions, and society women accept the news as a gratifying guarantee that their new gowns will survive the most elaborate dinner in an unspotted condition. The expert maidens are clad in black alpaca, with dainty white caps and aprons, and so far they are guiltless of gloves.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Siberia.

A graphic idea of the immense size of Siberia may be gleaned from the following comparison: All of the states, kingdoms, principalities, empires, etc., of Europe (except Russia), and all the United States, including Alaska, could be placed side by side in Siberia, and yet but little more than cover that immense country.

WHITE AND BLACK CRAVATS.

In Former Times They Were Badges of the Wearer's Profession.

Years ago the white tie in this country was the characteristic wear of the reverend clergy, their monopoly. Thence it passed into general use and disputed popularity with the black. The black neckcloth was early in this century likewise a professional badge. Those who followed the profession of arms claimed the right to wear it as their monopoly and sometimes enforced that right. Cooper in "Wing and Wing" makes a very dramatic use of this custom. A French privateer captain in disguise has fallen into the hands of the English and is brought before a court martial. So skillfully does he stick to his assumed character of a fisherman that his judges are puzzled until one of his accusers suddenly places around the prisoner's throat the black neckcloth which all officers wore. Then his true character blazes forth and he is condemned, but escapes execution to die sword in hand. Cooper knew what he was writing about, for he, too, had been an officer.

Military and naval men wore black cravats when in plain clothes, and civilians aped them until black became the only wear. Before the rise of the black cravat, carelessly tied white lace, the Steenkirk, had been in vogue for neckwear. Its popularity likewise was a civilian tribute to military valor. At the battle of Steenkirk the French Royal guards, the household troops, being suddenly called from their tents to meet the oncoming English, had no time to tie their rich lace cravats with their accustomed neatness and loosely knotted them about their throats. They were the dandies of Europe, the perfect pinks of military propriety, and were correspondingly brave. They did up the English in about one round, and thenceforward the Steenkirk cravat was the fashion, and the more carelessly it was knotted the more Steenkirky it was.

As white is now the color of peace, may not the psychologist be justified in hailing snowy cravats as evidences of man's recognition that peace hath her victories not less fashionable than those of war and as worthy of being commemorated at the neck?—Boston Transcript.

A New Version of an Old Story.

Poor M. Floquet is hardly cold in his grave before posterity has set about stripping him of his chief claims to glory. Everybody remembers that the Radical politician's reputation was built upon an incident which occurred in 1867. The Czar Alexander II, then on a visit to Napoleon III, had been shown over the Palais de Justice, and was stepping into his carriage, amid cheers, kindly provided by his host, when somebody in the crowd shouted, "Vive la Pologne, monsieur!" Floquet got the credit of this audacious bit of impertinence, and on the strength of it secured a seat in the chamber. M. Jules Claretie declares that he heard from Floquet himself that the real author of the cry was Gambetta, who generously allowed his friend to profit by it. On the other hand, M. Andrieux asserts that he invented the Gambetta legend to amuse the readers of a provincial paper, and that he did so at Floquet's request.

But another curious piece of evidence has been brought forward. The czar never heard the words at all, but he noticed the tumult to which they gave rise and saw the mob gather round a figure in their midst. "What on earth," he exclaimed, "does that old priest want?" Now neither Gambetta nor Floquet could possibly have looked like a disheveled ecclesiastic, but a man who was a close spectator of the scene positively affirms M. Delattre, a barrister of very advanced views, to have been the real simon pure. The czar's description would apply to him, and the language resembled his utterances in the tribune. Here we must leave the question, which affords, at all events, one more proof of the uncertainty of history.—St. James Gazette.

The Best Thing College Does For a Man.

Whatever may be in store for the American college as the predecessor of the American university, it can never cease to be an agency for the training of a man in the great business of living. It enriches his life; it deepens and broadens his view of truth; it ennobles his aims; it strengthens his choice of the right; it clarifies his vision of, and his love of, the beautiful. The college pours oil into the lamp of character and makes its light more radiant and more lasting. When these functions are lost, if they ever be lost, they must be assumed by some other power. For, so long as the race continues, so long are its members to be trained to think, to judge, to reason, to act with independence and with justice, to work laboriously, and to be large and true and noble men. These qualities represent the best thing which a college can do for its students.—Forum.

A Question of Physics.

The omnibus was about half full when the masher got in and took a seat next the pretty girl.

He had placed himself superfluously close to her, and she edged away, but little by little he crowded up to her until she was jammed into the corner.

The situation was painful, and was complicated by the glare of the women on the other side. She wondered if they thought she liked it.

The pretty girl turned on her pursuer. "If you want my place, sir," she said, "I shall be happy to rise and give it to you, but please don't try to occupy it while I am in it."

And the masher pulled the strap and got out.—New York Journal.

There Was Cause.

"Have you fastened the windows, dear?" she asked as they were about to retire for the night.

"No; what's the use? I gave you the last dollar I had to buy that hat, and we need not fear burglars."

"But they might sit down on my hat, you know."—Detroit Free Press.

The egg of the dogfish is provided with a system of spiral cables like the tendrils of climbing plants. These feelers reach out in every direction, and whenever they encounter an object which they can seize twine themselves around it and hold the egg in position until it is hatched.

A man endowed with great perfections, without good breeding, is like one who has his pockets full of gold, but always wants change for his ordinary occasions.—Steele.

Application for Patent.

Briggs, W. C. — Doyle, J.
Burton, G. H. — Stepora, Mr.

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

I. H. Mulholland and wife visited Bishop this week.

Schools in the county close to-day for a two week's holiday.

I. N. McLaughlin came up from Lone Pine yesterday morning.

Mrs. M. E. Curtis came down from Big Pine last Monday.

Hon. T. B. Rickey arrived from Carson last Wednesday evening.

Wm. Miller and Mr. McLean came up from Keeler Thursday morning.

Mrs. D. J. Holland of Keeler has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Alvah Conklin, of Aberdeen.

Albert Lewis came in from the Argus range on last Tuesday morning. He will not return until after the holidays.

Daniel Scott, of Bishop, had his leg broken a few days ago while at work on Owens River Canal by a rock falling on it.

A. O. Collins and Miss Grace Collins came down from Black Canyon on Sunday last and remained in town a couple of days.

Wells Barnes came in from his mine early in the week and reports the mining outlook in that section as more than encouraging.

E. C. Mattly, F. D. Mattly and Edward Renedict, of Mono Lake, were at Independence on Monday last on business in the Land Office.

The Committee on the Christmas Tree would like all those who are going to put presents on the tree to have them at the Church by 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Sam Levy, of Keeler, and Miss Pauline Marks, of San Francisco, were married in S. F. on Monday and left the same day for their future home in Keeler. They were accompanied by a young niece of the bride's.

Hon. T. B. Rickey says during the last six weeks the price of cattle have advanced over 50 per cent., and at the present time there is a greater demand and more activity in the cattle market than there has been for several years past.

The Bodie Miner and Mining Index have been consolidated and will hereafter be known as The Bodie Miner-Index. It is a six-column paper, very neat in appearance, and deserves the liberal support of every well-wisher of Mono county.

Tim Madden came in from Beveridge on Monday last, bringing with him some very rich specimens of ore taken out of his mine. On his return he will take with him a turkey and a couple of gallons of the flavoring extract for mince-meat to celebrate Christmas with.

Hon. P. Reddy has bonded ten of the sixteen mines owned by the Randsburg Company. This company consisted of four partners, of whom Mr. Reddy the well-known San Francisco lawyer was one. By the terms of the agreement, the interests of Mr. Reddy's associates was bonded to him in the sum of $150,000.

The Leap Year Ball, New Year's Eve., bids fair to be a social success. The young ladies have complete charge of the affair and manage the floor until midnight, when they allow the gentlemen to take control. The dance will be held in Mairs' Hall and supper at Mairs' hotel. Tickets, including supper, $2. Gentlemen free.

Phillip Cartier, well known in this community and a former resident of this place, met with a serious accident by a premature blast at Melrose, Mont., on the 29th of last month, having had one of his hands blown off and his eyes and face badly injured. Phil's many friends in this locality will be sorry to learn of his misfortune.

Religious services will be held as follows, on Sunday, Dec. 20:

Independence—Preaching service in the morning at 11 o'clock. Subject of discourse, "Triumphant Faith."

Georges Creek—Preaching service at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Lone Pine—Preaching service at 7 o'clock p. m.

All are cordially invited to these services.

INYO COUNTY GOLD MINES SOLD.

Chicago Capitalists Invest Big Money in Them.

Rich Ores Which Have Already Yielded a Small Fortune.

The sale was announced this morning of five gold mining locations in the Beveridge mining district, Inyo county, near the town of Independence, the price paid being in the neighborhood of $250,000.

The purchasers are H. S. Gillette and Calvin I. Brown, two prominent capitalists from Chicago, who have had the ground carefully prospected for some months past by experts, who have covered the property very thoroughly in every detail.

These mines have a phenomenal record. Although the greatest depth attained in any of them is not over 100 feet, there is said to be ore enough in sight to pay for the property, if never another pound of it is found at a greater depth. So far the ore worked will average from $50 to $100 per ton in free gold.

There is now on the dump a quantity of ore which will run over $40 per ton. The last crushing yielded 132 ounces of gold, worth $17 per ounce. So far only an arrastra has been used to crush the ores, which had to be packed on mule back from the mine to the point where it has been worked at a cost of $12 per ton.

The new owners purpose now to change the system of reduction in vogue by putting in a first-class milling plant at the mine, equipped with all modern appliances for the economical working of the ore.

The original owner and locator of this ground is an old miner and prospector 78 years old, who has personally carried out not a small portion of the development work himself. The advent of outside capital into the camp is hailed as the forerunner of still greater prosperity by the other mine owners of the camp.—S. F. Post of Dec. 8.

Christmas Ladder.

The ladies of town have been busying themselves in the interest of the school children by getting subscriptions from the heads of the various families of town for the purpose of giving a Christmas ladder. This will be something new in the community and will commend itself as being easier to obtain than the tree hitherto used. A ladder about three feet wide and twenty feet long will be used to hang the presents on, and when tastefully decorated and festooned with gifts, will make a very pretty showing. Santa Claus will need to be limber for he must climb to the top and by the aid of a bucket and rope send the topmost presents down for distribution. It was thought advisable to hold the festivity in the schoolhouse, but on considering that an organ would have to be hired, lamps provided and extra benches placed, the church was selected as being less expensive for the purpose. Anybody may put on a present for any other body, irrespective of age, color or sex. There will be no programme and Santa Claus will probably be along about 7 o'clock. This will be children's night and no pains will be spared to make it a pleasant memory for the little ones.

Special Religious Notice.

The Rev. E. W. Van Deventer, D. D., Supt. of the Nevada Mission, will hold the first quarterly Conference of the Independence Chapel, in the M. E. Church on Dec. 28, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The order of services will be as follows:

Dr. Van Deventer will preach in Independence, Dec. 25, service to commence at 7:30 p. m. On Sunday, Dec. 27, at 7 p. m., and on Monday, Dec. 28, at 7:30 p. m. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered at the close of the Sunday evening service.

Dr. Van Deventer will preach at Lone Pine on Saturday, Dec. 26, at 7:30 p. m., and on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. The Sacrament will be administered at the close of the morning service.

Dr. Van Deventer will also preach at Georges Creek Sunday afternoon, Dec. 27, service to commence at 2:30.

A collection taken at the close of each service to meet the Superintendent's expenses.

Dr. Van Deventer is well known to you all, and we hope that you will all avail yourselves of the opportunity of hearing this gifted preacher at every service. All are very cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

He Thought He Had Great Odds.

A McKinley man in Cleveland wagered a Bryan friend $100 to a cent that New York would give over 150,000 plurality for the Republican candidate. A condition of this apparently great odds was that if the McKinley man won he should receive an additional cent for every vote in the plurality above 150,000. McKinley's plurality in New York was over 266,000. The man who had offered the odds of $100 to a cent therefor wins by the terms of his wager $1160. The Bryan man when he drew his check for the amount said it was a bunco game, but any man fool enough to get caught like that ought to pay for it.—Washington Post.

Prosperous Farmers.

It appears that 72 per cent of the farms in the United States are free from mortgages. This is a fact, and a gratifying rose-colored fact, which "knocks the stuffing" out of many loud and long-winded harangues. If further inquiry should be made it would doubtless be discovered that in a majority of instances the mortgages on the 28 per cent of mortgaged farms represent money barrowed for improvements. The American farmer sometimes has occasion to growl; but, take him for all in all, he is the most prosperous tiller of the soil and the most Indepependent in the world.—Philadelphia Record.

A STEADY RUSH TO RANDSBURG.

Men Going in From Everywhere at the Rate of One Hundred a Day.

Patrick Reddy, the widely known attorney and one of the owners of a rich gold mine in the Randsburg district, has returned here after a week's absence at the mine. He says there is a big boom at Randsburg, the mines are all looking well, and he believes the district will prove one of the richest ever known.

He was found at his law office yesterday, very busy trying to catch up his work. He said he did not have time for a detailed interview, but would in brief say that it looked like a coming great country to him.

"As to the area of the rich region," he said, "it is several hundred miles long, and it is known to be from forty to fifty miles in width. Both quartz and placer mines are found all over. In a general way the veins follow the north and south course of the hills. Taking it from east to west, a number of mountain ranges are crossed.

"There is water at Cow Wells, the place recently called Garlock, where there is an eight-stamp mill, two stamps run by steam direct. Another mill, one of ten stamps, is being erected. Plenty of water can be had by sinking.

"Reddy, Campbell and Metson have a shaft 377 feet deep. At sixty feet water was struck, and it has been increasing rapidly. There is enough now for a 20 stamp mill. This mine is on the west side of the valley from the Randsburg mines. All the Randsburg mines that have been worked for ore exclusively pay, and will pay.

"It was estimated a week ago that there were from 1000 to 1500 men in the camp, and they are going in at the rate of about 100 a day from everywhere.

"It is very cool there. I had a fire in the cabin all the time I was down there. It was average winter weather. Up where most of the developed mines are it is much cooler. The altitude is some 4000 feet. The weather never gets hot. Even in summer it is pleasant.

"There is another mill at Kain's Spring. It is of five stamps and is running, and besides this there is machinery on the ground for five stamps more. No doubt other mills will be erected there. Kain's Spring is also on the west side of the valley.

On the eastern slope they are putting up a ten-stamp mill, and have found water that will be pumped into Randsburg.

"I think it is the greatest gold field in California. The mines are not confined to a single range, but there is range after range, and the extent of the field east has not by any means been determined or limited. As I see it there will be a great camp there by the next year. I cannot compare the district with the Rand or Coolgardie, because I have not an intimate enough knowledge of those places.

"Lots of capital is now going into the Randsburg country for investment. This capital and the men that are going there will, I think, cause some great developments. It is in all respects a remarkable country."—S. F. Call, Dec. 8.

From Aberdeen.

Messrs. Callaway, Tapman, J. and W. Hines, have gone to Waucoba to get a supply of fuel.

The services held at the Taboose school house were well attended last Sunday.

There will be a Christmas entertainment at the Taboose school house on Christmas Eve. All are cordially invited.

A desire for more light took possession of the citizens of Aberdeen and vicinity, and a subscription to raise money to purchase a lamp for the school house was started, and $4 subscription received.

Odious Comparisons.

The official returns of the vote of Nebraska at the last election show the aggregate poll to have been 223,091. The vote of South Carolina, as given by the Augusta Chronicle, was 68,431 only, and of Mississippi 69,463 only. Yet both of these Southern States have a greater population than Nebraska, the present estimates being 1,375,000 for South Carolina, 1,350,000 for Mississippi and only 1,160,000 for Nebraska. Mississippi and South Carolina have nine electoral votes each, and Nebraska only eight.—N. Y. Sun.

CHINESE CONJURERS.

People Supposedly Cut to Pieces and Then Put Together Again.

The court jugglers in the time of Kublai Khan made it appear to those who looked on as if dishes from the table actually flew through the air. One of the travelers who visited the regions of which Marco gives us some account says, "And jugglers cause cups of gold to fly through the air and offer themselves to all who list to drink." And Ibn Batuta, a Moor who visited Cathay a century after, gives this account of a similar incident:

That same night a juggler who was one of the khan's slaves made his appearance, and the emir said to him, "Come and show us some of your marvels." Upon this he took a wooden ball, with several holes in it, through which long thongs were passed, and, laying hold of one of these, slung it into the air. It went so high that we lost sight of it altogether. It was the hottest season of the year, and we were outside in the middle of the palace court. There now remained only a little of the end of a thong in the conjurer's hand, and he desired one of the boys who assisted him to lay hold of it and mount. He did so, climbing by the thong, and we lost sight of him also. The conjurer then called to him three times, but getting no answer he snatched up a knife as if in a great rage, laid hold of the thong and disappeared also. By and by he threw down one of the boy's hands, then a foot, then the other hand and then the other foot, then the trunk and last of all the head. Then he came down himself, all puffing and panting, and with his clothes all bloody kissed the ground before the emir and said something to him in Chinese. The emir gave some order in reply, and our friend then took the lad's limbs, laid them together in their places and gave a kick, when, presto! there was the boy, who got up and stood before us. All this astonished me beyond measure, and I had an attack of palpitation like that which overcame me once before in the presence of the sultan of India when he showed me something of the same kind. The Kazi Afkharuddin was next to me, and quoth he: "Wallah, 'tis my opinion there has been neither going up nor coming down, neither marring or mending. 'Tis all hocus pocus."—Noah Brooks in St. Nicholas.

MODERN PRISONS.

Their Very Improvements Are What Drive English Convicts Mad.

The official belief is that there is little or no prison made insanity. Prison doctors are keenly alive to the possibility of shamming, and they hesitate to admit that there is any flaw in the system for the administration of which they are so largely responsible. Still the fact remains that the ratio of insanity in prisons has exactly doubled since 1877.

The admitted general increase of insanity is not sufficient to account for this startling fact. Prison discipline is now more mechanical, and therefore more depressing. Its very improvements in this respect "take the heart out of a man." It is probable that prisoners were far happier in the old unreformed prisons, when they herded together and had companionship of a kind.

An expert witness who had passed four and twenty years in jail told the prison committee some startling things from the convict's point of view. The rules, he said, are too minute for human observance, and some minds are totally unable to bear the strain of them. A man may be reported for knocking something over in his cell, though it may be by pure accident. The name for this offense is "unnecessary noise." As the poor wretches walk their weary round in the exercise yard one may fall out of step and thus throw the others out. The first offender or the last—any one, in fact, on whom the warder's eye happens to fall—is liable to punishment for this mischance.

In this way the convict gradually acquires an expression that never leaves him—the round the corner glance of a being who dreads a tyrant on the pounce. We want a new Howard if the system is only half as bad as it is said to be by those who have best reason to know.—London News.

"Then you mean to tell me I'm a liar?" "Well, no; I don't wish to be quite so rude as that, but I will say this—you'd make a very good weather prophet."

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Mistress of the Foundry.

By EARL JOSLYN.

"Where did you leave it, Parker?"

"In my desk, I thought. I went away in such a hurry that I may have left it outside."

"Can you remember, Parker?" continued Mrs. Sterns.

"No, I cannot," was the answer. "If I had entered on the ledger the amount of the pay roll, I would not mind the loss."

"How much have you in the safe? Cannot you tell by that, Parker?" Mrs. Sterns was looking directly at Parker's face as she put the last question.

"Yes, very nearly."

"How much have you?" pursued Mrs. Sterns.

"Fifty dollars," said Parker after a pause.

"Thirty-six of that came in this morning. Did you have $14 on hand?"

"Yes," replied Parker, "I did."

Mrs. Sterns said no more. What had he done with the $200 overplus? She had found that for six weeks he had falsified the pay roll.

Parker was very uneasy about the missing book. Perhaps he suspected what had become of it. At all events on the following pay day he made out a correct list of wages. When all was ready, Mrs. Sterns said:

"I will pay the men, Parker. I like to know them by name, and if I pay them I shall remember them."

Parker hesitated, but delivered up the envelopes with the best grace that he could muster.

When her husband's letter came Mrs. Sterns learned that he had signed Starkey's notes for $25,000, $15,000 of which was due in 30 days. "I have instructed my lawyer," the letter continued, "to secure me when the first note falls due and to manage as best he can on the second. Keep Parker with you until the notes are paid. Then arrest him. My lawyer understands my wishes and will act when the time comes for action."

CHAPTER II.

The strikes of that autumn will always be remembered by business men for their bitterness and long continuance. The brotherhoods of brass and iron workers were finally drawn into the strife. One evening shortly before 5 o'clock Mrs. Sterns saw six sooty faced fellows enter the office.

"We can't work any more, missis," said Luke, who had been appointed spokesman.

"Why, Luke, what is the trouble?" inquired Mrs. Sterns, considerably alarmed.

"Nothing that you can help, missis," said Luke. "Fact of the case is the union has ordered us to quit, and we must stop work tonight at 5. We was ordered out last Saturday, but Don said we must help you out by finishing up the big order for them bibbs, so we got leave to stick by until now. I'm dumbed sorry to serve you so, especially when your man's gone, but we can't help it. We'll come back, ivery lad of us, as soon as the union let's us."

Dick Flanaghan thrust forward his long grimy arm and bent down toward the desk his dark, alert face. "We're smokers, missis," he said excitedly, "but don't ye be afraid. We'll never smoke the likes of ye out, though we will some as lives near ye. If ye iver made a strong arm, there 'tis for ye."

"Shut up, Dick Flanaghan," interrupted Luke. "Ye wasn't illected Paddy first of this diligation." Then, turning to Mrs. Sterns, Luke continued: "Will ye kindly pay us our wages tomorrow? Yis? Ye're a lady. Don't ye be afraid of nothin."

The men shuffled awkwardly out of the office. Paddy O'Shea, who went last, slammed the door violently. A moment later he put his head in to say: "Beg pardon, missis. The door went togither aisier nor I expected."

The workmen went slowly out of the foundry by twos and threes. Even Dave Collins, the clown of the foundry, wore for once a serious countenance and lingered until the last moment. He went over to his corner near the core oven and said, "Goodby, old bench, till I come again." Then he reluctantly went his way. Dave had often cursed his place as being the hottest in the foundry, but now he regarded it with affection.

Big Luke's voice whispered "Go back, missis."

Mrs. Sterns looked down the street after the receding figures of the men. It was two months before they returned to their work. In all that time not a foundry fire was lighted in the great city of Riverbank.

Meanwhile the contest between the workmen and their employers increased in violence, and now hunger began to press hard on the foundrymen's families. They always lived from hand to mouth, the tobacco and drink that the men consumed costing much more than the food of the women and children. But for days past one scanty meal was all that the women could provide from their lean larders, and it seemed impossible to procure that little for any considerable time longer. The men were becoming disheartened, as their employers persisted in refusing to accede to their demands.

Big Luke and Don met on the street one afternoon while affairs were at this pass. Luke was loud mouthed against those whom he considered the oppressors of the poor. "It is tonight that we have a bonfire, Don," said Luke. "Will ye be there? That old wharf rat, Mowry, is the one that holds out and kapes us fellers from gettin back to work. He ain't starvin, and his wife's got stacks of clothes in her drawers that Dan Doyle's mother saw when she cl'aned house there—more nor she could wear out in two lifetimes—and here we bees half naked. Look at my ragged pants! See my shoes! Old Mowry wears good ones on his divil's hoof. Why don't he share his money with us workingmen? We're the producers. His foundry belongs to us. We made the money that paid for it. Manufacturers ought to divvy up the profits that the men makes. We've got to scare them into it, Don. That's what we've got to do. They grind us poor men's faces till our noses are worn flat. Ye don't think as I do, Don, but it's God's truth that I'm after tellin to ye."

"There's some truth in what ye're sayin, Luke," admitted Don.

"Truth? I'll tell ye more yet that's true, Don. I have tramped it, and ye know it. Why did I tramp? Because no man under heaven can stand foundry smoke long, and ye know it. When ye have your big melts of zinc, I'm just about crazy after breathing the smoke. Poor Bob McEvoy has been loony twice from the effects of zinc and is in the hospital now. If I didn't get out into the fields and breathe the fresh air, I'd be stark crazy too. Sleepin on the ground seems to take the pizen out of me. The smoke don't strike to every molder's head, but it does to mine, and I'd ruther have it there than in my kidneys, as others does. And what does Mowry care for us poor divils? I've worked for him, and I knows him. The little core boys asked him once for a raise of 10 cints a day. They was gettin 75 cints. Mowry discharged them on the spot. And that same week he bought his great hound and paid $1,000 for it. A thousand dollars, man, for a dog, but no 10 cints for a boy! That $1,000 would buy me a fine little shanty, and then I would marry Bridie Hamilton, the purty little girl, and settle down and be stiddy. D'ye know what Mowry's new house cost? Ninety thousand dollars he paid, and I haven't money to buy a pigsty! He wouldn't put in a blower to save his polisher's lungs because it cost too much."

"Things ain't right," said Don, who was listening with darkened face.

"They'll lose some of their fine things the night, though," said Luke angrily. "Goodby. I have business on hand. I'm going to engage the 'Water Witch.' The firemen are friends of mine."

Luke lurched down the street toward the engine house on Dover street, and Don went past the foundry.

At 1 o'clock in the morning following this conversation a terrible alarm of fire sounded through the city of Riverbank. Springing from her bed and throwing on a heavy blanket gown, Mrs. Sterns raised her curtain and looked out. The whole street seemed wrapped in fire. Mowry's handsome house opposite was a blazing mass. From the houses on her left and right lurid tongues of flame shot upward to the sky. Supposing her house to be also on fire, she ran in her alarm to her door. There in the shadows of the broad front piazza she saw a figure crouching. Big Luke's voice whispered: "Go back, missis. We're watchin your house before and behint. The 'Water Witch' is on the way and will stand before yer house, whoever else's burns, and wet down the roof and walls. Ye've been good to us. We'll take care of ye."

Mrs. Sterns retreated. In three minutes more the "Water Witch" pulled up before her gate. Though ostensibly playing on the burning houses, she perceived that the sharpest lookout was exercised over her home, and it escaped unscathed, although all around was a wall of fire. Never before in her experience had she been so terrified. Yet the conflagration so fascinated her that she could not turn her eyes from the terrible sights without. As she stood at one of the long French windows of her drawing room she saw a throng of laboring men rapidly passing down the street and distinguished the rude words of their low chanting:

Smoke High street louts!
Burn her out,
Burn her out!

She recognized Dick Flanaghan and Paddy O'Shea in the crowd. Opposite her granite steps a dark, wild faced man glowered at the house a moment. Then, raising a petroleum torch, he was about to hurl it on the roof of her veranda. Dick Flanaghan's strong arm knocked the torch into the street. "Let alone, man," he commanded. "The missis lives there. Cheer, boys, cheer! Cheer for the missis!" A yell as if from the throats of a thousand Tammany tigers went upward.

"Oh, God," moaned the woman standing at the window, "protect me from the horrors of this night!" The mastiff, bolt upright and growling low, stood by her side. Her old colored servant was shaking with terror in the rear of the room. "It's the judgment day," she groaned. "De Lord has come. My ole man allus said the world would bust and burn up like stubber. Oh, come, Lord Jesus! Send the golden chariot fo' me!"

All that dreadful night, which seemed endless to Mrs. Sterns, Big Luke was her self constituted sentinel. Several times she heard him saying in a low, distinct tone: "Move on, boys. She's all right."

At 5 o'clock Luke tapped on the pane. Mrs. Sterns cautiously opened the door. "The cops is after us," he whispered. "I'll stay till daylight if I can. Leave yer doors unfastened, missis, so I can skip through the house out into the back yard and git off."

"Do you know the way, Luke?"

"Better nor ye do, missis," he rejoined.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wellington on the Defeat at Ligny.

Next morning Wellington was conversing with General Bowles when a staff officer drew up, his horse flecked with foam, and whispered the news of Ligny. Without a change of countenance, the commander said to his companion: "Old Blucher has had a —— good licking, and gone back to Wavre, 18 miles. As he has gone back, we must go too. I suppose in England they will say we have been licked. I can't help it; as they have gone back, we must go too."—William M. Sloane in Century.

TRUMPET CALLS.

Ram's Horn Sounds a Warning Note to the Unredeemed.

THE moment a lie is born, it begins to run.

Isn't it about as wrong to be wrong, as it is to do wrong?

Every converted man is a living proof that the Bible is true.

A lie is always an enemy, no matter how friendly it may look.

We would all love God more, if we would only trust him more.

How much praying is done in public that God isn't expected to hear.

Bringing prayers closer together is very apt to put sins farther apart.

The devil has a good start in every home where there is a moderate drinker.

The children of a millionaire can only be slightly acquainted with their father.

The man who would be strong in the Lord always must not feed his soul on moldy bread.

There are preachers who do not claim acquaintance with Christ outside of the pulpit.

It is doubtful if the church loafer weighs any more for good than a loafer anywhere else.

The man who is holding on to a few favorite sons is playing hide and seek with the devil.

If the Bible in your home is simply a parlor ornament the devil may walk in and sit down on it.

If some men would get nearer to the Lord, they wouldn't have to talk so loud when they pray.

The Bible says that Job sinned not with his tongue, but it fails to say the same about his wife.

Isn't it strange that so many men think they can do most for the Lord where the pay is best?

The woman who marries a man to reform him has no time to take proper care of her complexion.

It is better to believe that there is some good in everybody than that there is no good in anybody.

Look at it this way: The world and everything in it is yours to help you make a true man of yourself.

The real Christian will not shut up his Bible and quit, because things fail to go as he wants them to go.

Find a man who loves God with all his heart, and he will be found working for him with all his might.

Call the devil by any name that sounds well, and how quick he will pull in his claws and shake hands with you.

One week a year of self-denial from every Christian in the world would soon raise money enough to bury the devil, horns and hoof.

Closing Hours in London.

Mr. Albert Larking, assistant secretary of the Early Closing Association, writes that traders to whom legislation in this matter is distasteful are mainly responsible for the introduction of any bill to reduce the long hours of shop assistants generally, through their unwillingness to fall in with the voluntary proposals made to them from time to time. Mr. Larking gives a number of examples of this kind of opposition, and adds: "One would have thought a 9 o'clock closing on four nights of the week perfectly reasonable, but in all parts of London our efforts to secure even this reasonable hour in place of 9:30 and 10 o'clock have failed. That our legislative policy is generally approved is evidenced by the steady increase year after year of our income from employers and assistants, the increase for the first seven months of this year alone being no less than £330. While waiting for legislation, however, which we are certain will come, we have not abandoned our voluntary work, and it is hoped that when we open our autumn and winter campaign on the return of our secretary (from his enforced absence through ill health) we may receive a more ready co-operation from the London traders to secure some reasonable improvement in the present late hour of closing. One of the sad sights of London at the present time is to see shops of every thoroughfare crowded with well-dressed women, who ought to know better, as late as 9 o'clock at night, and who could, with a little self-sacrifice, shop earlier, and thus help to make the lives of the overworked shop assistants a little brighter and happier. We despair, however, of thoughtless women ever giving up their cruel and bad habit of late shopping until compelled to do so by finding the shop doors closed against them at 8 o'clock."—London Telegraph.

Whittier's Large Fortune.

Whittier left $250,000, though for his earlier poems he received nothing. Lowell, on the other hand, published his first poems at his own expense, and to the end his income from them was small; and it was only in the closing ten or fifteen years of his life that Browning, who had a similar experience with his first volume, received anything from his poems.

A HAPPY MAN.

A USED-UP OLD MINER RENEWS HIS YOUNGER DAYS.

From the Report, San Francisco, Cal.

Among the afflicted who have for years visited San Francisco to brace up their shattered constitutions is the well-known William Shore, of 28 Minna Street, familiarly known as Daddy Shore, because of his affectionate disposition and kind-heartedness. Mr. Shores is the head of a family. He has a happy home, a loving wife and children, city and country realty, paying mining investments and a pretty substantial bank account. For years, however he has lacked one thing which all his wealth could not buy. He lacked health and spent thousands of dollars for doctors and medicines to obtain even temporary relief.

Mr. Shore's greatest and most painful ailment was rheumatism. For ten years he suffered terribly. At times the pains were almost unbearable and he writhed in agony. His limbs would swell and his head would ache, so that rest was impossible.

These spells of sickness were as distressing to his family and his friends as they were weakening to the sufferer.

In San Francisco he had the best of medical skill, but all that the doctors could do was to afford temporary relief. All the health resorts and all the famous springs of the State were visited in turn without effecting any permanent good results.

Mr. Shore was about to give up in despair and settle down with resignation into being a life-long sufferer, when a San Francisco friend—at whose home he was stopping—told him of some miraculous cures made by the use of a certain pill, the name of which at the moment he could not remember.

Clutching like a drowning man at a straw, Mr. Shore requestedd his friend to make further inquiries about the wonderful medicine. Next day he was presented with a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Scarcely two days had passed before Mr. Shore seemed to get some relief and he felt very much encouraged and continued his treatment with steadiness and faithfulness. Before a week was over all signs of swelling had disappeared and his limbs were of normal shape and size. Relief from pain was gradual until it all went away. The sufferer was amazed. He could scarcely believe his senses, so pronounced became the cure in reasonable time. To say that Mr. Shore is a happy man does not express the situation. He is brimming over with joy. Although an old-timer, he is as young as the youngest, dancing and prancing around, singing the praises of the medicine that wrought such a miracle.

There is no secret about his cure. Mr. Shore is one of the representative men of the Pacific coast, with hosts of friends and acquaintances all of whom can testify to the truth of the circumstances related above

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatsim, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post-paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Cancer Of the Breast.

Mr. A. H. Crausby, of 158 Kerr St., Memphis, Tenn., says that his wife paid no attention to a small lump which appeared in her breast, but it soon developed into a cancer of the worst type, and notwithstanding the treatment of the best physicians, it continued to spread and grow rapidly, eating two holes in her breast. The doctors soon pronounced her incurable. A celebrated New York specialist then treated her, but she continued to grow worse and when informed that both her aunt and grandmother had died from cancer he gave the case up as hopeless.

Someone then recommended S.S.S. and though little hope remained, she begun it, and an improvement was noticed. The cancer commenced to heal and when she had taken several bottles it disappeared entirely, and although several years have elapsed, not a sign of the disease has ever returned.

THE STEERSMAN.

The fore shrouds bar the moonlit sand,
The port rail laps the sea;
Aloft all taut, where the kind clouds skim,
Alow to the cutwater snug and trim,
And the man at the wheel sings low; sings he:

"Oh, sea room and lee room
And a gale to run afore;
From the Golden Gate to Sunda Strait,
But my heart lies snug ashore."

Her hull rolls high, her nose dips low,
The rollers flash alee—
Wallow and dip and the untossed screw
Sends heart throbs quivering through and through—
And the man at the wheel sings low; sings he:

"Oh, sea room and lee room
And a gale to run afore;
From the Golden Gate to Sunda Strait,
But my heart lies snug ashore."

The helmsman's arms are brown and hard,
And pricked in his forearm be
A ship, an anchor, a love knot true,
A heart of red and an arrow of blue,
And the man at the wheel sings low; sings he:

"Oh, sea room and lee room
And a gale to run afore;
From the Golden Gate to Sunda Strait,
But my heart lies snug ashore."

THE MORTAL COIL.

These two, Allan and David, were brothers; and, what is often more than brothers do, they loved one another. While they were mere boys they had been left orphans, friendless, alone with the world and with necessity. They were industrious and frugal, their purse was common, and working thus together they managed to keep off starvation and debt.

They were now in the period of early manhood. Allan, the elder, was 23 years of age, and David 20. They occupied two pleasant rooms in a respectable lodging-house, lived well, and had some money saved in the bank. "At first I used to be afraid that we could not make it," Allan would say to his brother, when they talked in the evening of their life and their affairs; "it was such a hard struggle. But there is no longer any doubt that we are going to succeed in the world."

To this prophecy, which Allan rejoiced to speak, David would always assent, with an enthusiasm that came not from any confidence in his own powers, but solely from his belief in his elder brother. The difference between the brothers was more than that of years, as each of them well understood. Allan was strong, keen, and determined. David was gentle and sympathetic, but a little dull. They were alike, however, in their intense devotion to one another.

It happened in the midst of this which they regarded as prosperity that Allan was suddenly beset by a grievous illness. It had been written down in the pitiless law book of nature that he should pay for the sins of some ancestor, of whose very existence he was ignorant. The disease ran its slow course through many weeks, and there were now and again critical times when the heart of the younger brother, watching by night, stood still.

At last it came to an end. The sentence of nature was fulfilled. The life of the young man was spared, but the disease left him blind and a cripple. As Allan began to recover his strength, and the dumb consciousness of suffering gave way to active thought, he demanded to know how soon the bandages were to be taken from his eyes. To this and to other questions of a similar nature, the doctor who attended him returned evasive answers. Thereupon, Allan, half guessing the truth, became silent. In the meantime, David, also silent, clung desperately to a fragment of hope.

One morning the doctor, as he was about to leave, motioned across the sick man's bed that he wished to speak with him alone. They went out into the hall, where the physician sat down upon a chair and David leaned back against a corner of the wall.

Presently Allan heard the confused murmur of their talk. He climbed out of the bed and dragged himself with difficulty across the floor into the sitting-room. Placing his ear against the hall door, which was not quite closed, he heard all, unseen and unsuspected.

"It is useless for me to continue these daily visits," said the physician; "hereafter I will come only when you send for me."

"Well, what shall we do about it—about his eyes?"

"They will probably not pain him any more. You can take off the bandage whenever you are ready to tell him the whole truth."

David's lips grew very white. "You mean that he will never recover?" he said.

The doctor looked up at him suddenly with a frown. "Really," he said, "I thought I had made the state of things pretty clear to you."

"Yes," said David; "I know—but I kept hoping."

"My dear boy, I am sorry, but I cannot even let you hope. If your leg was cut off would you expect another to grow in its place? A part of the eye is gone—and that ends it."

"And the lameness?"

"He will always walk with crutches."

Perhaps it was well that no mortal eye saw the wan face pressed toward the opening in the door. There was a shuffling across the floor, and Allan drew himself upon the bed again, where he lay motionless and silent, though all his body seemed to quiver and his thoughts to cry aloud.

Presently the footsteps of the doctor sounded on the stairs and the lower door opened and shut. But nearly an hour passed before the younger brother came back to the room. When he came it was with the belief that he was prepared to speak to Allan and tell him all. He looked for a moment at the figure curled on the bed and shook his head. He would wait.

Several days passed. Then in the evening Allan said suddenly to his brother:

"David, what is the matter? Perhaps I imagine it—but is there not something that you want to talk to me about?"

"Yes," said the other, startled.

"It is about my eyes and my lameness, is it not?"

"Yes."

The time had come. He sat down by the bed and took his brother's hand. His own trembled violently, but that of the sick man was quiet.

"Poor boy," said Allan, as though not he but David were the one upon whom misfortune had fallen. He stroked his brother's arm gently for a moment, and then whispered: "You need not tell me, David. I know all. I listened when you and the doctor talked about me."

David spoke also in a whisper: "I could not bear to think of it—and so I could not speak to you."

"Poor, dear brother," said Allan, but with perfect calmness. They sat in silence for a few moments, and then Allan said: "Now, David, we have looked the worst of it in the face; let us examine some of the smaller troubles. What about money matters?"

"Oh, Allan," cried the other, "don't ask about that yet."

"Yes," said the elder brother firmly; "you must tell me all. Be frank and fair, as I would be with you."

So David told. The money in the bank was all gone, of course, and there were debts—to the doctor, the chemist, and the landlady. Having explained thus far, David hung back, and it took determined questioning on the part of Allan to bring out the rest of the story. Their friends at the club, knowing the trouble of the brothers, had raised some money—a considerable amount—for their benefit.

"It just paid the nurse," said David.

The proud lines in the other's face deepened to harshness. After a momentary struggle he managed to say aloud: "It was very kind of them."

But to himself into his pillow he muttered: "My God! This is the beginning!"

"I am afraid," said David, "that it will be some time before we can pay up these debts. Everyone seems to be good about it. The doctor says he will wait years if need be."

"Yes," replied Allan absently.

"Of course, you know what my pay is," continued the younger brother, "and you also know what our expenses are. Well, they don't fit. I've been thinking about it. We must move into one room and must economize in various other ways."

"Yes," said Allan.

"The worst of it is," David went on, without looking at his brother, "that we cannot get the things you ought to have. It is so hard for you to be all alone here——"

"Never mind about that, Davy," said Allan quickly; "what we must think about is how to clear up those debts and how to live on your pay."

After this the old confidence seemed to be restored between the brothers. What small part of the day David was not at work he spent with Allan, and they talked of their affairs just as they had done before the misfortune came. Yet there was one thing David failed to understand, although he studied over it a great deal. Why was Allan so calm and undistressed? It was not like him.

"Can it be that he does not really appreciate what it means to be blind and helpless?" thought the younger brother; "he was always so proud, ambitious and full of hope. And he is sensitive. I thought he would suffer."

The sick man's strength gradually returned. Presently he was able to move about the room, and then, accompanied by the landlady's little daughter, he managed to make short excursions into the street. He wore a dark shade over his eyes and walked on crutches.

The various economies which the brothers had talked over were practiced, and yet every day they ran more into debt. David's pay was very small; it was not enough to keep two people in comfort—one of them an invalid needing medicines and a physician's care. Yet Allan remained apparently unconcerned. At last David found work to do in the evening. He now earned enough to cover their necessities, but Allan was left alone most of the time.

One evening David had an unexpected vacation. An accident caused the establishment where he worked to close early, and he hurried to the room, eager for the pleasure of a few hours with his brother. When he came to the street door he said to himself: "I will go up quietly and surprise him."

He ascended the stairs with a quiet tread. The door to the room was open, and he saw Allan seated at the table, moving a pencil slowly over a large sheet of paper. "The poor fellow is trying to write," said David. Then he noticed that the edges of the sheet were notched at intervals, and that it had not been folded in creases. As the blind man wrote, he felt for these notches, and then ran his finger along the crease in advance of the pencil.

Full of tender sorrow and pity David crept up behind, that he might put his hand on Allan's shoulder and thus make his presence known, but happening to glance down upon the paper he saw the words, "My dear brother," and he knew that the writing was for him to read. He did not give himself time to wonder that Allan should be writing to him, but began instantly to decipher the misshapen characters on the paper. In a few moments he had overtaken the pencil.

This is what he read:

"My Dear Brother—You will find this note fastened on the outside of the door. Please read it through to the end before you enter. Perhaps you will then think it best not to enter alone.

"David, my brother, these words come to you from the dead. I have destroyed the pitiful fragment of life which fate left me. You were wont to be so strong and brave—can you read on calmly now, and try to understand me when I tell you my reason? Can you love me and trust me as you always have done? I believe that you can and will, and that is why I have dared to take this step.

"Several days ago I procured some poison which I have kept concealed from you. Through it death comes swift but painless."

David watched the slow, laborious making of the last few words, and it gave him time to think. Where was the poison? He glanced across the room to a chest of drawers. There was a small drawer at the top which Allan had used exclusively, and which was now half open. With noiseless step, the younger brother crept over the floor to this chest of drawers. The guess was correct. Hidden under some handkerchiefs lay a small vial, filled with a colorless fluid.

David took it up, shook it mechanically, and then turned it over and over in his hands, while he tried to think what he had better do. At any moment Allan might finish his writing and come in search of the poison. It would then be necessary for David to speak aloud and explain, and his brother would suffer the torture of humiliation. That would not do. Better to carry away the vial and make no explanations, unless they were demanded. He was about to steal out of the room when the thought struck him that his brother, if determined, could secure death by other means than this one bottle of poison. There was a loaded revolver in the drawer—that must be taken away. But what was to prevent Allan from obtaining more poison?

He was accustomed to buy his own medicines, and now he was strong enough to get about. Ah, there were so many ways!

The blind man seated at the table wrote on, feeling his way carefully along the folds in the paper. David crouched upon the edge of the bed, watched him and thought:

No; merely to remove the means of death would not save Allan. The only hope lay in appearing to him, in pleading with him for his own life, in conjuring him by the love which held them together, not to do this terrible wrong. What should he say? David was not easy of speech. His very thoughts were blunt, ill-assorted and confused. Deep in his soul he felt that his brother was about to make a mistake—one of the most awful of which life contained a possibility. This feeling was independent of religion or of superstition; it was a part of David's very existence. But how was he to speak of this to Allan, who seemed to understand everything so much better than he?

And now it suddenly occurred to him that he really did not know his brother. Evidently this desire of self-destruction had been in Allan's thoughts for many weeks, and yet he, nearest to him of all beings on earth, had never been allowed to suspect it. This was why Allan had been so calm and had accepted his misfortune so lightly. Tortures of sorrow there must have been, unspeakable agonies of ruined hope, all endured in secrecy and silence. It seemed to David that he himself, and not Allan, must have lacked the power of sight.

But what was to be done now?

The pencil was still moving slowly over the paper. David rose from the bed, and resuming his place behind the blind man read on:

"This concerns you and me and no one else; is it not so, brother? The world is far away from us; we are alone together."

"Now, what has existence for me? When first I learned I was to be always blind and a cripple there came with the knowledge an impulse for death. But I put it away and said: 'No, let me think of this more fully. The calamity seems now to sweep over all of life. Perhaps when I am more calm I shall find that much remains untouched.' So I waited and thought, and in the end I found one thing, the happiest of being with you. That is real and lasting, and for a time I asked myself if it were not enough. But I remembered that my existence, wretched and useless as it was, meant more of labor and hardship for you, and I thought, too, of what sorrow you must feel for me, and the pleasure of being with you turned to bitterness. There was nothing left.

"But you—you love me and you have a right to my life. It is for your sake that I have spent these long weeks in silent, solitary debate, after every other doubt was cleared away. At one time I had almost decided to beg my life of you, as I might any other favor, but I dared not. Yet I am begging it now—after I have taken it.

"Dear brother, I know that you are unselfish. I believe that for my sake you would give up the greatest happiness which life affords—as I would for you. Can you not, then, allow me the little that I take when I deprive myself and you of my existence? If, now, the conditions were reversed—if I were the one to be strong and well, while you were crippled and blind—I try to think of it in that way, in order that I may understand it better and judge more fairly—I should, of course, feel an intense sorrow——"

What was the matter? The pencil was moving slower and slower. At last it stopped. David looked up at his brother's face and saw it working with strong emotion. Then, after a moment the pencil went on:

"——that you should suffer so, and it would be an unspeakable happiness to help, to work for you—you would be dearer to me than, a thousand times, than if——"

"Oh, what am I saying!" exclaimed the blind man, aloud. The pencil dropped from his fingers and he threw himself back in his chair. "I could not let him go," he cried; "it would be cruel in him to leave me. But I—what will he—oh, Davy!"

He leaned upon the table with his face resting in his open hands, while David stood watching almost breathless in the struggle to keep silent. At last Allan caught up the sheets of paper on which he had been writing and tore them to fragments.

"It is over," said David. He restored the bottle to its place and crept past his brother out of the room. Presently Allan heard the street door noisily open and shut and David's tread sounded upon the stairs.

That night, as the brothers were about to retire, Allan said:

"David, there is something that I want to promise you. I have already promised myself, but I want to assure you of it also."

"Yes," said David; "what is it?"

"I think I had better not tell you what it is. You would be distressed, perhaps. But I promise you."

"Very well," said David; "let it remain a secret, then. But I accept the promise."—Spare Moments.

A Thrilling Feat.

Colley protests that it was nothing at all; Mrs. Johnson insists that it was a daring feat, of which few would be capable. Residents of Bath Beach and Bensonhurst share Mrs. Johnson's view.

Mrs. Jay S. Johnson's home in Bay 35th street, Bensonhurst, is one of the finest in that place. Her horses, behind which she and her daughter Mignon take the air each morning, could be driven by no less expert horsewoman.

Charles Colley, of No. 11 West 16th street, this city, who is working at Bath Beach this summer, is a practiced bicyclist. He was wheeling up 18th avenue in Bath Beach yesterday morning when Mrs. Johnson's handsome turnout came in sight. Mrs. Johnson was driving, and beside her sat her little daughter.

Colley dismounted from his wheel and stood at the roadside to watch the dashing equipage as it swept past. Hardly had the carriage rolled by when the horses broke into a run. In an instant Colley saw that Mrs. Johnson was powerless to control them.

Leaping on his wheel, the bicyclist put forth every energy in a race to overtake the horses. Fast as they went in their mad run, the wheelman went faster. Soon he was even with the carriage, then alongside one of the plunging horses. A burst of speed, and he was at the animals' heads.

Keeping one hand on the handlebar, the bicyclist shot out his arm and seized the bridle of one of the horses. Still pedaling, as he held to the frantic animal, he called to the terrified woman and child not to be alarmed, but to sit perfectly quiet.

Riding in this fashion, Colley saw that he was powerless to check the speed of the runaways.

Grasping the bridle with a firmer hold, with a mighty effort he kicked his bicycle from under him, rolling it to one side.

Then, with all the strength that was in him, he swung to the horse's back. Once astride the animal, the rest was easy, and in a short time the animals were standing still. Dismounting, he stood by the horses until he had them perfectly quiet, then discouraging Mrs. Johnson's protestations of gratitude, he returned to his bicycle, mounted and rode home.

Not so much as a harness buckle had suffered in the runaway.—New York Herald.

Tea at $175 a Pound.

Tea at $175 a pound! If a grocer should ask the average housewife that kind of a price she would be likely to drop dead. Yet there is such tea, and G. N. Merriweather, a tea merchant of Cincinnati, has some of it. A little of this goes a long way and five ounces of it constitutes his stock.

Very little of this tea is ever brought to this country. Indeed, little of it is marketed anywhere, as it is extremely rare, and millionaires, even, if the price was no object, would have difficulty in getting hold of it.

This $175-a-pound tea is known as the Ceylon golden bud. It is the pickings of the first tips of the blossoms. The greatest care must be taken in the picking, and nothing but the bright golden-hued tip taken off the blossoms. All the picking of this grade is carefully done by hand. The process of drying these tips is as delicate as the picking. The annual output is estimated at 12,000 pounds, valued at $2,100,000.

But five pounds of this tea has ever been known to have reached the United States, excepting a few pounds placed on exhibition at the World's Fair. A rich lady residing at New York wrote to Mr. Marr, the agent of the Ceylon tea-growers for America, at Chicago, and asked him to try to procure for her if possible five pounds of this remarkable and expensive tea. Mr. Marr was successful in securing six pounds of the precious article. The New York lady gave a check for $1,000 for her five pounds. Mr. Merriweather, who is a personal friend of Mr. Marr, received five ounces of the extra pound procured.

Beware of Tight Garters.

Bicyclists, male and female, should beware of tight garters and of stockings which are too thick. A garter which is wide and has little pressure is just as effective as a narrow one very tight. The result of wearing the latter is bound to be bad, it being a fertile producer of varicose veins.

How tantalizing heaven will be to the women, to see so much gold lying around, and no chance to spend it!

SHEAR NONSENSE

De song birds, dey hab lef' de lan';

THE DAY FOR GREEN CHECKS.

Scheme Used by Restaurants to Avoid Being Swindled.

It was at one of those places where you can get a good meal for fifteen cents. If your finances have run down to an unusually low ebb, ten cents will suffice to meet the demands of your appetite. Still, it is there as every place else. If you get a spread of first-class viands you have to pay for it.

It is one of the regulations of the establishment to charge up its patrons on squares of heavy paper that vary in color on different days, red, yellow, and green being the preferred tints.

About a week ago a young man went in and ordered a ten-cent lunch. As soon as it was brought in the waiter gave him a check.

The young man lingered long over his cheap repast and noon paper, and at last the waiter evidently forgot that his customer had been ticketed once and gave him another check.

The young man thought he saw the hand of Providence in the double deal, so he cautiously slipped one into his inside pocket to use on a future occasion and gave the other to the cashier. That day the checks were red.

It was a week later when the young man's hunger mounted to such a pitch that nothing but a meal of generous proportions would satisfy him. Remembering the ten-cent check that was hidden away in his pocket, he had no hesitancy in ordering whatever he wished.

The value of his lunch was an even dollar, but when he got to the cashier's desk he laid down his ten-cent check. Instead of accepting the dime and passing him along to make room for the next customer the cashier looked at the young man suspiciously and detained him a moment.

"Where did you get this check?" he asked.

The young man's face took on an expression of surprised innocence.

"The waiter gave it to me."

"When?"

"Just now."

"Which waiter was it?"

A clammy perspiration commenced to break out all over the young man's body, but he thought he might as well brave it out.

"The one close to the window," he said.

The cashier calls one of the proprietors, who was standing near by.

"Will you kindly have this gentleman show you the man who waited on him?" he said. "There is something wrong."

The young man didn't know what was coming, but he piloted the proprietor around to the table where he had eaten and pointed out the attendant.

"There he is," he said.

The proprietor took the red ten-cent check from the young man's hand and held it out for inspection.

"Did you give this out to-day?" he asked, sternly.

"No, sah," was the glib reply. "I 'member this gem'man cos he et so much. No, sah, I give him a check for one dollah. He'll find it on him somewheres."

The young man saw it was useless to protest and paid his bill.

It was a day for green checks.—Philadelphia Item.

A Plague of Hyacinths.

The rapidly increasing water hyacinth will soon become a thing of serious menace to inland navigation on the smaller streams of Louisiana, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat, unless some panacea is found for the evil. A year or two ago the presence of these plants in the two city navigation canals brought forth considerable comment, and at the time proved a source of serious annoyance and inconvenience to the vessels which use the basins. Now no one seems to know whence they came. The innumerable bayous of the southern part of the State are gradually filling up, and in many instances have become completely blocked with the hyacinth. Even the giant Atchafalaya is filled with great floating masses of the plants, and the streams south of this city extending almost to Grand Lake, are dotted with islands formed of the beautiful flowers. It appears that many years ago, according to several of the Atchafalaya steamboatmen, navigation was impeded in the tributaries of that river and on Bayon Teche, owing to the presence of the hyacinth, but after a few years the plant disappeared altogether.

Human Coal.

An English authority informs us that an audience of 2,000 people, listening for two hours to a concert, are not only cultivating and indulging their musical taste, but are engaged in the somewhat prosaic occupation of producing no less than one hundred weight of coal and seventeen gallons of water from the impurities and moisture of their own breath, and that if they were all performing themselves, instead of listening, this quantity would be nearly doubled.

It is far more wholesome to drink the undiluted water of the Thames at Blackwall than to breathe the air of a crowded and unventilated room, and how cleanly people can be content to do so is only explicable on the principle that what the eye does not see the heart does not grieve over.

Lamp Thrown In.

"I don't want the wheel. It is too heavy."

"Say, I'll throw in a lamp. That'll make it lighter."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A man trying to borrow money would not be so bad, if it did not take him so long to come around to the point.

What the Doctors Say

Home Remedies.

A liniment made of ammonia, sweet oil and laudanum equal parts is good for bruised surfaces, or for tightness of the chest. Another for lameness and for rheumatism is made of the whites of two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of spirits of turpentine, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Before using either of these it should be well shaken.

Turpentine is an excellent family remedy. As an inhalation it is soothing in bronchitis, pneumonia, coughs and any lung trouble. Rubbed on the chest it will ease the pain of aching lungs.

For burns the application of pure lard mixed to a paste with flour will be found healing, and will prevent any scar from the injured part. The same is true of raw potato grated and applied on a cloth, the cloth being next the garment, the raw potato with its juice being on the injured flesh. It must be removed as soon as dried, but its action is marvelous in severe burns.

Children suffer from earache which may be cured by the fumes of chloroform. To apply it make a funnel of paper, drop into it a bit of cotton saturated with the chloroform. Press the cotton in by blowing into the large end of the funnel. The application of a hop bag heated will often ease the pain.

The simpler the home remedies the better. They are quite as efficacious and are safer. Salt, lemons, hot water form a pharmacopoeia complete enough for use without the doctor's directions, except in accidents and croup. The curative effects of salt have never been known as they should be.

Sore and inflamed eyes are relieved by bathing with salt and water. Sore throat yields to a gargle of the same. The most obstinate cases of constipation can be absolutely cured by the persistent use of half a teaspoonful of salt in a glass of water taken just before going to bed, or the first thing in the morning. Constipation is one of the commonest evils.

Baths of salt and cold water will rouse a sluggish skin to action and will cure cold feet. Salt used occasionally is a good dentifrice and keeps the teeth free from tartar. Salt and water used on the hair now and then stops its coming out.

Some Humors of Marriage.

Scarcely a week passes without bringing news of some couple who have found it necessary to emigrate temporarily generally into Wisconsin, but sometimes into Indiana, in order to get married.

It is one of the curiosities of the law that in one and the same place—here in Illinois, for example—it arrays all sorts of difficulties about the process of getting married, while leaving the way to getting unmarried comparatively unobstructed.

Beofre a youthful couple who sigh profoundly for an opportunity to become disenchanted with each other can enter upon the disenchanting process they must, if of less than a certain age, get the consent of their parents and comply with certain conditions about license or banns, and all this at the cost of some money and trouble and embarrassment. It's all well enough. The law ought to stand guard over marriages, only it might well take more pains to see that they are prudent. It does nothing in that way now. But it pays so much regard to the prejudices and obstinacy of certain people who are not directly concerned at all as to drive the industry out of the State into communities where the theory seems to be that marriage concerns nobody but the contracting pair.

The oddest part of the whole affair is that parents should persist in the obsolete notion that they have a right to say something about it. They ought to have learned by this time that there are some things which we can do for others and some things which each one of us can do for himself or herself alone. They ought to have found out that it is no more possible for them to choose or reject a wife or a husband for their son or daughter than it is possible for them to digest the dinner that son or daughter may eat.

As to having their consent asked or being consulted about the matter in advance, why—that's preposterous. They should be grateful if they learn about it in time to provide for themselves proper wedding garments.—Chicago Chronicle.

Phosphorus in the Brain.

The human brain contains a considerable proportion of phosphorus, varying from one-twentieth to one-thirtieth of the whole mass. If the average weight of the brain be taken at forty-seven and one-half ounces it will then contain phosphorus amounting to about one and one-half ounces. Phosphorus is found to be almost entirely wanting in the brains of idiots.

Carelessness.

Much of the food given to animals is wasted in the careless manner in which it is handled, hay being thrown into loose racks or narrow troughs, or even on the floor of the stalls in excess of the actual requirements, a portion being trampled. A saving can also be made in grinding the grain during the winter when labor is not so high, and it will consequently be more digestible.

Naming Babies in Russia.

In Russia the Cheremiss shakes the baby till it cries, and then repeats a string of names to it till it chooses one itself by ceasing its tears.

People don't look as good swallowing raw oysters as they feel.

IN THE WAY HE SHOULD GO.

"Give me a kiss," she pleading said.
He heard, unmoved, her warm sweet suing.
Although to her he was not wed,
Nor had he even come a-wooing.

"Give me a kiss." Her lips in shape
To tempt a saint did thus beseech him,
While he seemed planning an escape
To some place where she could not reach him.

"Give me a kiss, just one, I pray."
Her fond insistence ill did serve her.
He looked askance and moved away,
Scared and disgusted with her fervor.

"Give me a kiss." Each coaxing word
But helped anew to 'fright and pain him.
Because he was her brand new bird,
And she was starting in to train him.
—Madeline S. Bridges in Ladies' Home Journal.

WILD HORSES.

Their Capture an Industry In Australia, Where They Abound.

As a rule, the herds number from 10 to 12, made up of mares and one stallion. No stallion will allow another stallion in his herd, and stubborn fights frequently occur between horses owing to this. The beaten males, after being expelled, join herds exclusively of stallions. On any herds being sighted by hunters a good idea can generally be formed by the experienced man as to which route the animals will take in their way to the rugged hills, for which they invariably make when disturbed. A scheme is mapped out to cut them off if possible, and the party scatters, each to take up his allotted position. Of course while doing this every advantage is taken of the natural inequalities of the ground, so as to escape observation. When the alarm is given, however, all need for caution is at an end, and each hunter puts his steed to full gallop. The stallion, the head of the herd, boldly comes out to meet him, and endeavors to distract attention from the rest.

In some rare instances he is lassoed and captured at once, but he generally manages to rejoin his wives, which by this time have trooped into single file, with his favorite mare in the lead. Should the herd be turned and get into difficulties the stallion takes up his position in the van, and the great object is to cut him off from the rest. Should this be accomplished both he and the mares become confused, and the lassoers often manage to make two or three per man. Instances have been known where horses have been thrown to the ground by the hunnter's giving a violent jerk to the animal's tail when it was making an abrupt turn. When this quarry is brought down, either by this method or the use of the lasso, the rider jumps from his steed, whips a "blinder" (a handkerchief is used when there is nothing else procurable) over the prostrate horse's eyes and straps up one of his fore legs securely. If this is properly done, the animal may safely be left "until called for," for no horse thus secured can stray far.

Should a man be so unlucky as to capture a branded horse or a foal running with a branded mare, he cannot keep it, but all others become the property of the hunter, and after they undergo a rough and ready process of breaking in, they are sold at prices ranging from £1 5s. to £15. The later figure, however, is seldom reached, unless in the case of exceptionally fine stallions. Great numbers of these horses die from starvation in the winter time, but still the herds show no signs of diminution. —Chambers' Journal.

Therapia, the Newport of the East.

This Newport of the east was found some centuries ago by the Greeks because of its invigorating climate—Therapia signifying health—and today is still the refuge in the summer heats not only of many of the pashas and other high Turkish dignitaries whose palaces line the water front or crown the hills near by, but of scores of European wayfarers and strangers who want more air and less dog than can be found in Pera.

Here, too, are the houses of the several foreign embassies, English, German, French and the others, their yachts and dispatch boats lying at anchor almost in front of their gardens, the brasses glistening in the sun.

And the charm of it all! The boats' crews of Jack Tars in their white suits rowing back and forth, answering calls from the shore. The blue water—as blue as indigo—dotted with caiques skimming about; the dogcarts and landaus crowding the shore road, with footmen in gorgeous Albanian costumes of white and gold, and with sash and scimiter—all make a scene of surprising brilliancy and beauty, unequaled by any other similar spot in Europe. Diplomacy is never so picturesque as at Therapia.—F. Hopkinson Smith in Century.

Carried His Point.

At the Union depot in Paducah the other day a man walked into the baggage room carrying a huge three gallon bucket, loaded to the brim and securely fastened at the top.

"I want to get this checked to Cincinnati," he said to the baggage master.

"We can't check anything like that," he was informed.

He looked perplexed for a moment, and then walked rapidly out with the bucket. In a few moments he returned with a large yellow valise that bulged out suspiciously at the sides, showed his ticket, and asked to have the valise checked. The baggage master eyed it suspiciously, but had to check it. The fellow had put the bucket in the valise and thus carried his point.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Pitt's Sarcasm.

In 1805 Pitt called a meeting of the British militia colonels to consider his additional force bill. Some objected to the clause which called them out under all circumstances and argued that this should not be "except in case of actual invasion." "Then," said Pitt, "it would be too late." Presently they came to another clause, when the same objectors insisted on the militia not being liable to be sent out of the kingdom. "Except, I suppose," said Pitt, with cruel sarcasm, "in case of actual invasion."

A French Art Departure.

The first note of sincere dissent was struck by Gericault when he sent his "Raft of the Medusa" to the Salon of 1819. Gros, indeed, had in some of his Napoleonic pictures shown an inclination to express natural passion, but had not pursued it far, so this picture of Gericault's really marks a turning point in French art. The intense feeling embodied in it forms a wonderful foil to the impassiveness of David's "Sabine Women," which hangs in the same room in the Louvre. There also reappears in it the emotional element of chiaroscuro, which had been almost banished by the classic school, and the color strikes a chord in complete sympathy with the tragedy of the situation. The whole incident is well conceived; the elements of nature, the wild heaving of the sea, the lowering sky, with its bright rifts, are attuned to the mingled despair and hope of the forlorn creatures on the raft.

A few years later Delacroix exhibited his first picture, and the battle between romanticism and those in authority began in grim earnest. One can easily imagine the consternation, the angry wrangling, the wordy war, which the appearance of this picture stirred. The passion of the color and the drama of the light and shade, the vigorous and suggestive drawing and the full yet fluent impasto were new and startling to painters trained in a school where a convention of form and a certain restricted range of emotion and subject were enforced. The classic movement inaugurated by David and continued by Ingres purged French art of the vapid trivialities in which it had sunk and set up higher ideal, but it was at the expense of liberty, in whose sacred name it claimed the right to reign. It was against the cold formalism of this school that the men of 1830 had to contend.—Blackwood's Magazine.

"After You, Gentlemen."

The French at Fontenoy, sheltered by the ridge, could scarcely believe their eyes at the sight of the English gunners slewing round their pieces to cover them. When they at length realized that it was one of the enemy's and not one of their own batteries, the officers of the Gardes Francais rushed to the head of their men, shouting to them to deploy and charge the cannon. Almost at the same moment the grenadiers cleared the hilltop, and began to descend upon him. It was then that there occurred that wonderful meeting which has charmed so many generations of readers.

Every one knows the description of the scene for which Voltaire was indebted to D'Argenson. How the French officers, in their blue and silver coats and their long scarlet vests and stockings, waited the approach of the grenadiers, hat in hand. How the redcoats doffed their marvelous shield fronted caps, while Lord Charles Hay bowed to the opposing line, with the words, "Gentlemen of the French guard, please to fire first!" to which the Comte d'Anterocke replied: "Gentlemen, we never fire first. Fire yourselves!" Such was a battle of the grand age as pictured by the aristocrat who saw the universe reflected in the mirrors of the Œil de Bœuf, but in the Lothian papers there is a yellow letter, written by Hay, in hospital after action, which gives a reader, and, it is to be feared, more natural version of the story.—Temple Bar.

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

With the New Woman on the Platform It Will Be Time to Look Out.

"Dey tells me," said Aunt Dinah pausing in the dining room door and resting her hands on her hips, "dey tells me dat de wimmin is ad a meetin goin on whar dey jiss spechifys same as de men. Is dat so?"

Her mistress laid down the paper in which she was reading the reports of some of the brilliant papers delivered before the Association For the Advancement of Women, and tried to explain matters to her.

"Dey des got up on de platform, did dey?" asked the old woman, "an speak right out in meetin?"

She was assured they did.

"An dey kin talk back?"

She was informed that was their privilege.

"Bless Gord I done live to see dis day!" she replied fervently. "I lay I'll des git Brer Jones at de meetin dis very night. De odder night I felt called on to 'zort sinners, an he say: 'Set down, Sis Dinah, de wimmin must keep silence in de chu'ch. Dey's de weaker vessel.' I was hot, an I 'spon': 'Ef dey wa'nt no wimmin in de chu'ches, Brer Jones, whar would de chuc'h be? Who pays de preacher? Whar you get dat fine coat on yo' back? Ain't it do Daughters of Zion done raise de money? Don't seem lak I hear nobody complainin 'bout wimmin in de chuc'h when it comes to passin roun de hat.'

"You say de time comin when de wimmin gwine run de town? Dey'll clean up things then, sho'. I boun de mayor himself can't sweep like me, let 'lone depupity pleec'men. Des give me a broom an I kin clean mo' street in a hour dan de committee does in a year.

"An wimmin gwine to vote too? Good marster, how the worl do change! Fus' de niggers an den de wimmin. Rec'on folks think some dem wimmin what's been goin to school an colleges is got most much sense as niggers now.

"What's dat you say? Wimmin gwine purify politics an ain't gwine sell their votes? Sho'! What's de good of votin if dey ain't no two-bitsin it? Dis ole nigger's been plannin to lay off work an vote fer all it's worth."—New Orleans Picayune.

A Household Hint.

Winks—I've got a new way of sifting coal at my house.

Binks (with languid interest)—Have you?

Winks—Yes. I used to have the man pick out the good pieces of coal from the sifter and throw the rest away. Now I have him pick out the cinders and burn the rest.

Binks—Well, what difference does that make?

Winks (proudly)—Oh, about two tons a year.—Somerville Journal.

What He Wanted.

In the midst of a stormy discussion a gentleman rose to settle the matter in dispute. Waving his hand majestically he began, "Gentlemen, all I want is common sense."

"Exactly," interrupted another. "That is precisely what you do want."—London Tit-Bits.

Application for Patent.

M A No. 308.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CALIFORNIA, October 19, 1896.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT P. REDDY, whose Post Office address is Crocker Building, Room 116, San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for 1500 linear feet of the Driver vein, lode or deposit, bearing gold and silver and other valuable metals, together with the surface ground 600 feet in width, situated in Coso mining district, County of Inyo, State of California, and being designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot 44, T 19 S, R 40 E, M. D. M.; said Lot No. 44 being described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at old notice monument which is a large mound of limestone and marble rocks on top of spur bears N 6 deg E; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E along line of lode descending N 17 deg 45 min W 2.00 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 50 ft in length. General course westerly 2.50 chs; mouth of tunnel 25 lks to left, 50 ft in depth; General course westerly; Mouth of tunnel 25 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course westerly 2.75 chs cross gulch 10 lks wide; course N 75 deg E; Ascending 4.89 chs 322.7 ft intersect south end line of Defiance Mine. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D N L W at point of location as identified by claimant. Returning to notice monument previously described, thence S 17 deg 45 min E along line of lode, descending over broken spurs falling Easterly 11.36 chs 749.7 ft to original location monument. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound marked D No 1 L S E; whence corner to section 13, 24, 25 and 24, T. 19 S, R 40 E, M. D. M. bears S 10 deg E 5.00 chs distant.

EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES.

Beginning at previously described corner at south end of lode; thence, the magnetic variation being 15 deg 27 min E, descending South 72 deg 30 min W 10 chs cross ravine 5 lks wide; course S 40 deg E; ascend 3.45 chs, top of spur bears S 13 deg 45 min E; descend 4.51 chs 300 ft to original location corner. Set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, with rock mound, marked D No 2; thence deflecting 90 deg 15 min to right, N 17 deg 15 min W ascending gradually along west slope of ridge 7.00 chs, cross ridge bears N 55 deg W and S 55 deg E, and descending E slope of ridge 9.00 chs, incline shaft 75 lks to right, 25 ft in length; General course northerly 13.00 chs to top of ridge and descend along top of ridge 16.25 chs 1072.5 ft to original location corner which is a rock mound the same being the S W corner of the Defiance Mine and the S E corner of the Bernon Mine. The post having been destroyed I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, with no the same mound, marked D on N E face, B on N W face and D No 3 on S E face. Thence deflecting 89 deg 45 min to right N 72 deg 30 min E, descending 3.34 chs prospect hole 20 lks to left, 4.30 chs 284 ft to post at North end of Driver Lode, previously described; 5.34 chs incline shaft 50 lks to left, 6.34 chs cross road N 20 deg W and S 20 deg E, 7.50 chs; cross road N 20 deg W, and S 20 deg E 8.70 chs 574.2 ft to original location corner being the S E corner of the Defiance mine, which is a rock mound, post having been destroyed. I set post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in ground, within same rock monument, marked D on the N W face and D No 4 on the S W face; I was unable to find monument at South end of Defiance Lode. Thence deflecting 68 deg 45 min to right, S 18 deg 45 min E 2.00 chs cross gulch 10 links wide, course East 4.00 chs, cross road bears N 30 W and S 30 deg E, 6.00 chs, tunnel 100 lks to right 6.00 chs, top of spur bears East 8.00 chs, cross road bears N 10 deg W and S 10 deg E 9.50 chs, cross gulch 10 lks wide, C N 70 deg E 11.50 chs, cross road bears N 60 deg W and S 60 deg E 12.00 chs, cross road bears N 65 deg W and S 60 deg E 14.50 chs, top of ridge bears S 30 deg E and N 30 deg W, 16.30 chs 1076 ft, cross road bears N 72½ deg E and S 72½ deg W 15.40 chs 1016 ft, the point of location as identified by claimant falling at edge of road. Last witness post 4 in square 4½ ft long, 12 in. in the ground, with rock mound, marked D No 5 W P S 18 deg 45 min E 10 lks distant. Thence from point for true corner at edge of road deflecting 91 deg 15 min to right, S 72 deg 30 min W 50 chs left road which bears S 30 deg W 3.50 chs, top of spur bears S 20 deg E 4.54 chs 300 ft to point of beginning. Containing an area of 14.44 acres.

The location notic of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's Office of Coso mining district at page 105, of Book D, of said records. Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Driver Mine or the surface ground thereof, are requested to file their claims in the United States Land Office, in the Town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, State of California, during sixty days of the publication hereof or they will be barred, in virtue of the provisions of said Statute.

Letter Lists.

Letters remaining uncalled for at the Independence Post Office this date:

Briggs, W. C. — Duke, Matthew
Carroll, T. W. — Reid, Lewis C.

GEO. S. WOOD, Postmaster.

A Merry Christmas to all.

Ed. Ober came down from Big Pine Wednesday.

Dave Pitman came down from Big Pine on Tuesday last.

A. E. Gish of Bishop was a visitor at Independence early in the week.

Mark Hand, of Lone Pine, has been in Independence for a couple of days during the week.

George Naylor and Dave Johnson came in from the Reward mine to spend Christmas.

J. Y. Ashmore came down from Big Pine Tuesday with a load of lumber for James Moffett.

Thos. Webb arrived home on Monday last after a visit of a couple of weeks at the Bay city.

Mrs. McKnight came down from Bishop Wednesday and is visiting the family of Finley McIver

J. A. McKenzie, T. C. Boland and W. S. Miller came up from Keeler last Saturday, returning Sunday.

Miss Hattie Berger of Bishop came down on Wednesday's train and is visiting Mrs. Irv. Mulholland.

Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle of Keeler spent several days visiting Miss Lena Thompson of Camp Independence.

Mrs. M. E. T. Stevens, our school teacher, left for Bishop Thursday morning on a visit to relatives and friends.

Sharkey, the prize-fihter, has got away with the $10,000 purse that he and his henchmen buncoed Fitzsimmons out of.

Home is dearer to a woman than a man because to her it is a place where she can sit around without her corsets on.

Miss Grace Collins, of Black Canyon, is visiting Miss Mary Mulholland of this place. She will remain until after the holidays.

A colored woman in Chicago has challenged Sharkey to fight four rounds. She is the wife of a colored Salvation Army preacher.

Chas. Winter, James Ramboand Chas. McCalmont, of Bishop, were visitors at Independence during the week on business at the Land Office.

A. Church and wife of Hawthorns will spend Christmas and New Year with Mrs. Church's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Blair, of this place.

Hon. T. B. Rickey, who has been here for the past week looking after his cattle interests in this section, returned to his home in Carson yesterday morning.

Geo. Gilliam came down from Fish Springs Wednesday, returning Thursday morning. He says the late cold snap has closed down the cvanide plant for the time being.

Miss Clara Reynolds, who is teaching the young idea at Fish Springs, returned to her home at Georges Creek Wednesday evening to spend the holidays with her parents.

James Rose was taken suddenly ill at his mine at Fish Springs last Tuesday night. Wednesday he was brought to his home in Independence where he is now confinep.

In Paraguay when a gentleman is introduced to a lady he kisses her. The immigration laws of Paraguay are sufficiently lax, but the fare to that country is almost prohibitive.

H. B. Saylor, who has been clerking in the store of Nathan Rhine for the past year, left on Monday last for Orange county, where he will spend the holidays with relatives and friends.

The young ladies are sparing no pains to make the Leap Year dance next Thursday evening the social event of the season. All gentlemen are cordially invited to be present, so that they may be able to see how a dance can be conducted and meet with the approval of all. There will be no wall-flowers: the smiles of the management will be impartially distributed, and, last but not least, there will be a chance for us old fellows to go to a dance without having to go down in our jeans to pay the fiddler.

The Christmas Tree.

By seven o'clock last evening the church was filled to running over with spectators, old and young, congregated to witness the gathering of the Christmas tree fruit. Both the tree and the ladder were works of art and the latter, being something new here, attracted much attention. It was covered with snow and bespangled with frost and every rung was hung full of dolls and trinkets to delight the soul of a child. At seven o'clock Santa Claus arrived scattering peanuts among the crowd, shaking hands with the little ones and making himself generally at home. His, or rather her rendition of Kris Kringle was a most happy one. Over an hour was consumed distributing gifts, and one's only regret was that a kodak was not at hand to catch the various expressions in the youngsters faces as each received a present. The school children are to be congratulated on the success of the evening and a vote of thanks is due Mrs. Jas. K. Moffett and Mrs. Bert Rhine for their help in the affair.

Fatal Accident.

Last Tuesday at the George Clarke place near Bishop, Ben. Webster was accidentally but fatally shot by his brother-in-law, James Summers. It seems that Summers was shooting with a rifle at a bull that he was trying to kill, Webster was standing quite a distance away but quartering to the animal. Summers fired at the animal's head, the ball glanced from the hard skull struck the ground ricochetted, and striking Mr. Webster passed completely through his body lodging under the skin at his back. A messenger was at once sent to Bishop for a doctor, who was soon on the scene and who pronounced it a dangerous but not necessarily a fatal wound. The wounded man lingered for twenty-four hours before death came to his relief. He leaves a wife and child besides numerous relatives and a host of friends to mourn his untimely end. He was a native of Idaho and aged 27 years.

From Randsburg.

Si Drouillard, the original locator of the St. Elmo mine, and Mr. Blair arrived from the Randsburg district Wednesday. The gentlemen informed us that Randsburg was destined to become the largest and most prosperous mining camp in the west, and that buildings are going up there at the rate of five a day, and people flocking there by thousands. Mr. Drouillard says they have a dry-washer at the St. Elmo property capable of handling 300 tons of earth a day. It is run by steam power and will be started up as soon as the ground is dry enough to work. In plowing the surface ground on the St. Elmo property, preparatory to putting scrapers to work to furnish dirt for the washer, over $3,000 worth of ore was plowed out. The whole country is fabulously rich and the only drawback is the scarcity of water.

More Bullion

Bar of bullion No. 24 from the Reward mine, valued at $1,300, was shipped from here last Saturday morning. This bar is the result of a twelve days run of the mill, excluding the value of the sulphurets which have to be shipped to San Francisco for treatment, and goes to prove that when our mines are worked in a systematic manner and by men who understand their business they prove to be valuable properties. This mine, under the able supervision of Supt. Hoskins, is producing more bullion than any other mine in the county, and when the ten stamps more are in position will more than double the present output with very little additional expense to the company. All who work at the mine speak in the highest terms of the treatment received and the management of the works.

School Apportionment.

Cost of Elections.

An Iowa paper says it costs 20 cents for every man to vote in that country and Auditor Jefferds of Tulare county has figured out that it cost $1 to every vote cast at the late election in that county. Auditor Peacock's figures show that the election in Kings county cost $1111.50, including the great register, and as there were 1619 votes cast it makes about 68 cents for each vote. In San Francisco it cost $3 a vote.—Hanford Sentinel.

In this county the cost for each vote cast was a trifle less than $2.

W. M. Richards, formerly railroad at Keeler, and who resigned some time ago, leaves for Chicago in a few days. He has accepted a position as traveling representative for a wholesale cigar and tobacco firm in the East.—Nevada Transcript.

J. W. Robinson and M. Nash arrived from Carson Wednesday. Mr. Robinson is inspecting his property at the 8-mile place, and will make final proof on his timber culture before returning to Carson.

George Thorpe, Sam. Gruber and L. Wilder are down from Mazonrka canyon. The report some of the placer ground in that locality as yielding $1.50 per square foot.

PLENTY OF WATER FOR RANDSBURG.

Pipe Line to be Built From Owens Lake to the New Mining Camp.

San Francisco Capitalists Are Interested in the New Enterprise.

When It Is Completed the Rapid Development of the Mines Is Assured.

The Randsburg region has already given abundant evidence of being one of the most promising mining districts known in the world. Were it situated anywhere else than in a waterless desert the district would have by this time a population of from 30,000 to 50,000, but as it is there are not over 1200 people in the town and immediate vicinity.

The great drawback to the development of the mines and consequent growth of the town is lack of water. Every effort has been made to find a supply in the neighborhood, but so far in vain; every drop used has to be brought from the cow wells at Garlock, near the base of Black Mountain, some twelve miles to the west on the road to Mojave, and as may be readily imagined it is both poor and dear, costing for drinking purposes some $2 50 per barrel, and for other purposes from $1 20 to $2. The wells at Garlock do not have an over-abundant supply, and any unusual demand perceptibly diminishes it and up goes the price. The men engaged in supplying the Randsburg camps with water are making more money at the business than those who are taking out gold.

The permanent character of the mines so far developed and the absolute need of a sufficient supply of water and the certain return on money invested in an enterprise looking to filling this need, has attracted the attention of capitalists both in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and there is but little question that before many months roll by Randsburg will have as much water as it can consume with ten times its present population and some to spare for other places near by.

Two San Francisco men of abundant means and large experience in mining development left the City on Saturday last for Randsburg, where they will meet others from Los Angeles, and with expert engineers the party will go over the ground between that town and Owens Lake, some sixty miles to the northwest in Inyo County, with a view of laying a pipe line to supply Randsburg with water from the lake. The lower part of the lake, as is well known, is rather too alkaline for ordinary use, but at the upper and near the mouth of Owens River the water is sweet, fresh and cool as spring water. This is the nearest point from which it is practicable to get water for the Randsburg district. The head waters of Kern River are but little more than half the distance to Owens Lake, but the intervening mountains present difficulties which are insurmountable except at enormous expense, for relay pumping stations. The size of the pipe line will be the only limit to the supply, and there are no great engineering difficulties to be overcome in securing it. The necessary preliminary inspection has already been made of the several routes to the lake, and the most practicable about determined upon, subject to the approval of the parties interested financially in the promotion of the enterprise.

From the head of the lake, where the intake will be placed, to Randsburg, the more feasible route is something less than eighty miles or little more than the distance in a straight line. The route will skirt the eastern side of the lake till just north of Olancha, whence it will strike off in a southeasterly direction and continue until it crosses the road from Mojave to Panamint, just northeast of the boundary line between Kern and San Bernardino counties, whence it will turn to the south and run in nearly a straight line to Randsburg. The only part of the line where any serious difficulty will be experienced will be that over the gap between the Argosy and Coso mountains, though the rise from Olancha to this point is not unusually great. Once over the gap the rest of the way will be down hill, as it were. No ditching will have to be done to speak of, as it will not be necessary to bury the pipe except at wagon crossings, though considerable trestling will be necessary at certain places along the route.

Once a line of the proper size is laid the question of its paying well is settled. The charge for water can be made at just what figure under the present prices the owners choose to fix. The consumption too, will not be confined to Randsburg, the line will be tapped at various points along the route for Goler Gulch and other camps and towns that are sure to spring up as the country north of Randsburg is prospected and developed.—S. F. Call.

Here is a way to tell what time it is when you wake at night, without arising to strike a match and consult a watch: Wind your watch tight when you retire and during the night if you wish to know the time wind it again, counting the number of times the stem-winder clicks; multiply this number by ten and you will have the time in minutes. For instance, you wind your watch and go to bed at 11 o'clock. Before morning you awaken, and, winding your watch, you find that the stem-winder clicks thirty times. You know that is 300 minutes past 11 o'clock. In other words it is just 4 o'clock. After experimenting a few times you can tell within a few seconds of the schedule time.

Rev. Dr. C. C. McLean has been preaching at the Simpson Tabernacle at Los Angeles, "to men only," on what he has seen in houses of prostitution in that city. He went, it seems, into colored dens and Chinese brothels, and paid the miserable denizens to perpetrate acts at which beasts would blush, but which this minister of the Gospel not only voluntarily sought out and paid the wretched females to do, but which he described. This man is a member of what is known as the Parkhurst League of Los Angeles, and says he proposes to reform that city. Los Angeles is undoubtedly in need of moral and sanitary disinfection, and we suggest to the Trustees and Board of Health thereof that it inaugurate the needed work by treating this unspeakable pulpit pornographist to a bath in chloride of lime.—*Sac. ## Some Interesting News for the Ruralist

SPOKEN OF IN THIS COLUMN.

A Few Sensible Hints to Suit the Busy Agriculturist.—Items That May Benefit our Readers.

Trouble Over Our Prunes.

The California Fruit Grower, is in receipt of information from its correspondent in France, to the effect that the French Government has stepped in, and the French Minister of Commerce has been asked to take the necessary steps to prevent the sale of California prunes in France as a French product. A syndicate of French prune producers has been organized for the purpose of protecting the French product, against such substitution. We are inclined to think, continues the Fruit Grower, that a great deal too much powder has been already wasted over this controversy. Whatever further in the way of suggestions or advice, Consul Germain contemplated offering, we will now probably, in view of the action of the French Government, never know. We do not believe in compromising with fraud, nor do we believe that any great amount of success will accrue to anyone through its practice. Neither do we believe in going abroad with a search light, on the constant outlook for evidences of man's crookedness. We can certainly wait to cross this bridge, until we come to it. There are many of these evils which right themselves, if given a chance, as we opine, this one would have done, had not Consul Germain, discovered and gibbeted it too quickly. If California prunes come out of the controversy, one-half as well advertised through it as has Consul Germain, no great harm will have been done anyone, though, no doubt Johnny Crapeaud will have fed his original prejudice against the California prune, into a condition of remarkable fatness.

The Walnut Growers.

A dispatch from Santa Barbara reports the sale of Chicago buyers of all the walnuts controlled by the county Walnut Growers' Association. Says the dispatch:

Thomas Hodge, representing Hills Bros., of San Francisco, has been here during the past week on his annual trip for the purpose of purchasing a supply of English walnuts for their coast customers. He has made regular trips here of this kind for the last six years, and last year, when he came and found prices ranging in the neighborhood of 7 cents, he immediately raised to 8 cents and secured what he wanted without delay. Upon his arrival here this season he found the local Walnut Growres' Association in possession of nearly one-half the entire crop of the county and holding out for stiff prices. The bulk of the remainder is in Colonel Heath's hands, and he always markets in the East. Mr. Hodge has labored with the association during the week, trying to convince them that the demand is limited and that they must lower their figures. He secured a number of small lots from outsiders, amounting in all to about seven carloads, and wants as many more. He, informed a correspondent tonight that the association effected a sale this afternoon of the entire crop on their hands to a Chicago firm, the exact price not being stated, but it his thought to be 6 cents for hardshells and 7½ cents for softshells f. o. b. at Santa Barbara.

New Packing House.

A syndicate has had a representative attend a meeting of Cucamonga Fruit Growers, according to the Ontario Record, for the purpose of laying before them a proposition. The syndicate proposes to furnish the land, and desires the Cucamonga people to join with them in building a packing-house. The syndicate has already shown its intent, by purchasing $15,000 worth of property, well located for the purpose, being near the Santa Fe Railroad; and their representative said they were prepared to purchase much more. The syndicate proposes, after the erection of the building, to hire it, paying 15 per cent on the investment, and if desired, pack the fruit for the Cucamonga people, in the same manner as does the Heights Fruit Company for the Redlands Fruit Growers' Association. The proposition has been favorably received, and subscriptions are being raised to provide for the erection of the building. The syndicate has announced its intention of laying out an additional sum of $30,000 in property and improvements.

Cloverdale's Fair.

Cloverdale will hold her fifth annual citrus fair about the middle of February next. In order to be prepared for this and similar occasions, Cloverdale proposes to commence operations at once for the erection of a commodious pavilion, to be used expressly for the holding of citrus fairs. This is rendered necessary, as they have held these fairs previously all about the town, until they have outgrown all the buildings of the town. About a year ago the Cloverdale Citrus Fair Association was organized and incorporated, and a building site of nearly an acre of land in the heart of the town was purchased, upon which the company now propose to erect a fine building. The surrounding grounds will be beautified with palm, orange and other semi-tropical trees and shrubbery. The building will be 56 by 120 feet, to cost about $3000.

Medical Value of Raisins.

Almost anyone retaining any recollections of their childhood days, says the Cal. Fruit Grower, will remember how positive the maternal decree of prohibition covered dried fruits, such as raisins, currants, etc., on the ground that they were not good for children, being too rich, and consequently indigestible and unhealthy. It is now stated by medical men of good standing and large experience that these dried fruits are most valuable as a harmless stimulant, and as such are recommended, even for grown people. It is declared on good medical authority that a bunch or two of raisins are of far more value, taken when fatigued, than the proverbial glass of wine or drink of spirits usually recommended at such times. Figs are also recommended as a wholesome article of diet, and as a most excellent aperient. Why could not physicians have discovered this fact during our youth? It makes us feel, upon looking back, that we have irretrievably lost much of the sweetness of this life.

Our Beet Sugar Factories.

There are located in this State three large, successful beet sugar plants, one at Alvarado, one at Watsonville and one at Chino, says the California Fruit Grower. The growing of beets for sugar has become a very large, permanent industry in California. Thousands of acres of land are devoted to this purpose, and thousands of people reap a benefit from the best harvest. Further large factories are talked of, and one is projected by Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, near Salinas City in the great Salinas valley, Monterey county. When completed this is to be the largest beet sugar factory in the world. The present factories have a very large combined capacity. The following table shows the ouptut for 1895:

| Factory. | Tons Beets. | Lbs Sugar. |
|---|---|---|
| Alvarado | 27,385 | 5,400,000 |

The world's production of beet and cane sugar for 1895-6 is estimated at 7,000,000 tons. Of this amount the beet sugar producing countries, not including the United States, furnished 4,236,000 tons. The world's sugar crop for 1894-5 is estimated at 8,314,000 tons, thus showing a decrease in the world's production last year of 1,314,000 tons of sugar of all kinds.

Hints About the Horse.

In cleaning them, if they will not stand the curry-comb well, get a five or ten-cent brush made of broom corn, used for scrubbing in the house; they are very stiff, writes J. W. Palmer. If horses are troubled with the scratches, mix two parts lard and one part gunpowder thoroughly, and apply on the place affected; it is cheap and effective. So manage your stable as to save all of the urine, as it is very valuable; have cement floors if possible. Do not hang the harness in stable if you can avoid it. Do not feed too much hay, and avoid watering immediately after feeding a horse much of a dinner. If you have whole rye, you can feed a little, and save expense and trouble of grinding it, to young horses only. Use good snaps on lines and side straps at least, and by so doing save time, which is money on a farm. Farmers need to be cautioned about watering horses when heated.

High Prices for Apples.

The indications are that good winter apples will reach a high figure before the season is over, says the Los Angeles Times: Los Angeles buyers have already secured practically the entire crop of Lompoc Valley and are now in the Santa Maria Valley on the same mission. The price paid is not generally known, but is understood to be from $20 to $25 per ton in the orchards, the buyer furnishing the boxes and doing his own picking. These same apples will bring from 3 to 5 cents per pound before spring. Santa Barbara depends on the local supply for fall apples, but consumes large quantities of winter apples from beyond the mountains. There are no worms in the apples from the northern part of the county. They are perfect in size, shape and color, highly flavored and the best of keepers. This year, when Santa Barbara sends for her usual winter supply she will find them scarce and will have to bid up to get them at all.

Fruit Growers' Association.

The concentration plan of selling California fruit in New York this year has evidently not been as successful as anticipated by receivers (says the New York Fruit Trade Journal). The way it has worked has not been profitable to the receiver selling his fruit last on the catalogue. The one who was first or second would usually try to get all the cars he could to sell that day, and the party who unfortunately was last would have about a corporal's guard for an audience. It looks as if Major Weinstock will have to get up a new scheme for next season and the California Growers' and Shippers' Association will find in this item an important subject for discussion at its next meeting.

New Commission House.

A firm has been located in Suisun for the purpose of shipping dried fruits to Germany, says the Vallejo News. The large warehouse at the depot has been rented as a storeroom and a large number of persons have been given employment. Over 10,000 twenty-five pound boxes have already been shipped and the firm has purchased many tons of dried fruit for future shipment. This industry will enable orchardists to sell their products at home in preference to shipping on a commission, and at the same time afford a new source of employment.

Riverside's New Trees.

The new acreage set to trees in Riverside county this year is small as compared with last year, as the uncertainty in water matters has prevented any extensive improvement in the irrigation districts. The following figures, giving the planting in acres, have been compiled with care by the Riverside Press, and are believed to be accurate:

| | Citrus. | Deciduous. |
|---|---|---|
| Riverside | 125 | 10 |
| West Riverside | 60 | 50 |
| Corona | 375 | 45 |
| Moreno | 60 | 100 |
| Hemet Winchester and Perris | | 120 |
| Other localities | | 50 |
| Totals | 580 | 385 |

Nearly 1000 acres of new orchards is certainly a very good showing under the circumstances.

Australian Salt Bush.

The Delano Courier states that P. J. Garwood, residing near Delano, has experimented extensively the past two years with the Australian salt bush and has proven to his entire satisfaction that the plant will not only grow on the dry plains without irrigation, but in alkili soil as well. He says stock takes to the new plant like a duck to water and the yield per acre is something immense. He is confident that it is a good plant for the interior and that when its merits are better known that it will be planted extensively.

SHEEP SHEARING.

Expertness of Professional Shearers in New South Wales.

Most of our readers would probably think that to shear, say, twenty or thirty sheep, would be as much as the most skillful and industrious shearer could do in a long day's work. They may, then, says Chambers' Journal, be interested to know what vastly greater numbers are expected to pass through the deft hands of a capable craftsman in the pastoral regions of the great sheep-keeping colony of New South Wales. Our notes have been collected on the spot.

The number of sheep a man can shear in a day of eight and a half hours is governed by several circumstances over and above the shearer's expertness, depending mainly on the class of sheep and the nature of the country over which the sheep have pastured.

Of all the breeds of sheep merimos are the most difficult to shear. In the first place, they are very "throaty"—that is, the skin covering the neck lies in large, loose folds, so that manipulation with the shears is at best tedious and troublesome. Then, again, they possess what is technically known as the "points" of the breed—they are wooled to the tip of the nose and down the legs to the hoofs; it is these so-called "points" that take up time.

Sheep grazing over pastures where burs, grass seeds, twigs, etc., are numerous, or over coarse, sandy country, pick up in their fleece quantities of foreign matter that blunt the shears during the process of shearing. It will at once be seen that this especially applies to short-legged sheep, heavily fleeced as the merinos are to the extremities of their limbs. The time taken up sharpening his shears is a serious consideration to the shearer.

Bad or careless shearers, in order to give the sheep the appearance of being properly shorn, may either "shingle" or "feather" the fleeces they cut off. By "shingling" is meant making a second cut over the same part of the body of the sheep, the first severing the staple toward the center, and the second close to the skin; yet the whole fleece holds together and the damage may not be detected till closely examined. On the contrary, "feathering" is plainly seen as soon as the fleece is shaken out; here the clip has been uneven, leaving patches of longer wool to be severed by a second cut. This leaves a quantity of short wool in the inside the fleece, which readily separates when the fleece is unrolled. "Shingling" is the worst fault, as it quite ruins the staple for combing purposes.

In the mountain districts west of the table-land the average number of sheep a fairly good man will shear in a day of eight and a half hours varies from seventy to 120. On the northern plains near the Queensland border the average is 120 to 170; and it is on record that the champion shearer of Queensland clipped 327 sheep in nine hours. Such a man, in the language of "the seed," is termed a "ringer."

In the central plains on the Lachlan River the average is eighty to 120. With machines the numbers are, of course, considerably more. The men are paid £1 per 100 sheep; and out of this they have to provide rations, shears, sharpening-stones, oil, etc.

Was Man an Amphibian?

Man was said to have descended from a good many types, by different inquiries into ancient history, some going for monkeys or apes, and others for various species of animal life; but some curious cases of hereditary webbed hands and feet in human beings seem to show that our ancestors may have been amphibian.

An instance of this kind of hereditary peculiarity has been reported by Doctors W. R. Smith and J. S. Norwell, in the case of a family, nearly all the members of which were affected by a malformation of hands and feet.

In the subjects examined by those gentlemen, the second and third fingers were webbed to the tip, and the bones were disposed in an extraordinary manner.

Each foot had six toes, all more or less webbed, except the fourth, which was comparatively free.

These peculiarities have persisted through several generations, and it was found that twenty-one persons out of twenty-eight had been malformed in this way, and in all cases in both hands and feet.

Fascination of Years.

Many a woman over twenty hesitates to meet the great and inquisitive Li Hung Chang. She doesn't care to acknowledge the burden of her years which, just possibly, the viceroy, being a student of history, lays to the credit of her fascinations. Helen of Troy was over forty when she was a party to the most famous elopement on record. Cleopatra was over thirty when Antony first loved her, and ten years later her fascinations were in the ascendant. At thirty-six Aspasia was wedded to Pericles, and thirty years afterward she wielded undisputed influence over men. Anne of Austria was quite thirty-eight when she was described as the handsomest queen in Europe; Louis XIV. wedded Mme de Maintenon when she was forty-three years of age; Mlle. Mars, the celebrated French tragedienne, only attained the zenith of her power and influence at forty-five, and Ninon de l'Enclos is proverbial for her wonderful attractions at seventy-three.

Machine for Weighing Thought.

A thought-weighing machine has been invented by Prof. Mosso, an Italian physiologist, the rush of the blood to the head turning the scale. The machine is so delicate that it can measure the difference in the exertion needed to read Greek from that required for Latin.

Vice Versa.

Diner—Waiter, there is a slight mistake. I ordered a spring chicken and a dottle of 1884 wine.

Waiter—Yes, sir.

Diner—You have brought me some wine of last spring and a chicken of 1884.—Paris Messenger.

Mistress of the Foundry.

By EARL JOSLYN.

Just as the shadows of night were lifting Mrs. Sterns saw three policemen closing in on the piazza. Luke was watching them. He gave a quick spring, met the one that was coming up the front steps and pushed him backward. The man fell heavily on the flagstones and lay there stunned. The others pursued Luke into the house. Running like a greyhound through the rooms, whose doors were all set wide open, he saw through the kitchen windows another policeman waiting for him at the rear door. The mastiff and Mrs. Sterns reached the kitchen by a short cut in advance of the two men. Luke stood at bay. The largest of the policemen took out a pistol. The huge animal sprang threateningly between the policeman and the fugitive. Mrs. Sterns stepped terrified before the mastiff. "Don't shoot my dog, sir," she entreated. "Don't shoot him."

"Call off your dog, then, lady," said the man roughly.

That was enough. The infuriated beast heard the man speaking to his mistress in unfriendly tones. Before she could even attempt to call him off he had jumped with a frightful growl at the man's throat. When she had succeeded in pacifying the dog, the man lay on the floor a sickening spectacle.

"The other cop ran out front," explained Luke as Mrs. Sterns looked around the room. "I must be off, missis. They will send 20 cops here to take me," and Luke leaped out of a window into the rear of the house. The wounded man writhed on the floor, while Candace crooned a weird judgment hymn whose burden was, "Gabriel sounds his mighty trumpet."

"Stop singing, Candace. It is not the judgment day."

"Laws, missis, I'ze dead sure I heard him blow," replied Candace in a tone hoarse with fear.

"No, no. Go to the sideboard and bring me some brandy for this poor man," said her mistress.

While she was engaged in caring for him six stalwart policemen came in at the back door. They tenderly took away their lacerated comrade, first searching the house for Luke. "He is the toughest customer in the state, ma'am," remarked the chief of police. "He has been in more jails than I have ever seen. He's hard to handle too. I have seen him knock out three police. Was in your employ, do I understand you to say? Well, foundrymen are a hard crowd. It has been a terrible night's work. The city is wild with fear."

About 8 o'clock in the evening, after the fires, Bridie Hamilton, stylishly if not tastefully dressed, was standing on a narrow platform in the rear of Riverbank's railway station. Suddenly a man emerged from under a freight car that was standing detached from the other cars.

"Oh, Luke," exclaimed Bridie. "I got word where ye were from Dick Flanaghan's brother that works here. Are ye goin away again? Don't go. Stay here." Tears rolled down her face, and Luke awkwardly tried to comfort her.

"I'll come back, Bridie, darlint, sure, soon as I darst to, and don't ye be crying. The cops will get me if I stay here. Say," he continued as her distress increased, "I'll send ye money to come to Fairlee, and we'll get married."

"Let me go with ye now, Luke," begged the girl piteously. "Father Gogarty will marry us tonight. We've been called, and my clothes are all ready."

"Mine ain't," said Luke ruefully. "I've got nothin on but me old jumper and me old pants, and it ain't safe for me to ride in a car with ye. No, darlint, ye must wait."

"Oh," moaned the girl, "I'm afraid I'll never see ye again, Luke, me lovely darlin. Do take me to Father Gogarty. I've got $50 in my pocket that I earned dressmakin. I'll go in the car, and ye can ride under it if yer afraid to sit with me. We can start at 11 tonight. Ye will have time to go and put on yer good clothes. The cops won't know ye if ye go in a hack. Do let me go with ye, Luke, there's a dear."

"I've got a nice coat and vest in the trunk in me room. If I had some dacint pants, I'd go now," said Luke, half yielding. "But, Bridget, me dear, I wanted to give ye a handsome sendoff. I wanted jest for once to ride in the parlor car by yer side. Ye have no idee how like a gintleman I look when I'm clane. I took a Turkish bath once when I went to the ball of the United Brotherhood, and I came out white. Old Mowry with his club foot niver looked half so fine as mesilf then, and ye've got a purty face, and we would be a stylish looking couple. Yer as handsome as a picter, and yer the object of me affections, Bridget, me girl."

"Call me Bridie, Luke, dear. Bridget is so common."

"It was me ould mother's name," said Luke apologetically.

"Send that little feller there for a hack, Luke," pleaded Bridie.

Finally after more entreaties Luke yielded, and the two went in a carriage through the dark streets to Father Gogarty's house. At half past 10 they reappeared in the station. Luke kept in the dark corners, and Bridie, carrying her satchel, entered the cars. At 11 the train pulled out, with Mrs. Bridie sitting in the parlor car and Luke hanging to its under side.

It was summer time again in Riverbank, and the windows and doors of Sterns' foundry were all wide open. Mrs. Sterns went in at the main entrance, nodded good morning to the men and went into the office, where sat her husband, a man royal in body and soul. Hearing the door open, he raised his head. "Ah, here comes the little mistress of the foundry," he said, smiling. "Take a seat. The money is ready for you to pay off the men. I suppose that you will never relinquish the pleasure of putting money into the men's hands. No wonder you are so popular with them."

When she came to Dick Flanaghan's bench and he had counted his pay, he nodded and said, "All right, missis." Then, taking his clay pipe from his mouth, he continued, "And have ye heard the news about Luke, ma'am?"

"No, indeed. What is it?" eagerly inquired Mrs. Sterns.

"Well, Luke went down to Pennsylvania to work in a coal mine. His name was Hugh Brierly down there. Luke he thought there was going to be a strike among the miners, and he niver could kape out of a strike nohow, missis. Luke was boss in the riots there last spring, and he carried on wild. He wouldn't let the trains move, and so the governor sent down the meleeshy to smash the miners. Luke and a gang of men behind him met the train that was fetchin the sojers and pitched rocks down the bank and ditched the train. Then them sojers just chased after the strikers and shot a lot of them. Luke got a ball through his heart."

"Poor Luke," said Mrs. Sterns, with unaffected sorrow. "Poor, misguided Luke!"

THE END.

New York Boys.

"Mister, won't yer give us er lift?"

The speaker was a boy of 10, with an expression of weariness on his face. The one spoken to was a youth of about 22, with a shade of a mustache. The object referred to was a bag about three feet high, which seemed to be filled with some heavy material.

"Certainly, my boy," replied the youth, "I'll help you on with it."

True to his word, he grabbed the bag around the center and proceeded to lift it on to the boy's shoulder. Suddenly unearthly yells and shrieks came from within, and the object, whatever it was, began to kick with such force that the youth dropped the bag and proceeded to hold his hands to his stomach as if in great pain.

The boy and several bystanders were shaking with laughter. A moment later the top of the bag opened, and a lad of 8 scampered away as fast as he could run.

"Fooled!" yelled all the boys at the youth as they scampered after the youngster.

That is what they call the "bag game." It is something new, and it originated on the east side, but who invented it no one knows. The idea simply is to get a ferocious youngster to enter the bag and then have some unsuspicious person lift it. The yells and shrieks and kicks will not fail to upset his mental and perhaps physical equilibrium, and the youngsters will have a great laugh as a result.—New York Herald.

An African Salt Works.

Karembwe's is one of the salt making villages; a sandy clay is dug out of the marshes and placed in grass funnels. Water poured on this dissolves the salt. The solution trickles through the green filter into a trough, after which it is boiled and strained, and a fine, large crystal salt is obtained. It is a great trade in this part of the world. All villages make salt, which is put up in loads about five inches in diameter by four feet long. All these people, the Waitawa, are very polite. Most of them hail you with, "Mornin;" they do not seem able to manage the "good."—"Glave In the Heart of Africa" in Century.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever: nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars; free.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.
